I cannot offer a firm conclusion on some of the issues this afternoon because they raise untested areas of the law. However, I underline my assurance that the concerns that the hon. Gentleman expressed are being urgently considered. I shall come to further developments on that.

Hon. Members may be aware that some wheel clamping is legitimate on public roads. That activity is regulated by section 104 of the Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984 and the release fee of £38 for that legitimate exercise is properly prescribed. Such clamping has made a significant contribution to solving the problem of parking in and around central London.

The hon. Member for Warley, West spoke about the Scottish judgment, which has raised the profile of the issue. The question of the legality of this activity was answered by the Scottish Court of justiciary in the negative. It found that private wheel clamping amounts to extortion and theft under Scottish law, and we are currently considering the implications of that judgment for England and Wales. The position is not straightforward. As in so many other areas, the laws of Scotland and those of England and Wales are not the same. That begs the question whether private wheel clamping in England would amount to theft.

Under Scottish law, it is not necessary for a charge of theft to prove an intention permanently to deprive an owner of his property. The essence of the offence appears to be appropriation, by which control and possession are taken from the owner. English law, on the other hand, provides in section 1 of the Theft Act 1968 that a person is guilty of theft if he dishonestly appropriates property belonging to another with the intention of permanently depriving the other of it.

It is clear, therefore, that the finding of the Court of Justiciary has no direct relevance to the position in England and Wales. It would be a matter for a court to determine in any particular case whether the fixing of a wheel clamp to an improperly parked vehicle amounted to dishonest appropriation, or whether it involved any intention permanently to deprive the owner of the vehicle. It would not be proper for me to offer a view on the likelihood of such a charge being sustained, although hon. Members may feel that it would be straining the meaning of the Act a little if it were.

Mr. Speller: Will the Minister ask the Department to consider whether the offence of blackmail under English law might have an impact on these cases?

Mr. Jack: I carefully noted what the hon. Gentleman said about that when he spoke about another aspect of this complex area of yet untested law. I shall evaluate what he has said, but I should now like to turn to other aspects of the law.

Theft is not the only offence that may be relevant. Other elements of the Theft Act 1968 offer a further perspective on this matter. Section 21 makes it an offence for a person, with a view to gain for himself or another, or with intent to cause loss to another, to make any unwarranted demand with menaces. Again, of course, it would be for a court to determine, but a court could find that an offence had been committed if, for example, a demand for payment was made against the threat that the vehicle would otherwise continue to be immobilised and, particularly, if the fee was deemed to be excessive. That applies even more so if no notice had been displayed warning drivers of the risk of clamping.

That brings me to the RAC advice on that matter. I am sure that the House will not need reminding that any assault against the person of the motorist or, indeed, the clamper would be an offence. The civil law may also be relevant. The act of fixing a clamp to a vehicle could amount to the civil tort of trespass to goods, which involves direct physical interference with goods without lawful justification. I understand that such a tort can be committed even without damage to the goods, although any damages recoverable would not normally be substantial unless there was physical damage.

Refusing to return a vehicle unless a fee is paid may also be actionable as an act of conversion under civil law. I am aware of at least one recent case involving that branch of the law in which a motorist was able to secure the immediate release of his vehicle. Clearly, some of the nuisance which hon. Members have described can arise if people employed by a wheel-clamping firm operate in an unpredictable or irresponsible manner. The hon. Member for Warley, West graphically described a number of such cases. If a court were to decide that a civil wrong or criminal offence had been committed, it would have to reach a decision on the facts of the case about where liability should rest.

It is clear that there is widespread and justifiable concern about the practice, but we should not overlook the real nuisance which can be caused by drivers who park their vehicles on private property without regard to any inconvenience they may cause to others. I appreciate that there is a legitimate need to prevent problems with access to land which may be needed, for example, to move vehicles on or off it. The examples cited by the hon. Member for Warley, West went further than that, and I shall consider what he said.

Owners of private property can, not unnaturally, become frustrated by people who regularly park on their land, sometimes blocking access for themselves, their families or their clients. Most of the concern expressed in the debate has been for the drivers whose vehicles have been immobilised, and the consequences that follow when they try to get their cars released. I share those concerns, but it is important to bear in mind that we are talking about someone who has parked on private property to which he has no right of access, sometimes in direct defiance of notices specifically identifying a plot of land as a private car park. As the hon. Gentleman said, there are examples involving the trade in clamping in which such strictures have not been followed—but I am glad that he raised that point.

Such actions do not necessarily give the owner of the property the right to take whatever action he wishes, however unreasonable, to deal with the nuisance, but I think that it is necessary to acknowledge that there are two sides to the issue. As the hon. Gentleman said, the owner of property may, of course, take other steps to prevent parking on his land—a barrier or a gate can be effective —but if those steps fail, should he necessarily be prevented from taking other remedial action?

If further remedial action is justified and within the law, what steps can the motorist reasonably expect the landowner and the clamper to have taken? I sense from the debate that many of the complaints which hon. Members and others have brought to my attention concern the manner of clamping as much as the clamping itself. The posting of clear warning notices, and a sensible approach to the level of fee and the manner of its collection—including, as the hon. Gentleman rightly drew to the attention of the House, a regard for the particular circumstances of the motorist after his car has been clamped—are the kind of issues which must be high on the agenda for future discussions.

As I have outlined, it seems that in certain circumstances a court may find that wheel clamping on private land amounts to a criminal offence or civil wrong. It is unfortunate that, so far as we are aware, neither the civil nor the criminal law has been authoritatively tested in the courts on the broad issue. There are—as the House will appreciate—difficult legal questions here which the Government are urgently considering. I appreciate hon. Members' frustration that the situation is not clearer. Indeed, I share that frustration—I have seen some such situations for myself—but I assure them that we are considering the matter urgently, including the question whether any action is needed to prohibit or to regulate the use of wheel clamps on private property.

I shall take fully into account the examples which both hon. Members who spoke in the debate raised. If the hon. Member for Warley, West cares to provide more detailed information in correspondence with me, I invite him to do so, and it will all be considered. Once again, I congratulate him on raising the matter——

Mr. Spellar rose——

Mr. Jack: —and before I finish my speech, I shall give way to him.

Mr. Spellar: Will the Minister tell us when the deliberations are likely to come to a conclusion, and when he will be able to make an announcement?

Mr. Jack: One of the factors which has become clear during the debate is the complexity of the untested law involved. Something which has become clear to me in my short time at the Home Office is that sometimes to act in haste means to repent at leisure. We must carefully consider the implications of what has been said. In my speech I have tried to balance the needs of the legitimate private landowner who may say, "This is causing a nuisance; I have no option but to resort to clamping," with the considerations put before me by the hon. Member. He said that people were almost turning clamping into a business so that the legitimacy argument was lost. He also said that bad practice had come as people sought to make gains.

Our task must be to consider the full implications of both sides. Private people in residential areas may have a legitimate case for saying that clamping is the best way in which to deter people from blocking the entrances to garages, for example.

The hon. Member for Warley, West highlighted another matter which is a new aspect of debate in the House. I am personally delighted that he has gone so far in highlighting it. I give him the assurance that we will look at the matter with all urgency. I am aware that we must make quality decisions in the area if they are found to be appropriate. I should like a little time to study the matter to ensure that we can examine fully the evidence put before us. Clearly the Royal Automobile Club——

MOD Jobs (North Yorkshire)

1 pm

Mr. John Greenway (Ryedale): I am grateful for the opportunity to catch your eye, Mr. Deputy Speaker, just two hours or so before the House rises for a very long recess, and to raise a matter of considerable importance to my constituents and to the constituents of my hon. Friends who represent North Yorkshire seats. I am grateful that my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Hague) is in the Chamber to support me in this brief debate. I also thank my hon. Friend the Minister for finding time to respond to the debate. It is a great pleasure to see him in his post and he is clearly enjoying life in the ministerial ranks.

I draw the Minister's attention to the fact that I am wearing the tie of the Armed Forces and Parliament Trust. More of those ties are being seen around the Corridors of the Palace. I was one of the first three guinea-pigs who entered the Armed Forces and Parliament Trust scheme which was introduced by the then Speaker and by Mr. Neil Thorne, who then represented Ilford, South.

I have found membership of the trust to be an extremely enjoyable and illuminating experience. One thing it has taught me is the importance of Ministry of Defence establishments, in North Yorkshire, not least the importance of the Royal Air Force base at Linton-on-Ouse where I was placed for my year on the scheme.

North Yorkshire has a fine tradition of Ministry of Defence work. It is home to a number of distinguished regiments and armed forces. Apart from RAF Linton-on-Ouse, my constituency has the newly commissioned early warning station at RAF Fylingdales up on the moors. I visited the station some months ago to see the huge work load there with civilian jobs of some quality involved in the preparation of the station and now, thankfully, in its manning.

There are two Ministry of Defence establishments at Strensall—Strensall barracks and the Strensall Royal Electrical and Mechanical Engineers depot. I shall devote most of my remarks to that depot. As my hon. Friend the Minister knows, our right hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces announced on Tuesday the intention to close the REME depot at Strensall. Other matters have affected North Yorkshire Ministry of Defence establishments in recent months and have given rise to some concern.

The future of the support command for the RAF establishment at Harrogate, where more than 1,000 civilians are employed, is still not settled. I must tell the Minister, on behalf of my hon. Friend the Member for Harrogate (Mr. Banks), that many of us are still unconvinced by the Government's arguments for the removal of those jobs from North Yorkshire to Brampton and to RAF Wyton in Cambridgeshire. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will bear it in mind that we are still not convinced of the Government's case on that and that he will respond to our request for more information about the costings which do not seem to us to have been properly worked through.

There are, however, some bright spots, and it would be wrong to concentrate exclusively on the potential problems stemming from proposed closures. At Leeming and at Catterick there has been a substantial enhancement of armed forces and civilian personnel requirements—to which my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks will refer, in the hope of some reassurance from the Minister on the future of Catterick following the announcement this week of the proposed transfer of the Royal Air Force Regiment from Catterick to Suffolk.

We are also grateful that at York, at the Imphal barracks in Fulford, the former north-east district headquarters is to have an enhanced role, following "Options for Change". The new eastern district headquarters will take on an even more important role than before, which is good news for many of my constituents in greater York who work at the Imphal headquarters.

Equally, it would be churlish not to pay tribute to my right hon. Friend the Member for Bridgwater (Mr. King) who, as Secretary of State, piloted through the "Options for Change" programme, listened to our entreaties and retained all the Yorkshire regiments—a much-deserved retention because of their fine traditions and recruitment records. That action did not go unnoticed.

The latest string of announcements have nevertheless created the impression that much of the Ministry of Defence activity in North Yorkshire is being shut down. People want to know whether there are to be any more announcements, any more skeletons in the cupboard, or whether we now know the full extent of the changes, which will affect people's jobs, about which they are understandably anxious.

The announcement this week that the REME depot at Strensall is to be shut down has caused considerable dismay. Two hundred and fifteen civilians work there. The consultation document, of which I have a copy, makes but fleeting and almost dismissive reference to the reasons behind the decision. It offers no properly worked out argument for the closure, referring merely to only 25 per cent. of the work load coming from York and to the fact that the volume of its dependency is not expected to increase in the future.

There follows the sweeping statement that having reviewed the position there is a decision that 41 district workshop at Strensall should close on financial, engineering and operational grounds. That is the sum total of the Government's argument.

That argument does not bear much scrutiny, because 41 Command is the only workshop facility for telecommunications test and calibration in the Ministry of Defence. The closure of the workshop would have far-reaching effects on support for the British Army and all our armed forces establishments. What is more, if the depot is closed, no facility between Leicester and Stirling will provide the support that Strensall provides. About 141 Ministry of Defence establishments depend on Strensall; all would incur higher transport costs, although we are not told how much higher or what the collection arrangements would be.

There has been a suggestion that collection sites might be established. Who would man them? I suggest that there is a real danger of only small savings accruing from the closure going ahead. I do not dismiss the need to find savings in defence expenditure, but in this case those savings could be more than outweighed by the extra costs, because of the logistical difficulties that would ensue from the closure of this fine facility and the consequent dispersal of its professional skills.

Perhaps the Minister can tell us why he and the MoD believe that we can close Strensall and transfer the work to Catterick or contract it out when no case has been made to support that. I accept that it is about 50 miles away, but the Catterick depot supports the mainline infantry. It will also have extra work when it supports the 6th Armoured Brigade when it returns from Germany in due course. The Strensall depot supports the Rapid Reaction Corps, that jewel in the crown of the "Options for Change" programme.

The Strensall depot provides vehicle and communications equipment maintenance support. The facility at Strensall also provides the Army with flexibility. That was illustrated in May when I drove along the A6 autoroute in France during the last recess. Driving in the opposite direction was a convoy of white United Nations ambulances. They made an impressive sight. Being aware of the troubles and difficulties in Yugoslavia, my wife and I were much relieved by that sight. At long last, we were doing something about the problem. Little did I know then that those ambulances and vehicles were prepared, maintained and serviced for their journey at the Strensall depot in my constituency. In fact, I live round the corner from the depot and perhaps it was rather remiss of me not to notice that all that work was going on.

The Strensall depot was able to prepare those vehicles very quickly and at short notice. That shows the value of the depot to the British Army. We do not know when we will have to call upon our armed forces to respond in times of war, a subject which we had to discuss in this place not so long ago in respect of the middle east, or for relief operations. It would be a retrograde step to shut the Strensall depot when the argument in favour of closure seems so threadbare.

I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will respond to my points and perhaps say whether we can come to some better arrangements about the proposal. As I understand it, the normal consultation period with the unions for a closure announcement of this kind is about 20 working days. That is not long enough at the best of times. However, given that the House is to go into recess and many people will be on holiday, it is incumbent on the Minister to respond to the not unreasonable request that the consultation period should be extended and that no formal decision to close Strensall depot should be taken at least until after the House returns after the recess.

I should like to go a stage further than that. In any event, it would be premature to close the depot until the market-testing initiative on contractorisation, referred to in the consultation document, has been carried out. It seems crazy to say that we think that we can settle some of the current work load through contractorisation and that there will be a market-testing initiative to discover whether that is feasible, but we will close the depot before we have the results of the market test initiative. I cannot see the logic in that argument and, understandably, neither can the work force.

We all want to save expenditure and cut waste, particularly in administration. The Strensall and Catterick depots are close to each other and closely interrelated, as has always been the case with the various barracks around North Yorkshire between Catterick, Strensall and Imphal. Given that they are so closely related, why cannot one depot remain as a satellite of the other? At this juncture, I should not like to suggest which way round that should be, because I understand that they are of a similar size, but my suggestion would prevent waste administration and it might lead to the satellite depot shedding some staff, particularly if the contractorisation experiment worked. Expenditure that is likely to be incurred on various military establishments having to send their work loads all around the country, with extra transport and collection costs, would be better spent on maintaining a depot, albeit slimmed down, at one or other site. I suspect that it might be in Strensall, given that Catterick is to expand its operations under the "Options for Change" programme.

I hope that I have demonstrated to my hon. Friend the Minister that the proposal raises many questions and that we need more time to prove that Strensall depot, which has a fine history and fine traditions—I pay tribute to all the staff who have worked there—should be given an opportunity to show that it still has an important role in the support of our armed forces. I hope that my hon. Friend will agree that we should have more time to put our case.

1.16 pm

Mr. William Hague (Richmond, Yorks): I am most grateful to my hon. Friend the Member for Ryedale (Mr. Greenway) for raising this subject and for allowing me a few moments to make a contribution. Like my hon. Friend, I am delighted that my hon. Friend the Minister is present.

I am prompted to participate in the debate by the announcement on Tuesday that the RAF Regiment is to move from Catterick, after a long association with the town, and be concentrated entirely in Suffolk. We in the Richmond and Catterick area are very sad to see the RAF Regiment go. It has had a long association with the area and it is well liked. Many generations have enjoyed working there. The regiment's relationship with, and contribution to, the local community have been extremely positive. However, we accept that the decision was taken after a long review. The decision is not a surprise. Difficult decisions must be made during the "Options for Change" process. Some battles will be won for North Yorkshire and some will be lost, but we accept that my hon. Friend the Minister and his colleagues have a difficult decision to make.

I was pleased to receive a letter from the Minister of State for the Armed Forces earlier this week, stating:

> "Everything possible would be done to avoid redundancies amongst the 75 civilian . . . employees at RAF Catterick. The Army is likely to have an alternative use for the base. This could provide job opportunities for the existing civilian employees, and there may also be opportunities for alternative employment in Catterick garrison."

I ask my hon. Friend to ensure that high priority is given to ensuring that those 75 civilian employees will be found alternative employment. I ask him also to make a decision as soon as possible about the future of the base, even though the RAF Regiment is not to leave until the end of 1993 or early 1994. The sooner my hon. Friend decides the future of the base and whether the Army will use it, the better it will be for all concerned and the sooner the local community will know how the matter will develop. I hope that my hon. Friend will be able to find an alternative use for the base by the Army.

In many ways, this matter is exceptional. Over the past few years, the extent of Ministry of Defence employment, the number of armed forces and the number of service men based in my constituency have continued to expand, particularly because of RAF Leeming being established as a major air base and the expansion of Catterick garrison. I emphasise to my hon. Friend the Minister that that is extremely welcome in the area. Notwithstanding a few problems of noise compensation that we still have to sort out at RAF Leeming, the local community and the armed forces work extremely well together and have a good relationship. That demonstrates my other point.

The north is an excellent region in which to locate a larger share of the armed forces. It has lower property prices. Money has greater purchasing power because the salaries of those who work in the armed forces are lower. Many people can work close to their homes. The north is an excellent place to locate an ever-increasing proportion of our armed forces.

1.20 pm

The Minister of State for Defence Procurement (Mr. Jonathan Aitken): I begin by thanking my hon. Friend the Member for Ryedale (Mr. Greenway) for introducing this important debate. I have been much impressed by the concern that he has rightly shown for his constituents and by his expertise on military matters, which he kindly said was due in no small measure to his experience as a guinea pig, as he put it, in the Armed Forces and Parliament Trust.

I listened to both my hon. Friend the Member for Ryedale and my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks (Mr. Hague) with particular sympathy. I know their constituencies reasonably well. I once aspired to represent the Thirsk and Malton constituency which, following subdivisions, both their constituencies now include. Although my period as a prospective parliamentary candidate was not the most successful episode of my career, I formed a great affection for the people of Yorkshire and a love for the countryside of Yorkshire. Therefore, I have some feeling for the places that my hon. Friends described, such as Strensall and Catterick. So I reply to the debate with some local knowledge as well as on behalf of the Ministry of Defence.

My hon. Friends were right to say that Yorkshire is a county of great military excellence and tradition. This is rather an all-Yorkshire occasion. Although the impartiality of your office precludes you from doing anything but listening to our debate, Mr. Deputy Speaker, I am sure that as the Member for Parliament for Pontefract and Castleford you concur with the kind tributes that were paid to the excellence of the various regiments and depots in Yorkshire. My hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, North-East (Mr. Kirkhope), who is present on the Front Bench in his silent capacity as a Government Whip, has also expressed great concern on behalf of his constituents who are affected by some of the decisions about Harrogate. He will also echo the good and justified tributes that were paid to the various installations and regiments in Yorkshire.

Some 17,500 Ministry of Defence personnel are based in Yorkshire. The county has the fifth highest number of MOD posts in the United Kingdom. Pro rata to population, that rises to third highest. In addition, the Ministry spends some £200 million annually on equipment in the Yorkshire and Humberside area, providing direct employment for about 4,000 more people.

Among the main defence establishments in North Yorkshire is the large garrison at Catterick. Of course, the city of York has been chosen for the headquarters of the new enlarged eastern district. My hon. Friend the Member for Ryedale has already mentioned the various RAF bases and fine regiments, so we can safely say that Yorkshire is well represented in the order of battle of both the RAF and the Army. There are three county regiments—the Green Howards, the Prince of Wales's Own Regiment and the Duke of Wellington's Regiment—in addition to contributions from other regiments.

The problem that my hon. Friend the Member for Ryedale has rightly raised of some 189 jobs at the 41 district workshop in York must be seen from the perspective from the great pride that everyone feels about the wider defence presence in Yorkshire. The Ministry faces some difficult decisions as a result of "Options For Change". I fully understand and sympathise with the shock that my hon. Friend the hon. Member for Ryedale and his constituents must have felt when we announced that we proposed to close 41 district workshop in the constituency. I certainly appreciate his anxiety about the effect that the closure will have on employment in the area.

I welcome the opportunity to explain why we have to make reductions in the Army's static workshop organisation and why we propose that the workshop in York should be among those to be closed.

The Army's static workshop organisation now consists of a workshop in Northern Ireland, three base workshops in England, nine district workshops in England, Scotland and Wales, a small workshop at Long Marston and one base workshop in Germany. The organisation as a whole is working at well below capacity: overheads are high and greater efficiency could be achieved.

"Options for Change" requires a significant restructuring of the Army, and although the variety and diversity of equipment—will remain largely unchanged, there will be a considerable reduction in the volume of the repair load. It has been calculated, for instance, that the base repair load —that is, the in-depth overhaul of equipment, will reduce in the post-options era to less than 60 per cent. of the former requirement. We have therefore had to conduct a review to assess the number of workshops required to support the Army in future.

The district workshops, of which York and Catterick are examples, are located in areas of Army concentration throughout the United Kingdom. They provide first and second line support for Regular Army and Territorial Army units and undertake a limited amount of base repair work. The current in-house work load is of the order of 1·4 million man hours a year. In addition, some 800,000 man hours of work are carried out under contract. It has been calculated that the redeployment of units to the United Kingdom from the British Army of the Rhine will raise the annual in-house load to some 1·5 million man hours. However, even this will leave a significant amount of spare capacity in the workshops and we reluctantly, but inevitably, came to the conclusion that some should be closed, including, I regret to say, 41 workshop in York.

My hon. Friend the Member for Ryedale asked questions about a specific problem, to which I should like to reply, and he made certain requests. First, he asked, justifiably, whether 20 days was too short a period for meaningful consultations and whether we could do a little better than that, particularly when the House is in recess and some people are away on holiday. I can grant that request easily, because the Ministry's consultation period provides for a minimum of 20 days, which can be extended if the closure raises difficult issues, as we acknowledge it does, and if the unions or the local Member of Parliament asks for an extension. I hope that my hon. Friend feels that we have met him on that request.

My hon. Friend asked whether we could arrange for the necessary clearances for him to visit the workshop. We shall be pleased to make those arrangements for him.

I find it harder to grant my hon. Friend's second request to postpone the closure pending the outcome of the market-testing initiative. I cannot agree to that, because of the huge over-capacity in the workshop organisation, which will increase. There is simply insufficient work load to maintain the workshop organisation at its present level, and closures must be made. The market-testing initiative will be carried out only in the workshops that remain.

Next my hon. Friend asked whether the two workshops in Yorkshire could be retained, one as a satellite of the other. Again, I cannot see my way to agreeing to that. It simply would not resolve the problem of the great over-capacity that exists in the Army static workshop organisation.

My hon. Friend also asked whether we were worried that there would be no workshop capable of performing highly technical telecommunications work in the calibration field, particularly between Stirling and Leicester. I can confirm that there is no facility at Catterick. We expect to place specialised work out to local contract repair. There will be a good opportunity for many local telecommunications companies. In addition, where really specialised work is necessary, local collecting points will be provided to move the work, where necessary, to other Army workshops. We can give further details of that in the consultation period. I hope that I have dealt with the main points of my hon. Friend's plea on behalf of Strensall.

My hon. Friend the Member for Richmond, Yorks asked about the RAF Regiment and the changes affecting Catterick. I was delighted by his warm tribute to that regiment. Last Tuesday my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces announced changes to the future size and shape of the regiment. The reorganisation follows an exhaustive study which has been an important part of our programme to create a more efficient structure for the RAF for the future.

I assure my hon. Friend that it is the required size and shape of the RAF Regiment, which was carefully examined, which will result in the announced move from Catterick. I believe that the majority of the affected RAF staff will be relocated to other RAF Regiment duties. Unfortunately, there will be some officer redundancies, but we hope that the alternative use of RAF Catterick by the Army will provide job opportunities for the existing civilian work force. It may also create job opportunities at the Catterick garrison. I understand my hon. Friend's concern, but I think that I am right to say that, in this case, the effect on his constituents and the local economy will not be great.

Difficult decisions have had to be made. I am afraid that I cannot please all my hon. Friends in their requests. Yorkshire has 17,500 service men. Therefore, I hope that my hon. Friends will agree that the changes are fairly small and will not unduly affect the military situation and its installations in Yorkshire.

1.30 pm

Mr. Simon Hughes (Southwark and Bermondsey): I am grateful for the opportunity on this last day before the summer recess to debate, albeit briefly, the current drought in southern Africa. It is no coincidence that this debate follows a substantial and significant one in the other place yesterday, because many Members on both sides in both places, as well as the Government, are aware of the enormity of the potential disaster facing Africa today. It is because that disaster could be so unprecedented in its scale that it is vital that the House should speak on behalf of the country and say what we should and could do to prevent it.

Two of today's earlier debates have centred on regeneration and job retention in docklands and in north Yorkshire respectively. Nothing that we debate about social security, employment security or the domestic security of our residents is in the same league as the debate on southern Africa. Many members of the public understand that; therefore, we must adopt a wholly different type of stance in addressing this issue.

My interest in southern Africa goes back a long time, but only a month ago today, at the invitation of the director of Oxfam, I had the privilege to touch down with him and four others in Zambia for a five-day visit, followed by a similar length visit to Zimbabwe. To be completely honest, I think that Oxfam originally hoped that my right hon. Friend the Member for Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale (Sir D. Steel) would undertake the visit. He was unable to go, so I was asked to go in his place.

The new director of Oxfam, Dr. Bryer, accompanied me, together with Justin Forsyth of Oxfam, who is expert in southern African affairs, and its press officer, Liam Curran. We were also accompanied by an experienced BBC television crew, Bill Hamilton and Baz Solanki, who have visited Albania and elsewhere and reported vividly from other countries as they go through major crisis.

The purpose of our visit was clear. Reports had reached us that the sub-region of southern Africa was facing the worst drought in living memory. Oxfam is 50 years old this year, and throughout its existence it has taken up the challenge of trying to respond to disaster and famine throughout the world. It believed that the best way to respond to this drought was to send a delegation so that people could see with their own eyes and report back.

Within two days of returning from Zimbabwe and Zambia, we went to see the Minister for Overseas Development and her officials, who received us courteously. I believe that that meeting was effective. I had talks with the Labour spokesman, the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd), and her colleague the hon. Member for Workington (Mr. Campbell-Savours). On the following Monday, I visited the Vice President of the European Commission, with the Oxfam team responsible for such matters. Oxfam officials have also had several discussions with officials in the Overseas Development Administration and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office elsewhere in the United Kingdom and in Brussels.

We came back to present the message of what could and should be done. A great thing about the visit was the way in which it was planned. I take no responsibility for that, but applaud the way in which Oxfam thought it through. By taking an experienced and competent television crew, we could report back direct to the widest public in this country. People also saw the films in other countries across the channel. In the week that we came back there was BBC television coverage on four days—morning, lunchtime, afternoon and evening—as well as on children's "Newsround" later that week.

The result is that we have been able to contribute to what the debates yesterday and today seek to do—to raise the profile of the issue and to ensure that in this country we are not unaware of the severity of the crisis.

I do not want to go over what was said yesterday in another place, as those who follow our proceedings can read the report and it would be repetitious simply to go over facts. However, I urge people to refer to that debate and to view it alongside this one.

I want to describe the present picture, and to share some reflections on my visit. I am grateful that I had the benefit of an earlier conversation with the Minister on the subject, and I hope that we can identify new ways in which we can do something. The purpose of the debate is not merely to make people aware of what is going on, but to make them realise that we can do something as a country and we can use our influence at home and abroad.

Briefly, I shall describe the scale of the problem. It is not a cliché to say that it is the worst drought in living memory, and that is confirmed by the facts. The region is normally a net exporter of food to the rest of the world, especially grain and cereals, and it is the grain basket of Africa. It is a part of Africa that is normally self-sufficient and is not regarded as subject to this sort of crisis. Because there was no rain last year, and because in some parts of southern Africa there has been no rain, or below average rainfall, for the past 11 or 12 years—we were told that by some of the people that we visited—the crisis has not suddenly arrived but has built up over many years.

The figures have been identified by the United Nations, according to the best advice given to it. Potentially, 18 million people could die of famine. That is more than one quarter of the population of this country. People have already died because of the drought in southern Africa. Because of weakness through lack of food, they have not been able to survive. We visited villages in the eastern provinces of Zambia and the southern part of Zimbabwe where, within the preceding day or two, people had received their first food for weeks. They had been living on roots and berries, which have no nutritional value but give a little moisture and a semblance of food. In some cases they had rubbed the leaves of plants to make salt, which was the only other food for them to eat.

Water is the life source, and some people either have none or they find a little stagnant water left in the bottom of a pool perhaps a mile away. They might find a drop of water in an almost empty well or in a borehole in the back of beyond away from the villages. Rivers and streams are dry, and reservoirs that normally contain 100 ft of water are all but empty.

We visited places where the villagers, often women, had to walk 10 miles to borrow a bucket—because they had none—and walk another 10 miles to collect a bucketful of stagnant, polluted water from a source shared by wild animals, and then carry it back to their families. It will not surprise the House to hear that they face not just hunger and malnutrition but the diseases that follow, such as cholera, TB, malaria and dysentery. Already, there have been significant numbers of deaths among the elderly and children, and even the healthy middle-aged.

We were told by one family that it had 20 cattle last year. Fifteen had died through lack of water and food and the remaining five were too weak to be of any use. In many parts, people have no cattle to produce food for them, and their income and wealth have been destroyed through no fault of their own. Instead of acres, mile upon mile, of fields growing green, providing crops for the people of rural southern Africa and others, there is a brown horizon yielding nothing.

Relief agencies and Governments have been asked to respond and provide the grain needed immediately. But including the other crisis area of Africa, the horn, we are still about $550 million short of the money needed to buy the food and provide the aid needed to meet the immediate crisis.

The countries concerned are democracies which are grappling to cope with imposed, though agreed, terms for their economic development. Those terms were laid down by the International Monetary Fund. They are doing their best to turn old demand economies into capitalist economies. They are removing subsidies and thereby increasing food prices to their people. They are trying to balance their books and pay off their debts, and so far they have not defaulted.

In addition to trying to cope with incredibly difficult economic problems—far more difficult than we face in the present recession—they are facing additional hardships such as the prevalence of HIV and Aids and thousands of refugees coming over the border from countries such as Mozambique, where there is war as well as famine. So this is an accumulated crisis.

There has been a good response from Britain and the European Community, but we need a general awareness that more must be done. A part of the world that can normally look after itself—and look after us in large measure—is saying not that it needs handouts but that it cannot now do everything to help itself. Given the tools, it will do the job, but it desperately requires help to overcome the immediate crisis. It needs food and cash, and we must ship it quickly through the coastal into the landlocked countries in the centre of the region. We must ensure that it is distributed effectively. That will enable us to prevent drought from creating famine and disaster from becoming an unparalleled crisis in the history of the continent. We can also create the possibility of survival and restructuring thereafter. For that, many obvious things are needed: seed, fertiliser, tools, tractors, technical equipment, and so on.

To show how desperate the position is, may I complete the picture by illustrating the consequences? If there is no water, the hydroelectric scheme cannot produce as much electricity. Therefore, it cannot supply as much industrial production and industry will lay off people. Those people become unemployed and produce less, sell less and earn less. The country's balance of payments problems are therefore far more difficult to resolve. So the whole of the economy and everyone in the region are directly affected as a result of what may appear on the surface to be a crisis of the rural economy.

The agenda for our response should be as follows. First, as President of the European Community for the remainder of this year, it will be within our term of office to decide about this issue, and we must ensure that the shortfall in pledges is soon made up. Secondly, we must ensure that the pledges are converted into effective delivery, a point which my hon. Friends and I made strongly to the Vice President of the Commission, when we said that it was all very well making a pledge, but we must deliver the goods. Thirdly, to judge by Baroness Chalker's reply in another place yesterday, there will be an opportunity next week to see whether we can alter the terms of debt repayment—the Trinidad terms—so that Zambia, which is in a different International Monetary Fund category, does not have to repay its debt either at all or under such rigorous terms.

In much of the correspondence which the television programmes have generated for me, people have said that we must write off the debt once and for all to give those countries a chance of survival. Lastly, there are opportunities to alter what everyone in those countries talks about—structural adjustment. That means altering the structure of those countries' economies so that they are not required to be so economically and financially self-righteous that they cannot carry out their principal duty: to feed the people whom they are elected to represent.

I wish to finish with a personal comment. I make it only because I hope that it will give the debate the immediacy that it deserves. When I arrived back at Heathrow, I was greeted with the devastating news that an elder brother of mine had died, having caught malaria on his honeymoon. This has been reported in the press and I repeat it only for that reason. If the death of one person in one's own family can have such a personal devastating effect on so many, as other colleagues in the House have experienced in their lives, I hope that that will persuade us of the reason and urgency to do something about these 18 million people who are already suffering while we still have the time to do something about it. I hope that we will realise that, for many millions of people, what we decide this summer is nothing less than a matter of life and death.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (Mr. Mark Lennox-Boyd): I congratulate the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on initiating this Adjournment debate. It is timely and he has spoken well and with great feeling as he described, in his closing words, the crisis facing southern Africa. I know of his visit to southern Africa with Dr. Bryer and Mr. Forsyth and of his discussions with my right hon. and noble Friend Baroness Chalker. If I do not manage to answer all his points in the few minutes left, I am comforted by the fact that he has had a full discussion with my right hon. and noble Friend.

The hon. Gentleman's concern is shared by everyone in the House. It is important to appreciate the scale of the problem and to give the threat of famine in the region its due place on the international agenda. The drought, both in terms of its geographical spread and its severity, may be —as described by the hon. Gentleman—the worst to affect the southern part of that continent this century. With regional production of basic food grains down to about 40 per cent. of the normal level, and with shortage of water leading to the widespread slaughter of livestock and to an increase in diseases among the most vulnerable groups, especially the elderly, up to 18 million people are at serious risk. A region which can normally expect to be largely self-sufficient in cereal crops is having to import more than 11 million tonnes of food.

These basic facts provide some measure of the problem. Lives are at real risk and, as the hon. Gentleman said, there is grave threat also to the processes of economic and political reform which have been making significant headway in the region over the past year or so. These are threats which the international community must recognise and act quickly and decisively to avert.

The hon. Gentleman was kind enough to say that Britain has taken a leading role in responding to the crisis. He had discussions with President Mugabe, who confirmed that. We provided an initial package of assistance for the worst-hit countries at the beginning of March and, since then, the Minister for Overseas Development has made bilateral commitments of aid which, so far, amount to more than £48 million. This aid has been balance of payments support to help cope with the burden of extra food imports, food aid, technical assistance and support for both local and British-based voluntary agencies.

The Government have also pressed for a generous response from the European Community. I shall say more about that later. On 4 May the Development Council approved additional food aid totalling 800,000 tonnes. Some 370,000 tonnes of that additional aid will go to southern Africa and we shall contribute more than £11 million towards the cost.

The drought appeal conference in Geneva in June—at which, sadly, my noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development was the only Minister from a donor county —produced a positive response from the international community as a whole. In terms of the specific categories of assistance covered by the appeal, pledges made at the conference, which came to about US$600 million, fell short of the appeal target of $850 million, but these included substantial commitments from some major donors, including notably the Americans and the Japanese. Other donors, including the Dutch, the Canadians and ourselves, have made substantial extra commitments since the conference. We shall continue to take every available opportunity, both in the European Community under our presidency and in other international forums, to urge others to join in responding generously to the needs of southern Africa.

It would be wrong to imply that the solution to the crisis is solely help from outside. The countries of the region have acted with commendable speed to put the machinery of co-operation in place. A regional task force of representatives from the member states of the southern African development co-ordination conference was set up in April. Six transport corridor groups have been established to supervise the importation of food, and they are liaising closely with national emergency co-ordinators and with the logistics advisory centre now operating in Harare with the support of the world food programme. It is encouraging to note that this co-operation transcends political differences, with the port and railway authorities of southern Africa playing a vital role in the massive logistical effort that is now under way. If there is a positive aspect to the drought, it is this readiness on the part of all the countries of the region to act together at a time of crisis. That gives some comfort for the future.

I am glad to be able to tell the House that, after discussions that lasted well into last night, agreement has been reached in Rome on secure corridors for the safe passage of relief supplies in and through Mozambique. That is excellent news not only for the people of Mozambique but for those in neighbouring landlocked countries, and it is a further step towards the peace that Mozambique so badly needs.

I said that I would say a few more words about the European Community response, which the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey mentioned. Given the nature of the procedure involved, I consider that the approval given on 4 May to a substantial programme of additional food aid was something of an achievement. Of course, as the hon. Gentleman also said, delivery is equally important. I assure him that the Commission is fully alive to the need for a proper delivery process.

Nearly half the Community's total food aid programme for 1992 had been shipped or was on the point of shipment by the end of June. Another enormously important factor, of which I am sure that the hon. Gentleman is aware, is the vital necessity for food aid shipments from the Community and from other bilateral and multilateral donors to be managed and co-ordinated properly over the next few months so as to ensure an even flow of supplies between now and the next harvest, in March.

Mrs. Ann Clwyd (Cynon Valley): As the Minister knows, the House will be in recess for the next three months. We are told that the crisis will intensify in September. Can the hon. Gentleman assure us now that, if things get worse, every effort will be made by the Government and by the EC, and that all the machinery is in place, to ensure that emergency action is taken to send food to the people as soon as possible? As the Minister has said, pledges have been made and have not yet been delivered. That is a matter for great concern to the House.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In the four minutes remaining to me, I had intended to deal with some of those points.

My right hon. and noble Friend referred specifically to the drought at the meeting of the Development Council of the European Parliament yesterday. I have no doubt that the subject will be on the agenda at the next Development Council, and that both my right hon. and noble Friend and our colleagues in the EC will take it extremely seriously during the coming months.

The Paris Club is meeting next week and will consider Zambia's request for debt relief. That is the appropriate forum for the consideration of debt relief issues, and we shall continue to work there for the application of more generous terms on the lines of the original Trinidad proposals suggested by the Prime Minister.

The hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey asked about Zimbabwe. Zimbabwe is different from Zambia, in that it has been able to service its debts in full, and thus to maintain its creditworthy status. We understand that it has no plan to seek debt relief. Indeed, because it is anxious to maintain its creditworthy status in commercial and financial markets, it does not intend to change that approach.

The hon. Gentleman also mentioned the deaths of livestock, and recovery and rehabilitation problems. Of course, there is a severe impact on livestock. In Zimbabwe, for example, 40 per cent. of commonly owned and smallholder cattle may die. In the commercial sector, numbers are likely to fall by as much as 25 per cent. The threat to wildlife is mainly confined to the south-east of the country, where a major cull is being carried out to help to ensure that at least some of the animals survive.

We know that emergency humanitarian aid is not enough, and that we must consider recovery and rehabilitation. That must be the next step, and it will include helping to rebuild livestock holdings and ensuring that supplies of seed are available for the next planting season.

There can be no doubt that the people of southern Africa face great hardship over the coming months. The task of the international community will be to ensure that hardship does not turn into grave loss of life and widespread dislocation of the region's political and economic structures. That is the threat which must be faced and overcome.

I assure hon. Members that the Government will keep a careful eye on developments in the region in the coming months and will remain in close touch with their European partners and with other bilateral and multilateral donors. My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development will visit some of the worst-hit countries in September and will have the opportunity then to assess what more may need to be done.

I will conclude on a slightly more hopeful note on significant developments which are under way in southern Africa. We have seen progress towards the ending of long-standing conflicts in Angola and Mozambique, towards economic renewal and more open and accountable government, and towards a transition to multiracial democracies——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Sir Teddy Taylor (Southend, East): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. It was announced a few minutes ago that the German central bank has rejected the appeal from the Chancellor of the Exchequer and has increased its discount rates by 0·75 per cent., which will clearly have a fundamental effect on British economic policy. May I ask you whether it would be in order for the Government, if they so wished, to make a statement during the next hour on the implications of this alarming decision for British economic policy?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have received no notice of any Minister intending to make such a statement. I think it rather unlikely that there will be such a request.

Occupational Pension Schemes

2.1 pm

Mr. Michael Bates (Langbaurgh): I am grateful for the opportunity to debate occupational pension schemes. The schemes have a membership of about 11 million people and are important in this country. Some 300,000 schemes are in operation. The debate on pensions over recent years is welcome. As our population ages and people can look forward to periods of retirment of 20 to 30 years, the need for properly funded retirement via occupational pensions and state pensions is increasingly important.

There has been a great deal of success in occupational pension schemes, and we should start on that basis. We should mention that, in 1979, 54 per cent. of pensioners had a second income from an occupational pension scheme. That figure has now risen to 69 per cent., which is very welcome. We should also recognise that, in addition to occupational pension schemes, the number of people who can supplement their income has doubled from savings during that period. That is most welcome. The number of people who own property as another asset has increased during the period. As the wealth of the nation grows, pensioners can participate in that wealth, which is to be approved of greatly.

I want to bring a number of points before the House. One of the first problems that the industry and Government may face in coming months is surpluses. The fact that surpluses have built up in pension funds over the past 12 to 14 years is a credit to the economic conditions that have existed for the principal part of that time. The key point is what to do with those surpluses.

Who owns the surpluses in pension funds? I suggest that ownership of pension funds must lie with the employees and with the members of the pension fund. That key point must be accepted. The argument is helped by recent judgments in the European Court. The case of Barber v. Guardian Royal Exchange established that pensions are deferred pay. Deferred pay, by its nature, must belong to the person who has earned the salary. Ownership is very much in the hands of the employees.

I do not welcome the way in which, in recent years, the surpluses that have been built up in pension funds have been attacked by predators and over-enthusiastic companies. I approved of the Conservative social security legislation which was introduced with the principal objective of placing limitations on what such surpluses can be used for. That was an excellent initiative, but it has still to be applied. The sooner the new rules are applied the better.

Other tactics, perhaps not as overt as taking over company pension schemes and creaming off their assets or taking loans from them, also give rise to anxiety. I refer to certain subliminal activities which have come to my attention—for instance, the practice of placing directors in the membership of an employee pension fund and allowing them to take up and backdate their benefit entitlements in the fund, following which, six or nine months later, they are given a transfer out of the fund and into their own executive scheme, taking with them a high transfer value. This causes concern among members of pension schemes and it must be dealt with.

Some employers are over-enthusiastic about taking contribution holidays. Some of them take employer contribution holidays of between five and 10 years. Given the ever-lengthening period of retirement these days, there will be ever-increasing demands on pension funds, so they will require increased resources. That in turn will require increased contributions, so employers must not set a bad example by taking these contribution holidays.

The security of pension funds has been much on our minds, given the tragic circumstances surrounding the Maxwell pensioners, but we must be careful not to over-legislate and place too heavy a burden on the 300,000 pension schemes in this country which operate successfully and effectively on behalf of employees.

Much of the great debate, inside and outside this Chamber, surrounds schemes with large memberships—multinational pension fund schemes, for instance. However, as we know, the vast majority of occcupational pension schemes are run by small manufacturing companies and small chains of shops with 20 or 30 staff. It may be right to impose on larger schemes professional actuaries who have to attend board meetings and be subject to increased compliance with legal requirements —that may tighten up on the investment and management of the large funds. We do not want, however, to place an excessive burden on smaller schemes. After all, where would the money to comply with more legislation come from? It would have to come from the pension funds themselves, to the detriment of their members.

Much of the protection required is already in place. Trustees must be better educated to know their rights and what to look for as they attend trust meetings. They need to know more as they take on responsible positions in companies and in occupational pension schemes.

We also welcome the review by Professor Goode initiated by the Department of Social Security. Most of us were extremely impressed with the quality and expertise of that distinguished committee. We have a great deal of confidence in the quality, knowledge and expertise of those people to produce sensible solutions which will be for the benefit of pensioners.

We must also consider portability. The nature of employment has changed. In the 1930s and 1940s, it was normal to think that people would spend 30 or 40 years with one company in one job. That was particularly so in the north-east of England. People would work in a mine from the time that they left school until they retired, or they would stay with a shipyard for their entire working lives. However, the nature of employment has changed. People change the nature of their duties and their professions and jobs. They also change employment on many occasions.

Under current legislation and the operation of occupational pension schemes, people who are mobile and move between different pension schemes can be disadvantaged because benefits have to be left or frozen within a particular scheme or transfers must be taken from a scheme, but the transfers are not a full and accurate reflection of the true value of the contribution in that fund.

We must recognise that there is a greater need for portability and mobility in the work force. We must encourage that, because it is good for the economy and for business. We must make it as easy as possible for people to move between jobs and to secure and build up pension benefits. Some people might argue that that is the responsibility of the individual, that people should take that decision and on their heads be it. However, if people fail to make adequate pension provisions during their working lives, they will become the responsibility of the state, which the taxpayer has to fund. We can legitimately take an interest in ensuring that people make adequate contributions into pension schemes to secure adequate benefits in retirement.

One cannot mention portability without referring briefly to the position in the European Community. I should welcome comments from my hon. Friend the Minister about pension benefits in the European arena because it would be helpful to draw comparisons. As we head towards a single market, the picture that I drew earlier of increased mobility in this country will be increased many times over. People will take advantage of the tremendous opportunities available through a single market to move between different employers and to change their professions, not just within the United Kingdom, but within the European Community.

Such movement raises questions about the funding of those pensions. The original European communication issued in 1991 by the Commission contained a provision for portability of pension benefits and for securing pension benefits as people move between member states. That was very welcome, but that provision was not adopted in the final document and that was very disappointing.

One appreciates that there are problems with different tax structures and that it is difficult to allow tax benefits in different member states. It is difficut to achieve harmonisation in that area. However, if we want a true, single European market and true mobility of labour, we must address that problem. I should be grateful if my hon. Friend the Minister would comment on that.

Many other things can be done for pensioners which relate not directly to pension schemes, but to the economic conditions that surround pensioners. We often hear from the Opposition the accusation that inflation is not the most important economic indicator. It is all right for hon. Members who will secure index-linked pension benefits, but, for the vast majority of people—11 million—who do not have index-linked pension benefits, inflation and the control of inflation are of dire importance and are vital to their security and to maintaining the value of their pension benefits. We must bear that point in mind. We must imagine what it would have done to an occupational pension scheme in 1977, when the rate of inflation was 23 per cent. and a pension fund was limited to an increase of 5 per cent. Clearly, the Government have a duty, and the control of inflation for the benefit of pensioners is paramount.

The maintenance of low rates of taxation is another way of assisting occupational pensioners. The introduction of the 20p band for pensioners was a great assistance, particularly for pensioners receiving state and occupational benefits. The welcome increase in income support for pensioners is also a great assistance. There are things that the Government can do and I am pleased to say that they are doing them successfully.

If we want increased pension benefits, an adequate standard of living for an aging population and a decade of retirement, which is an excellent idea, we must strive towards flexibility of retirement ages. It is nonsense to suggest that everybody reaches an appropriate retirement age at exactly the same time. Individuals have different approaches to when they would like to exercise their retirement benefits. The ability to fund them is the key.

The individual must accept that it is his responsibility to fund pension benefits and pension schemes. Perhaps in the past we were used to getting our pension benefits on the cheap, certainly compared with other European Community states. Contributions by our employees are at the low end of the scale. The individual must say, "If I want to secure those benefits and to choose my date of retirement, those benefits need to be funded." That is the responsibility of the individual and the individual alone.

2.17 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security (Miss Ann Widdecombe): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Langbaurgh (Mr. Bates), first, on obtaining the debate and, secondly, on the extremely lucid way in which he has made a wide range of points. His speech follows well on his excellent and well-acclaimed maiden speech on housing. My hon. Friend will be able to bring a great measure of judgment and expertise in serving his constituents. It is a tremendous pleasure for me to answer such interesting and thought-provoking thoughts. Given the time constraints, it is unlikely that I shall be able to address each of my hon. Friend's points, but I hope to be able to to respond to the most important.

My hon. Friend is right to welcome the review of trust law which the Government have implemented under Professor Goode. I am particularly grateful to my hon. Friend for making it clear that a balance is to be struck between, on the one hand, protecting the members of pension funds and making sure that the law is sufficiently tight to protect their assets and future pensions and, as far as possible, to avoid the excesses that we have seen as a result of the Maxwell affair, and, on the other hand, not drawing the rules so tight that they make it impossible for small funds to function or that they provide a major disincentive for employers to set up occupational pension schemes. That is an important balance to be struck. I am grateful to my hon. Friend for pointing it out.

The Government have always been aware that the security of pensions is a major issue. It was addressed in the Social Security Act 1990. Several measures in that Act have been implemented and we are still considering others. That is a tribute to the Government and a refutation of the frequent claim that somehow we know that problems were brewing in occupational pensions two years ago, well before any knowledge of Mr. Maxwell's activities, but did nothing about it. We were already implementing measures or consulting on measures to strengthen the law.

We took cognisance of the balance that my hon. Friend discussed when we introduced the self-investment regulations, because we wanted to limit self-investment because we recognised that it was in the interests of members of pension funds to do so. However, we did not want to limit it in such a way that we would cause funds and employers to wind up prematurely or make it impossible for them to function sensibly within whatever limits we introduced. Therefore, there was a period of consultation before we introduced the 5 per cent. limit. I suggest to my hon. Friend that that is evidence of our great desire to maintain the balance to which he referred.

My hon. Friend was right to put occupational pensions in the overall context of pensioner incomes and to assess how far occupational pensions have contributed to the welfare of Britain's pensioners. He asked me to make clear what pension benefits exist in the rest of Europe. In many of our European competitor countries highly developed occupational pension schemes such as we have here do not exist. Even in countries that have large occupational pensions schemes such as Germany or Holland, the schemes are not all run on exactly the same principles.

There is a healthy mix between private and public provision in Britain. Perhaps a good demonstration of that is the fact that the average income from occupational pensions is almost exactly the same as the state pension. The state pension makes a significant contribution to a pensioner's income. It is precisely that healthy mix which enables us to sustain an increasing pensioner population and maintain services for our pensioners which are not readily available in the rest of Europe.

I shall take the request of my hon. Friend to draw some comparisons with Europe. In much of the rest of Europe people already have to work much longer for their pension. For example, in Denmark the retirement age is 67. In the Netherlands people must have 50 years of insurance before they even qualify for a pension. The pension received by people who live in France or Germany depends on how much they have earned. Low earners end up with extremely low pensions.

In Britain a basic state pension is available to all with a contributions record. In both France and Germany people pay health insurance out of their pension. In Britain national insurance contributions stop when people retire. They simply draw their pension. Only Britain provides a separate pension for a spouse who has not worked. As that represents some 60 per cent. of the basic pension, it makes an enormous difference in any European comparisons.

In other countries, assessments for income support or its equivalent take account of children's income as well as that of the pensioner. In this country, we consider solely the income of pensioners. As my hon. Friend pointed out, half our pensioners own their homes and those at the poorer end of the scale can receive help with rent of up to 100 per cent., whereas housing costs are a major drain on pensioners' incomes abroad.

In France, pensioners pay £4·50 a day for the first week in hospital. In this country pensioners have no deductions for the first six weeks. In Belgium, they pay up to 10 per cent. of the cost of their treatment and in some other countries there are no automatic free prescriptions for pensioners or there is a system, for example as in France, where pensioners are entitled to free medicine but have to pay and claim back the cost. In most other countries, the cost of living is higher. That puts into context the good deal that pensioners have, if we look outside the narrow provisions of the state pension.

In the past 13 years, there have been significant improvements in pensioners' average incomes. Our policy to encourage such improvements has been in two strands. First, we have pledged—and have succeeded in ensuring—that basic state pensions provide a secure foundation for retirement, by increasing them in line with the movement in prices. Secondly, we have encouraged private provision for retirement, both through personal and occupational pension schemes, and by aiming to create a stable economic environment in which savings and investments can grow and maintain their value.

It was important that my hon. Friend the Member for Langbaurgh drew attention to the role of the control of inflation in promoting pensioners' incomes. He was right not merely to rely on the automatic uprating of occupational pension schemes but instead to point to central economic policy.

As there is no Opposition Front-Bench spokesman in the Chamber it might be rather ungenerous to draw the obvious comparison with the 1970s, when many pensioners' savings were effectively wiped out and when few of them—or far fewer than today—enjoyed the comfort of an occupational pension in addition to their state pension. Since 1979, pensioners' incomes from savings have more than doubled, whereas under the last Labour Government they fell by 16 per cent., and average income from occupational pensions has nearly doubled over the same period. The number of recently retired pensioners receiving income from occupational pensions has increased from 54 per cent. in 1979 to 69 per cent. today.

Dr. Robert Spink (Castle Point): Hear, hear.

Miss Widdecombe: That is a tribute to the success of our occupational pension strategy, and I am glad to have that sign of support from my hon. Friend the Member for Castle Point (Dr. Spink), whom I welcome to the Chamber.

While it is true that many pensioners rely on benefits for much of their income, during the past decade private incomes have become much more important. Social security now accounts for only about half of pensioners' average incomes, compared to three fifths at the end of the 1970s. That important shift in emphasis from state to private provision has given us much-needed flexibility in the way that we manage the wide range of pension provisions that my hon. Friend the Member for Langbaurgh referred to.

Real benefit expenditure on the elderly has risen by one third since 1979, but we have been able to target that towards poorer pensioners. My right hon. Friend the Leader of the House, the previous Secretary of State for Social Security, who is also in the Chamber in another guise, was firmly of the opinion and managed to carry through with great success the focusing of extra help on those pensioners who are generally regarded as being less well off. As a result of those measures, we have been able to reduce the proportion of pensioners among the poorest fifth of the population from 40 to 28 per cent. during the Government's term in office. Even among that group, the extra help that we have been able to give through increased income support pensioner premiums has contributed to a 15 per cent. real increase in their average incomes.

In the remaining minute of my time I shall turn from the general state of pensioners' incomes and European comparisons, on which my hon. Friend invited me to comment, and assure him on an issue on which he touched at the end of his speech when he called for a flexible decade of retirement. Contrary to speculation in the press and from the Opposition, the Government have not yet reached a view on how to equalise state pension ages. We are wholly committed to equalisation, but we have not decided on any one method. I can assure my hon. Friend that a flexible decade or flexible period of retirement in any one of a number of forms is under consideration. It is one of four principal options being considered by the Government. When we finally reach our conclusions we shall have taken into account the expert advice that we have received from him. I conclude by again thanking my hon. Friend for raising this important subject.

Mr. George Galloway (Glasgow, Hillhead): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. It is fortuitous that the Leader of the House is by your right hand, which is where he should be. Have you had any indication from the Government that there will be, even at this eleventh hour, a statement about the plan to confiscate Scottish water? I note from yesterday's proceedings that the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry did the decent thing and made an important statement to Parliament about the proposals to privatise Parcelforce. We learn from the newspapers that the Government plan to steal Scotland's water. It would be an outrage if Parliament were to break up for the longest recess in living memory without our knowing what the Government plan for that most precious of natural resources, Scottish water.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Geoffrey Lofthouse): I have received no information that any Minister intends to make a statement, and I think it highly unlikely.

Mr. Mike Watson (Glasgow, Central): Further to that point of order——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it on the same point of order?

Mr. Watson: It is, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry, but I have ruled on that.

Bolton General Hospital (Ward Closure)

2.31 pm

Mr. David Young (Bolton, South-East): The subject of this debate is the closure of a long-stay, continuing care ward for elderly patients in my constituency. The closure was carried out without any statutory consultation procedure. The issues involved far transcend the closure of one ward; they go to the root of the whole policy of the district health authority on long-stay, continuing care in the three constituencies of Bolton.

The Minister may not be aware that, following a debate in 1981 that I initiated to get the Bolton hospital centralised on one site, money is only now coming forward to build the remainder of what is to be the new Bolton general hospital, updated into a facility ready to deal with the care of the people of Bolton.

Bolton district health authority does not seem to have thought through a policy for beds for the long-stay elderly in need of continuing care. The proposal was that one block in Bolton general hospital, H block, was to be used for continuing elderly care until the elderly patients can be transferred off the main site which was to be used for acute patients.

There was a broad-brush approach to consultation in Bolton concerned with the Mereworth exercise. It was intended that patients should then be transferred to another hospital off site. It was to be Hulton hospital. It is an old hospital and lacks modern facilities. It lacks privacy, space in bathrooms and space in dayrooms to give the dignity that elderly people require and quality of life they should have. The district health authority had promised that H block on the Bolton general hospital site —I should tell the House that the different sites are some miles apart—should be maintained until the older hospital some miles away was updated.

We need a clear policy statement from the health authority about how it intends to care for elderly patients. Although it has talked generally about improving the facility at Hulton Lane hospital, to date, that facility has not been upgraded. Now we find that some of H block will be closed despite the promise to maintain it until the other facility was upgraded and ready.

I am not arguing against the proposed new use of the vacant wards, but one should not rob Peter to pay Paul. If the district health authority has a sincere policy for long-term, continuing care for the elderly, it is vital that the facilities for them are updated in line with those in the newer hospital.

One problem is that the district health authority has never appeared to determine how many long-term continuing care beds are required at the hospital. A notional figure of 120 has been bandied about, which appeared in a discussion paper by an eminent consultant. It has never been incorporated into the district health authority's policy. An additional concern is that the health authority has taken no note of the fact that by 2001 the number of people over 85 in Bolton will have increased by 47 per cent.

From April 1993 the local government authority will be responsible for community care. Long-stay continuing care beds in hospitals will be affected by the provisions made by the local authority. People will be aware that those authorities are concerned about whether they can provide the facilities in the first place. Working parties have only just been set up between the district health authority and the local council to consider the number of beds required. It is high-handed to close wards before those discussions have taken place.

What adds to the local community health council's concern is that on 6 February 1992 health officials in Bolton assured open meetings of the community health council that H block would remain in operation until new developments were completed at the general hospital. They also said that money would be spent on the development of the Hulton Lane hospital. On 5 March, just one month later, it was confirmed, by telephone, to the community health council that H1 ward would close by the end of March. That was done without consultation and the staff were redeployed into other disciplines. A belated consultation exercise is now taking place, but that will do nothing to restore the morale of the staff who have seen a specialist team broken up overnight and dispersed into other specialties.

We used to allege that such arrogant bureaucracy occurred only in eastern European states. Offering consultation once a ward has been closed, the staff redeployed and the patients reallocated is like offering a man who has been hanged a fair trial by those who hanged him.

Consultation must take place when proposals are made about the elderly because they are among the most vulnerable in the community. For physical or mental reasons, many of them cannot put up a fight on their own behalf, and many of their relatives cannot do so because they are elderly.

Guidance is given in the Community Health Council (Amendment) Regulations 1990 about the need for a consumer-orientated strategy among authorities, and it says:

"The principle of making the NHS more responsive to the needs of the consumer is central to the reforms announced in 'Working for Patients'."

It goes on:

"True consumer involvement is more than just a consultation exercise to 'rubber stamp' a decision that a DHA has, in effect, already taken. It involves DHAs in taking the initiative in forging links with their local communities in advance, before there are controversial plans in the offing; this will be best achieved by developing a shared understanding"— among other things, there being consultation on substantial developments or variations in services. I suppost that Bolton district health authority argues that the change was not substantial, and, no doubt because it is a grey area, it will try to avoid the responsibility of acting in the way suggested. But if we are to build up confidence in the NHS, we must go further than simply following what might be described as the legal regulations. A body —such as the district health authority in this case—that has acted with such arrogance does much to destroy the faith in the NHS of the people of Bolton.

I would not have pressed for today's debate but for the fact that we are due to recess for the summer, and some important questions must be answered. As there is no allocation in this year's estimates for the upgrading of Hulton Lane hospital, we must be told what the upgrading will involve and how much will be spent. Blair hospital in Bolton, another continuing care facility for the elderly has been closed and about £500,000 is expected from its sale. Will any of that money be used for upgrading Hulton Lane hospital? As a result of the premature closure of H1 ward, £280,000 was saved by the authority. Will any of that be used for the upgrading?

Precisely what proposals does the district health authority have? All the goodwill and sympathy in the world will not provide one bathroom in Hulton Lane hospital. Answers to such questions are vital because it has only recently been announced that Bolton hospitals will be going for trust status, and trusts vary from one part of the country to another. The key point is that they are commercial enterprises. Their aim is to be profitable, and once an enterprise changes to a commercial basis, its facilities move along those lines. Even if that does not happen immediately, as the years pass pressure for that activity grows.

Beds for the elderly in need of continual care are a financial liability. It becomes increasingly necessary to ask, now that applications are being made for trust status, what will be the position of long-stay elderly people in Bolton? Those key questions transcend the closure of just one ward. We must ask whether the closure of Blair hospital and H1 are the beginning of a movement, which began without statutory consultation, to remove continuing elderly care from the people of Bolton. If not, what are the district health authority's detailed proposals for the facilities that they will provide? What will they be and how will they be financed? What assurances do we have that, if the NHS trust is approved, it will carry over commitments and obligations made by the district health authority to the people of Bolton? What machinery exists to ensure that those commitments, if made, will be honoured?

It is important to know how the directors of the trust will be appointed and paid and where they will come from. Will their remuneration and position depend on making the hospital profitable or looking after the health of everyone in Bolton, whether young children or long-stay elderly patients?

Those questions must be asked because they go to the fundamental conception of the health service provided in Bolton. Will the remuneration of directors depend on the profitability of the hospital or the hospital's service to the people of Bolton? It is important that, in a free and democratic society, we have adequate consultation so that people's views can be taken into account. The citizens of Bolton should have as much say in the future of their hospitals as any official or board of directors.

Ultimately, the most vulnerable people are the elderly, many of whom had no chance to contribute to private insurance schemes. Most of them contributed during all their working lives to the national health service. They expected—not unjustly—that at the hour of their greatest need the state would provide the facilities to look after them when they could not look after themselves and have no relations who could look after them. Those ideas are, unfortunately, changing, but that is all the more reason for requiring discussion and consultation and explanations before arbitrarily deciding to close a ward or hospital facility. Above all, we depend on the dedication of our nursing staff and doctors.

It is worrying that many consultants and nurses say that they should not talk to Members of Parliament because their jobs could be in jeopardy. My district health authority never refuses to give me information—provided I phrase the question correctly and, in effect, know the answer before I ask it. There must be much more consultation. I am arguing not along political lines but for the best future of the people of Bolton. To that extent, my speech may be highly political, but all hon. Members owe their constituents the best and most caring health service possible, and that requires open consultation with the community and its elected representatives.

2.50 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health (Mr. Tim Yeo): I am glad to have the opportunity to respond to the hon. Member for Bolton, South-East (Mr. Young) and to congratulate him on bringing before the House the proposal to change the use of ward H1 from continuing care for the elderly to gynaecology services at Bolton general hospital. I know that the hon. Gentleman is interested in securing the welfare of all his constituents and is concerned about the frail elderly. I agree that they are among the most vulnerable members of society. I am also aware that the hon. Gentleman has had a personal involvement with Bolton general hospital in recent months.

I have listened to him with interest and recognise that he has much local knowledge. He shares with the chairman of Bolton health authority, Tom Taylor, a concern that Bolton gets the best available care from the national health service. The health authority is striving to improve the health care of all Bolton residents.

The proposal at issue is part of a process completely to reshape hospital services in Bolton. At the heart of the process is a massive investment by the Government in the local acute hospital that will take it into the next century in the best possible shape.

The broad strategy in Bolton is based on spending £45 million on a regeneration of Bolton general hospital and on concentrating long-stay continuing care for the elderly at Hulton hospital, which is also in Bolton. The genesis of the proposals goes back to November 1988 when the North Western regional health authority asked every district health authority in the region to carry out a strategic planning exercise covering the following 10 years. That exercise was known as Mereworth and Bolton's document was accepted by the regional health authority. As a consequence, the major development at Bolton general hospital costing some £45 million was approved.

For elderly services, the strategy had two aims: first, to provide some 120 beds for continuing care; and, secondly, to locate these in a single hospital. That would benefit elderly patients because they would not be competing for acute services on the same site, and the services could be managed more effectively. There seems to be a broad consensus in support of that overall strategy, which includes the local community health council. Hulton hospital has been chosen to accommodate these elderly patients. It is against that background of broad agreement that we are debating the important step of implementing the strategy.

As I have explained, the health authority aims for 120 continuing care beds. There are presently 146 such beds—72 at Bolton general hospital and 74 at Hulton hospital. Figures from the health authority's consultation document suggest that, for some time, many of these beds have been empty, suggesting, of course, that there are more beds than patients who need them. The proposal to change the use of H1 ward would reduce the number of continuing care beds at Bolton general hospital by 24, leaving a total of 48 beds on that site.

With the 74 beds available at Hulton hospital, the overall total of continuing care beds within Bolton health authority would be 122, which is broadly in line with the long-term target. I understand that continuing care patients already at Bolton general would not be moved but that new admissions would be made to Hulton hospital. I understand that plans are now in hand to upgrade the facilities for continuing care patients at Hulton.

I hope that that makes the background clear. I assure the hon. Gentleman that money has been allocated both this year and next year for upgrading at Hulton. As he said, there is to be a meeting tomorrow at which the longer term allocations are likely to be discussed.

The hon. Member made some remarks about the consultation on the changes. The process of consultation is fundamental to the Government's health strategy, and extensive consultation has taken place elsewhere on the establishment of national health service trusts and also when larger district health authorities are created to improve the ways in which the health needs of patients are assessed and met. Similarly, the guidance issued by the Department of Health makes it clear that the consultation must be a real process. Adequate time must be provided and there must be a wide opportunity for local interests and users to express their views.

Consultation is therefore an integral part of the management process. Many people could speak with knowledge about the situation in Bolton. As the hon. Member has demonstrated today, the House is also one of the arenas in which local issues can be aired. The process of making the health service more responsive to the needs of its consumers is central to the Government's reforms.

Setting up national health service trusts to run hospital services allows health authorities to concentrate on obtaining the best possible services for the residents of their area. I recommend that the hon. Gentleman encourages local people to support the health authority's expression of interest in becoming a fourth wave NHS trust. The trusts remain within the NHS; they are not commercial operations, although they must be efficient and businesslike, in the interests of the patients whom they serve.

There is a well-established process for scrutinising applications for trust status, and the health authority retains a statutory duty to provide for all the health needs of the population. The departmental guidance is clear. Consumers and community health councils, which act as consumers' representatives, must be consulted about any controversial plans. I share the hon. Member's concern that consultation on the change of use of ward H1 took place after the patients were transferred. That is outside the spirit of the consultation process. I shall write to the chairman of the health authority stressing how imperative it is that every effort is made to secure local agreement for the changes.

There has been an element of misinterpretation. A good deal of discussion took place following the publication of the broad strategy document in 1989, and following that discussion there was a consensus among interested parties that the proposed strategy was right for Bolton residents. The health authority took that to mean that component changes within the overall strategy would not be subject to formal consultation procedures. That, I believe, was a mistake—but it has been corrected and a consultation document was issued in April.

Since then the community health council seems to have acknowledged that the proposal to close the beds is consistent with the strategy. The consultation paper was issued to 49 individuals and representative bodies, and I understand that nine responses have been received.

I sympathise with the sense of unfairness when a change of use takes place before the outcome of consultations is known. That is unsatisfactory. However, the process has now been completed. On the whole, decisions on levels of service should be made locally. Occupancy levels for long-stay beds for the elderly are apparently low, and it is not in the best interests of patients that such a situation should continue. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will acknowledge that the health authority has a record of careful planning.

As I have said, the community health council is not pressing for the ward to be reopened, but its acquiescence to the proposal is contingent on the introduction of a clear plan for upgrading Hulton hospital. I understand that the health authority has such a plan, which will be considered tomorrow.

If, after tomorrow, the CHC presents an objection to the change of use, that must be referred to the regional health authority. If the regional health authority supports the district, the matter will come to the Secretary of State for consideration.

Mr. John McAllion (Dundee, East): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. We are now almost in the final minute of the Session, and the Government continue to treat Scotland and Scottish Members of Parliament with contempt, refusing to make a statement to the House on the privatisation of Scottish water.

As representatives of Scottish constituencies, we appeal to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, to use the office of the Chair to protect the interests of our electors by insisting that a Minister comes to the Chamber and makes an announcement to Scottish Members about what the Government intend to do about Scottish water. Otherwise we, as ordinary Members of the House, will be forced to do whatever we can to ensure that the House does not adjourn until the Government have made a clear statement of their intentions on the privatisation of Scottish water.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Geoffrey Lofthouse): Order. The occupant of the Chair is in no position to insist that a Minister comes to the House. As I have already explained to the House——

Mr. George Galloway (Glasgow, Hillhead) rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have already explained the position to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Hillhead (Mr. Galloway). I have received no information to the effect that any Minister intends to make any such statement, and I think that it is unlikely to happen now. Mr. Yeo.

Mr. Dennis Canavan (Falkirk, West): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Is it not possible, even at this eleventh hour, for you to send for a Minister to come and make a statement, bearing in mind the contempt which the Government obviously have for Parliament and for the people of Scotland? The Government did not even receive a mandate from the people of Scotland, especially not for the proposal to privatise Scotland's water——

It being Three o'clock, MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER adjourned the House, without Question put, pursuant to the Resolutions [3 July and 9 July], till Monday 19 October.

Monday 6 July 1992

TRANSPORT

Expenditure

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the expenditure from his Department by standard regions, showing Greater London as a separate region, for each year from 1987-88 (a) at current prices and (b) at 1987-88 prices.

Mr. Freeman: Estimates of general Government expenditure on transport by standard region for the years 1988-89 and 1989-90, the last two years for which information is available, are given in appendix E of "Public Expenditure Analyses to 1994-95: Statistical Supplement to the Autumn Statement", Cm. 1920. The figures for 1987-88 appear in appendix F of the prior year's publication, Cm. 1520.

The figures are produced only on a cash basis and Greater London expenditure is not separately identified from that of the south-east region.

Ocean Hound

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to detonate or otherwise destroy the wreck of the Brixham Trawler Ocean Hound which currently lies on the ocean bed off the Dover straits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Trinity House has the responsibility for ensuring that wrecks do not constitute a danger to navigation. It is aware of the sensitivity of this case and has no plans to detonate or otherwise destroy the wreck of the Ocean Hound. I understand that work will be limited to the removal of about 3 m of the vessel's mast and will be undertaken with the least possible disturbance to the wreck.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mr. Chakufwa Chihana

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Malawi concerning Mr. Chakufwa Chihana, an international trade union official, detained in Malawi.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: In April we initiated a joint EC demarche calling on the Malawian Government for Chakufwa Chihana's immediate release. We continue to take every opportunity to press the Malawian Government for Mr. Chihana either to be released or charged and brought to trial.

Subsidiarity

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in which areas he assesses powers will be diverted from the European institutions back to the nation states under the principle of subsidiarity.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The principle of subsidiarity states that the Community should take action

"only if and in so far as the objectives of the proposed action cannot be sufficiently achieved by the member states".

The Lisbon European Council set in hand urgent work on the procedural and practical steps to implement this principle. The Commission and the Council will report to the European Council in Edinburgh.

Tibet

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will seek to persuade the Chinese authorities to admit the delegations from Austria, the United States Senate and Australia, to investigate alleged human rights violations in Tibet; and whether he will also seek agreement for a delegation from the United Kingdom to visit Tibet for this purpose.

Mr. Goodlad: It is for the Governments concerned to approach the Chinese authorities. They have agreed to receive a human rights delegation led by Lord Howe later this year. Timing, itinerary, and other details have yet to be decided.

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about violations of the freedom of religion in Tibet; and how many monks and nuns have been killed, detained and sentenced to terms of imprisonment for political offences in each of the years 1989, 1990, 1991 and 1992 to date.

Mr. Goodlad: Information of this kind comes mainly from the findings of organisations such as Amnesty International and Asia Watch. We have no independent corroboration of these disturbing reports. We take every opportunity to express to the Chinese our deep concern about human rights abuses in China, including Tibet.

Nigeria

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement about recent violations of human rights in Nigeria, including the riots in Kaduna, during the week beginning 17 May.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Nigerian Government are aware of the importance we attach to human rights. We raise with them any serious violations such as the recent arrest and detention of human rights activists. We regret the loss of life in the riots in Kaduna state in May which were the result of a dispute between two ethnic groups. We understand that order has now been restored.

Mr. Salman Rushdie

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations have been made to the Iranian authorities over the declaration regarding Mr. Salman Rushdie; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The fatwa against Salman Rushdie is an infringement of his fundamental rights as a British citizen. We have made this clear to the Iranian authorities on many occasions. We have also made clear to him that we deplore the recent statement by the Iranian parliament.

Indonesia

Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will cancel the invitations to three officers of the Indonesian army to attend courses at the Royal Military College of Science, in view of Indonesia's record on human rights.

Mr. Goodlad: No. We do not believe that the cancellation of this form of educational assistance would help the human rights situation in Indonesia.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Queen's Counsel

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the criteria used by the Lord Chancellor in recommending to Her Majesty the appointment of Queen's Counsel.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor recommends the grant of practising silk only to those practitioners who hold full rights of audience in the High Court or the Crown court, who are considered to be sufficiently senior—normally of at least 10 years' standing—and who have reached an appropriate level of professional eminence and distinction as advocates. The Lord Chancellor also takes account of the numbers of new silks appropriate in the different fields of practice. In addition, the Lord Chancellor recommends a small number of particularly distinguished lawyers for the award of Queen's Counsel honoris causa.

Legal Aid

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the amount of legal aid owed to solicitors for completed work at the latest date for which figures are available; if he will estimate the average length of time between the date on which payment is claimed by solicitors and the date on which payment is made to them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Information is not available in the form requested. However, the Legal Aid Board publishes in its annual report targets and performance for the time taken to process legal aid bills from receipt in the area offices to payment being made. Targets are also published in the Court Service annual report for payment of criminal legal aid bills in the higher courts. As at March 1992 the targets—set out in the table—were all being met or exceeded apart from in the south eastern circuit central taxing team where special measures are being taken to reduce the backlog.

Civil bills: 65 per cent. paid within six weeks of receipt.
Magistrates' court bills: 80 per cent. paid within six weeks of receipt.
Other legal aid fund bills: 90 per cent. paid within six weeks of receipt.
Crown Court taxations: 70 per cent. paid within four weeks of being lodged.
Central taxing teams: 75 per cent. paid within three months of being ready to tax.

It should be borne in mind that, except where standard fees are in force, time has to be allowed for the claim submitted to be given full and detailed examination by way of taxation by the court or assessment by the Legal Aid Board before final payment can be made.

WALES

Youth Training

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of those leaving (a) YTS and (b) employment training schemes in each training division in Wales (i) entered employment, (ii) entered further education and (iii) were subsequently unemployed; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since the scheme's inception.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is contained in the tables.

Regional Policy

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make a statement on his policies concerning assisted area status in Wales;

(2) if he will make a statement on regional policy in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: A review of the assisted areas map in Great Britain was launched on 9 June. My Department has issued a consultation document, jointly with the Department of Trade and Industry and the Scottish Office, to interested organisations in Wales. The objectives of the Government's regional policy will continue to be to reduce regional imbalance in employment opportunities and to encourage the development of indigenous potential within the assisted areas on a stable, long-term basis. The needs of all areas will be carefully taken into account.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list each of the assisted areas in Wales; and what was the number of unemployed in each area for each year since 1989.

Mr. David Hunt: The assisted areas in Wales, along with the numbers unemployed in each area since May 1989, are shown in the table:

Council Responsibilities

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what further plans he has to assist Welsh district and borough councils to meet their responsibilities concerning (a) economic development, (b) environmental health and (c) refuse disposal.

Mr. David Hunt: It is for the local authorities concerned to decide how to discharge these, and indeed their other, responsibilities, taking account of such guidance as my Department may issue from time to time.

Inward Investment

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will give figures for inward investment into Wales from (a) north America, (b) Japan and the far east and (c) Europe classified by greenfield investment, joint ventures, non-United Kingdom company purchase of United Kingdom company, and re-investment for each year since 1987 measured by job numbers and project numbers; and if he will express such figures as percentages of the United Kingdom total for that year;

(2) if he will give figures for inward investment into Wales separately from (a) north America, (b) Japan and the far east and (c) Europe for each year since 1987; and if he will express each figure as a percentage share of all inward investment into the United Kingdom measured by (i) numbers of individual projects and (ii) jobs secured and created.

Mr. David Hunt: I will write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible and place a copy in the Library of the House.

Council Housing

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many houses have been built by local authorities in Wales since 1981.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Between January 1981 and April 1992, a total of 13,669 local authority dwellings—6,904 houses and 6,765 flats—have been built.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest estimate of council house waiting lists in Wales; and what was the comparable list in 1981.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not centrally available.

Unitary Authority, Cardiff

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what boundaries he is intending to set for the new unitary authority based on Cardiff.

Mr. David Hunt: I am at present consulting on the boundaries appropriate for all the unitary authorities to be established in Wales, including an authority based on Cardiff. I will be announcing decisions in a White Paper later this year.

Sports Council

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many of the 15 recommendations of the Sports Council for Wales have been (a) accepted in full by the Commonwealth Games Council for Wales, (b) accepted in part and (c) rejected in respect of the organisation and funding of participation of Welsh teams at Canada and beyond.

Mr. David Hunt: I understand that the Sports Council for Wales considers that only three of the recommendations contained in its report on the management and administration of the Welsh team in Auckland in 1990 have been implemented in full. The council believes that some movement has been made on other recommendations, but not to the extent that it believes to be necessary.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Agencies

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody), Official Report, 23 June, columns 117-20, he will indicate for each of the executive agencies listed, the numbers of civil servants employed in all predecessor organisations.

Mr. Waldegrave: This information is not held centrally. Figures showing the allocation of staff and work within Departments prior to an agency's launch are normally only held by individual Departments.

Citizens Charter

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the citizens charter in relation to the wearing of name badges by civil servants; what percentage of civil servants now wear name badges; and if he has any plans to change this percentage.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have made good progress in implementing the citizens charter White Paper commitment on name badges. Most civil servants are happy to wear name badges, and the majority of civil servants who deal directly with the public now wear them, except where there is a real threat to their safety. The Employment Service, where the 38,000 staff who deal directly with the public now wear name badges, is a good example. We will continue to encourage all civil servants who deal with the public to wear name badges.

Her Majesty's Stationery Office

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to make HMSO publications available on computer files; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: HMSO actively pursues viable opportunities for publishing official material in computer form, including working in concert with private sector firms in the information industry, in the spirit of the tradeable information policy. Currently available products include:

On CD-ROM (Compact Disc—Read Only Memory):

Statutory Instruments from 1987—published six-monthly.

DTI United Kingdom Register of Quality Assessed Companies—published quarterly.

Civil Service YearBook—published annually.

Catalogue of United Kingdom Official Publications—published quarterly.

As Data-Only Files on Magnetic Tape or Disc:

Customs & Excise Tariff (magnetic tape)—published monthly.

Standard Methods for Measurement (floppy disc)—available for purchase on request.

Specified Acts and Statutory Instruments (tape or disc)—available for purchase on request.

The Budget (tape or disc)—available for purchase on request.

The Birthday and New Year's Honours List (tape or disc)—available for purchase on request.

Sections of the House of Commons Vote Bundle (tape or disc)—bespoke daily service, on request.

Other Non-Parliamentary Publications which have been typeset by computer—available for purchase on request.

As floppy disc supplements to printed publications:

Neighbourhood Renewal Program.

SLOPE (Stability Calculation facility for Surveyors).

Annual Review of Government funded Research and Development.

Forthcoming Products include:

On CD-ROM

Full text of Commons Official Report—to be published three times per year.

Full text of current HSE publications and related legislation—to be published six monthly.

Current taxation legislation and related material—to be published three or four times per year.

On floppy disc:

United Kingdom VAT Legislation and regulations and related European Commission Directives Technical procurement information standard for computer communication systems (GOSIP).

As floppy disc supplements to printed publications:

Companies Assisted Standard Occupational Classification.

Structural Systems Analysis and Designs Methods (SSADM).

Market Testing

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to announce the detailed programme for market testing for each Department following the reviews which have recently been undertaken as a result of "Competing for Quality".

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East (Mr. Paice) on 22 June 1992, at column 102.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Disabled Employees

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many and what percentage of officers in grades 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 respectively and overall in his Department are registered disabled people.

Mr. Nelson: There are no officers registered as disabled people in grades 1 to 7 in the Treasury. There are 30 Treasury staff who are registered disabled, this proportion representing 1 per cent. at 1 June 1991, the latest date for which figures are available. The Department employs a number of people with disabilities who have chosen not to register as disabled.

Venture Capital

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide a table of expenditure of venture capital availability by standard region by (a) number of companies and (b) level of expenditure for each year from 1985.

Mr. Nelson: The British Venture Capital Association collects information on venture capital activity by its members. The latest available figures, by standard region, are as follows:

Financial Services

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has for reviewing the working, structure and adequacy of the system of self-regulation set up by the Financial Services Act 1986, the Lloyd's Act 1981 and the Companies Act 1989; and what proposals he has for an independent statutorily based public regulatory commission.

Mr. Nelson: I keep the working of the Financial Services Act and the provisions of the Companies Act 1989 which are my responsibility under review. The Lloyd's Act 1981 and other parts of the Companies Act 1989 are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Excheuqer what information he has on the number of complaints to and disciplinary actions taken by, each self-regulatory organisation for the two most recent available annual periods.

Mr. Nelson: This is a matter for the Securities and Investments Board.

Carbon Tax

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his answer on 9 June to the hon. Member for Ludlow (Mr. Gill), Official Report, column 83, if he will list those industries which he estimates will increase employment as a result of a carbon tax; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: The impact of a carbon tax on employment in specific industries would depend on the coverage and rate of the tax, the use made of the revenues raised and the extent to which similar measures were implemented in other countries.

Saztec Philippines Inc.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Treasury contracts have been let to Saztec Philippines Inc. in each of the last five years; what was the nature of the contracts; what was their combined value; and what was the total estimated saving to the Treasury as a result of letting those contracts.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury has not let any contracts to Saztec Philippines during the last five years.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the proportion of the public sector borrowing requirement which is represented by additional expenditure due to the recession.

Mr. Portillo: While it is very difficult to make accurate assessments of the impact of the cycle on Government expenditure, my predecessor told the Treasury and Civil Service Committee that of the increases in expenditure for 1992-93 announced in the 1991 autumn statement "around £5 billion could be directly attributed to the cycle".

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps were taken to ascertain the profitability of businesses in the area before valuation for uniform business rates on commercial property in west Worthing were made by the Inland Revenue.

Mr. Lamont: Rating valuations are based on rental values at 1 April 1988 and the valuation officer at Worthing sent out forms of return requesting rental information. In the case of specialised properties which were valued by reference to accounts, information about trading receipts was also requested, and this was followed up with requests for actual accounts in appropriate cases.

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many appeals against uniform business rates valuations remain to be decided; and when he expects initial appeals against valuations to be completed.

Mr. Lamont: The total number of 1990 rating list appeals outstanding at 31 March 1992 was 624,091 of which 409,000 were initial appeals. The target date for clearance of the initial appeals is 31 March 1994.

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what criteria are used by the Inland Revenue when valuing commercial properties for uniform business rates purposes.

Mr. Lamont: Valuation officers are required to determine the rateable values of commercial properties having regard to the provisions of the Local Government Finance Act 1988. An estimate has to be made of the rent at which the property might reasonably be expected to be let from year to year based on levels of value at 1 April 1988, and all the factors which might affect this figure need to be considered.

Car Taxation

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to alter the current tax regime to ensure lower taxes on fuel-efficient cars.

Sir John Cope: I note this suggestion for my right hon. Friend's next Budget. The excise duty on road fuels already encourage motorists to buy more fuel-efficient cars.

Inheritance Tax (Exemptions)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list each county or region where there are (a) six cases, (b) seven cases, (c) eight cases, (d) nine cases and (e) 10 or more cases where conditional exemptions from inheritance tax and capital transfer tax has been granted, giving the number of cases in each of those counties or regions; and in how many counties or regions there are (i) five cases, (ii) four cases, (iii) three cases, (iv) two cases, (v) one case and (vi) no cases.

Mr. Dorrell: A detailed breakdown for all conditional exemptions from inheritance tax or capital transfer tax by county or region is not readily available.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will place in the Library a copy of the list, "Access Deals", for works of art where tax exemptions have been given.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 3 July 1992]: A copy of the list containing details of those works of art which have been conditionally exempted from inheritance tax and which are either not on display in houses or rooms open to the public or on long term loan to a public collection is held by the National Art Library in the Victoria and Albert museum. Additional copies are held in Edinburgh, Cardiff and Belfast. The list is freely available for inspection by members of the general public during opening hours.

As the list consists of about 1,400 pages and requires regular updating and amending and as a copy of the list is already available for inspection in the National Art Library, I have not placed a copy in the library.

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what provisions govern the access of members of planning boards and elected members of local authorities to information about the proposed land management plan in cases where inheritance tax exemption is being considered.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 2 July 1992]: Where inheritance tax exemption is being considered, a land management plan is prepared by the landowner. The appropriate heritage advisory agency consults the local authority or national park authority on the proposed plan. The planning authority is, therefore, aware of the exemption.

In many cases the heritage advisory agency will, with the agreement of the landowner, ask the local authority or national park authority to act as its agent monitoring that the landowner complies with the tems of the agreed land management plan. In these cases the local authority or national park authority is required to ensure that the tax confidentiality of the owner is observed.

Landowners (Tax Exemption)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 30 June, Official Report, columns 469-70, what is the minimum number of designations in a county which he is prepared to identify in answers to parliamentary questions.

Mr. Dorrell: To protect taxpayer confidentiality in respect of conditional exemption, information would not be provided about the number of designations in a county where this was under five. As I explained in my reply to the hon. Member on 30 June, at columns 469-70, information on the number of conditional exemptions for land in each county is not readily available.

Correspondence

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he received the letter, dated 9 June from a constituent of the hon. Member for Stockton, North, Dr. R. C. Turnock; and why he has not sent an acknowledgement.

Sir John Cope: Dr. R. C. Turnock's letter was received on 15 June. An acknowledgement was sent to Dr. Turnock on 3 July and a full reply will be sent as soon as possible.

Bingham Inquiry

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to publish the evidence given to the Bingham inquiry with the report.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 10 July 1992]: Lord Justice Bingham's report will be published subject to such restrictions as may be needed to avoid prejudicing any criminal proceedings and subject to the provisions of the Banking Act 1987. There are no plans to publish the evidence that is not reflected in the report.

Financial Services Division

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statment on the aims of the financial services division recently transferred from the Department of Trade and Industry; how many officials of each grade were transferred from the Department of Trade and Industry into the Treasury; and what changes he proposes to the staffing level.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 30 June 1992]: The aim of the financial services division, which has been renamed securities and investment services group, is to maintain and develop a good regulatory system for financial services which provides an appropriate level of investor protection, fosters the integrity of the markets and encourages international competitiveness. It is also concerned to secure the removal of barriers to fair and free competition in the provision of financial services in all important markets. A total of 49 staff were transferred from the Department of Trade and Industry. A breakdown by grade is given in the table. I do not propose to make any changes to the staffing level at present, but I will keep this under review.

Foreign Prison-Made Goods Act 1897

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what guidance he has issued to Her Majesty's Customs and Excise on the Foreign Prison-Made Goods Act 1897, amended in 1988; and when the last prosecution was made under this Act.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 3 July 1992]: No guidance has been issued to Her Majesty's Customs and Excise on the Foreign Prison-Made Goods Act 1897. There is no record of any prosecution having been brought by Customs and Excise under this Act.

Stamp Duty

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what written representations he has received on the reintroduction of stamp duty for house sales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 1 July 1992]: I have received a number of representations on this matter. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer decided in December to limit the increase in the stamp duty threshold to a period of eight months. The Government have no plans to change that decision.

EDUCATION

Mentally Handicapped Students

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what consideration has been given to the allocation of funds to private institutions for the mentally handicapped under the Further and Higher Education Act 1992;

(2) if decisions regarding the distribution of funds for private institutions for the mentally handicapped under the Further and Higher Education Act 1992 will be made by local or central authorities;

(3) what estimate he has made of the number of mentally handicapped students who are likely to qualify under section 4 of the Further and Higher Education Act 1992.

(4) what arrangements will be made to provide payment to private educational institutions under the Further and Higher Education Act 1992.

Mr. Forman: The Further and Higher Education Act 1992 provides for the further education funding councils to secure provision for students with learning difficulties in independent institutions where appropriate, and to meet any fees charged. Local education authorities continue to have discretion to arrange and fund such placements. In a circular dated 29 June, the further education funding council unit has set out an initial approach to placement arrangements. The circular seeks information on numbers of placements and the associated costs.

Relocation

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to relocate civil service posts in his Department to Darlington.

Mr. Forman: The Department has plans to relocate some 50 posts from London to Darlington, most of them by the end of 1992.

Special Needs Schools

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of the education budget is allocated to special needs schools at the present time; and if he will make a statement about future needs funding.

Mr. Forth: It is for each local education authority to decide how much of its budget to allocate to special needs. In 1989-90, the latest year for which information on actual spending is available, English local education authorities' net recurrent expenditure on maintained special education represented some 5·7 per cent. of their total net recurrent expenditure on education. That percentage does not include spending on special needs within mainstream schools nor on support services for special needs, for which information is not collected separately.

The Government's proposals for education spending by local authorities in 1993-94 will be announced in the autumn.

Schools (Capital Allocations)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make provision in the capital allocations to voluntary and special arrangement schools for second bids where the allocation is not entirely taken up.

Mr. Forth: The Department is monitoring this year's expenditure of capital grant to voluntary-aided and special agreement schools through returns which the local education authorities have been asked to supply in July and October. Where allocations are not being fully spent, we shall seek to redeploy the sums involved to other worthwhile capital projects at aided schools, so long as the work could be completed and grant claims made before the end of the financial year.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the average time taken in the English local education authorities to produce statements on children with individual learning needs; what plans he has to improve the time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Information for each local education authority is not available centrally. However, there is recent evidence that some authorities are failing to meet the Government's guideline that the procedures for assessment and the issue of a statement should not exceed six months. The Government have now decided that there should be comprehensive provisions for regulating the time and way in which the assessment and statementing procedures are carried out.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will designate by local authority the number of parents who are appealing against the refusal to make a statement about their child.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend is currently considering 50 appeals from parents or their advocates under section 5(6) of the Education Act 1981 against the refusal of the local education authority to make a statement of special educational needs. The authorities concerned are as follows:

Avon (2)
London Borough of Barking
Bedfordshire
Berkshire (2)
Bradford
London Borough of Brent
Buckinghamshire (3)
Bury
Cheshire (3)
Cumbria (3)
Devon

Education Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how he calculates the impact of opt-out schools on his total basic credit approval for each local education authority; and if he has any plans to change the basis of his calculation.

Mr. Forth: The determination of authorities' basic credit approvals is the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Environment. In doing so, he takes account of the distribution of annual capital guidelines to local education authorities by my right hon. Friend.

Decisions on the distribution of the capital resources available between the LEA-maintained schools and grant-maintained schools sectors take account of a number of factors including the bids made and the size and needs of the two sectors. The distribution of annual capital guidelines to LEAs takes account of the number of pupils in GM schools in each authority, and will, continue to be based on the application of national priority criteria set out each year in the LEA capital bidding letter.

PRIME MINISTER

Forests

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister, further to his speech at the Earth summit, if he will use the United Kingdom presidency to press for binding international commitments on management of forests: and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: At my initiative the EC and its member states agreed an eight point plan to follow up the Earth summit at the Lisbon Council last month. It included a proposal for establishing an international review process for the forest principles agreed at the Earth summit. We intend to take this forward during our presidency.

European Council

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what initiatives he intends to take as President of the European Council to establish greater openness and transparency in the work of the Council and of the Committee of Permanent Representatives' support role for Council meetings.

The Prime Minister: Under the rules of procedure of the Council, meetings of the Council are not public unless the Council unanimously decides otherwise. The same rules apply to COREPER. We do not intend to seek a change in the rules. However, we shall also continue to ensure that this House is fully consulted throughout the established scrutiny procedures.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister when he last met representatives of the British Nuclear Test Veterans Association to discuss compensation; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have not met representatives of the British Nuclear Test Veterans Association. I have, however, had meetings with a number of hon. Members on related matters.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 5 June, Official Report, column 655, if he will sympathetically consider any request to meet representatives of the British Nuclear Test Veterans Association to discuss compensation; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The position on compensation remains as set out in my answer of 5 June. I have no current plans to meet representatives of the British Nuclear Test Veterans Association.

Additionality

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the application of the additionality principle in the United Kingdom; and what information he has on how the principle is applied by other member nations of the European Community.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom accepts the principle of additionality as set out in Article 9 of Council regulation (EEC) 4253/88. The application of the principle by other member states is a matter for the European Commission.

Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to raise the security and physical protection measures for the transport of plutonium from the United Kingdom to Japan during his meeting with his Japanese counterpart in London on 3 July and in the subsequent Group of Seven meeting in Munich.

The Prime Minister: In my meetings with the Prime Minister of Japan I shall be discussing a wide range of issues. Responsibility for developing transport proposals rests with British Nuclear Fuels plc in association with its overseas customers. These arrangements will have to comply with international regulations.

Environmental Legislation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions were undertaken and decisions taken on the future scope of environmental legislation within the European Communities at the European Heads of State and Government summit in Portugal on 26 and 27 June.

The Prime Minister: None. But this is one of the areas of activity which will be considered as proposals are developed to ensure that the Community does not intervene where member states can act more effectively on their own.

Academic Research

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to ensure that the findings of academic research commissioned by Government Departments at public expense are published at the same time as, or as soon as possible after, they become available to Ministers.

The Prime Minister: Timing of publication must depend on the circumstances in each case.

Food Aid

Mr. Michael: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the commodities and the quantity of each commodity purchased by the European Commission for Food and purposes as outlined in his answer of 25 July 1991, Official Report, columns 781-82 (a) in 1990, (b) in 1991 and in each half of 1991 and (c) in the first half of 1992.

The Prime Minister: The available information is set out in the tables. The European Commission does not produce half-year calculations; nor are any statistics yet available for the first half of 1992.

Maastricht Treaty

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Prime Minister if it is his intention that the Luxembourg compromise concerning veto powers for the United Kingdom, France and Germany, will continue in force under the Maastricht treaty.

The Prime Minister: The Luxembourg compromise is a political agreement, rather than a legally binding text. Nothing in the Maastricht treaty conflicts with its continuing existence.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

European Arts Festival

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage why he decided to base none of the events in London in the European arts festival, July to December, in Waltham Forest.

Mr. Mellor: Even with more than 600 published events across the United Kingdom throughout the European arts festival, it was not possible to support projects in every locality. But I am delighted to tell the hon. Member that, as part of the schools and youth programme to be published later in the summer, Oily Cart will be presenting "Gobble and Gook" at Handsworth primary school on 5 November. Through the local education authority, all state schools in Waltham Forest have also been invited to take part in the schools and youth programme. A number of schools have expressed interest in doing so.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many of the arts events listed in the brochure on the European arts festival, to be held in the United Kingdom during the current presidency of the European Council, are events additional to those held on a regular basis; and what is the additional cost to the United Kingdom in sponsoring the special arts and musical events listed in the brochure.

Mr. Mellor: The events in the European arts festival fall into four categories: new initiatives, largely funded by the festival; long-held ambitions which could only be realised by the additional funding provided by the festival; partially funded projects which needed additional support to bring them to fruition; and a very small number of events which the festival has not supported, but which the organisers wished to associate with the programme because of the nature of the event. None of the major projects, for instance the touring festival tent, the visits of the great European drama companies and some of the major exhibitions, could have happened without the support of the festival.

The cost to the Exchequer of sponsoring the European arts festival is £6 million.

Specialist Libraries

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what the Government's policy is on support for specialist libraries providing services to academics and the wider community; and what plans he has to provide additional support to such libraries with specialisms in race relations.

Mr. Mellor: The Government have no specific policy for the support of specialist libraries. It is for individual Government Departments to consider the needs of applicants within their policy responsibilities and to decide whether, in the light of available resources and potential claims from similar bodies, a special grant is needed for their library or information services. The libraries in question are outside my responsibilities.

Works of Art (Exports)

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether he will list the items for which the issuing of export licences was withheld on the recommendation of the reviewing committee on the Export of Works of Art during the half year ended 30 June, specifying in each case the valuation and whether an item was exported or retained, with particulars in the latter event of the acquiring institution; whether he will list any items for which licences have been withheld but the final disposal of which is not yet decided, specifying in each case (a) the valuation and (b) the relevant time limit; and whether a press notice will be issued by his Department covering the information given in his reply, including that relating to the outcome in individual cases.

Mr. Mellor: The information is as follows:

Description of item	Valuation £	Outcome
A drawing, 'A wild boar at bay', Frans Snyders (1579-1647)	64,700	Export licence granted
A Berlin ormolu-mounted mahogany and parquetry commode, by Fiedler (c. 1875)	2,164,318	Export licence granted

A drawing, 'Christ at the Cross', by Cortona (1596-1669)	254,500	Decision deferred until after 7 August 1992
A pastel drawing, 'Portrait of Mrs. Ayscoughe Boucherett', by Sir Thomas Lawrence (1794)	83,812·50	Decision deferred until after 7 September 1992
A drawing, 'The seven acts of mercy: ransoming prisoners', by Kunst (c. 1490-after 1542)	40,650	Decision deferred until after 7 August 1992
A drawing, 'Agony in the garden', by Castello (1625-1659)	52,300	Decision deferred until after 7 August 1992

Details of the items on which decisions were deferred were given in press notices issued at the time the reviewing committee's recommendations were accepted.

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether he will list the objects and property accepted in satisfaction of inheritance tax during the financial year ended 31 March; if, in listing them, he will specify (a) the amount of tax satisfied in each case, (b) whether any offers of objects carried conditions as to destination, (c) the dates in each case of the recommendations received by him from the Museums and Galleries Commission for the acceptance of objects, (d) the total for the financial year of the tax thus satisfied and (e) how much of this total was covered in the public accounts by means of resort to the reserve in accordance with Government policy as announced on 26 July 1985, Official Report, column 779; and whether a press notice will be issued by his Department making available the complete list of acceptances during the financial year covered in his reply.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is as follows:

Item	Tax satisfied £	Conditions or wishes	Date of MGC recommendation
Augustus John portrait	105,000	Unconditional	21 May 1991
Vintage motor cycles and car	153,000	Unconditional	21 June 1991
Staham porcelain collection	77,000	Conditional	22 April 1991
8 contemporary paintings	108,920	Conditional	1 June 1991
Poele de l'Atelier by Cezanne	750,562	Conditional	28 May 1991
Upton House Chattels	484,820	Conditional	21 June 1991
Sporting paintings and silver collection	233,250	Wish for the paintings to go to the British Art Sporting Trust and silver to the Victoria and Albert museum	1 July 1991
Surface substitution by Jennifer Bartlett	64,400	Conditional	5 August 1991
Up and Out by Richard Hamilton	7,000	Conditional	6 December 1991
Hambledon Cricket Club accounts	39,120	Wish to go to the Hampshire Record Office	25 September 1991

The total expenditure for the 1991-92 financial year was £3,834,989·72. This includes a further payment for a Rubens cameo, which was accepted in 1989-90. It also includes payment for a Sevres dinner service and bas d'armoire which was accepted in 1990-91, and paid for by a call on the reserve this financial year. In total £1,144,172 was met by access to the reserve.

Press notices have already been issued on the acceptance of these items. A further notice will therefore not be issued.

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether he will specify the allocations made to public institutions in the United Kingdom during the half year ended 30 June of individual works of art and museum objects pre-eminent for national, scientific, historical or artistic interest which have been accepted in satisfaction of inheritance tax, together with information, where applicable, as to conditions or wishes expressed by testators or executors in the matter of allocation; whether he will list the works of art and museum objects which are still awaiting allocation, with the respective dates of their acceptance in satisfaction of inheritance tax; and whether a press notice will be issued by his Department in the event of any information being given in his reply which has not previously been announced.

Mr. Mellor: The information the hon. Member requests is as follows:

Item	To whom allocated	Condition/ wishes expressed
Poele de l'Atelier by Paul Cezanne	National Gallery	Conditional
Surface Substitution by Jennifer Bartlett	Tate Gallery	Conditional
Chattels at Upton House	National Trust	Conditional
Up and Out by Richard Hamilton	Tate Gallery	Conditional

Collection of drawings by Runciman	26 April 1991
Hambledon Cricket Club Accounts	16 June 1992
8 Contemporary paintings	18 February 1992
Vintage motor vehicles	28 November 1991

Press notices have already been issued announcing the allocation of these items. A further notice will therefore not be issued.

National Lottery

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the organisations that have made submissions to his Department about the proposed national lottery; and how many individuals have made such submissions.

Mr. Mellor: The Home Office and the Department of National Heritage have received responses from the following 224 organisations and individuals.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Beer Orders

Mr. Stern: To ask the President of the Board of Trade to what extent tenancies which previously provided for a renewal option after five years are automatically varied by the Beer Orders.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Beer Orders do not automatically vary existing tenancy agreements. Certain changes are required when pubs are leased by national brewers free of ties to ensure a proper arms-length relationship between tenants and their landlords.

Mr. Stern: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will re-refer to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission the offer of only a 20-year full-repairs lease to all existing Courage tenants, irrespective of the circumstances or terms of the original lease.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No. The rights of tenants under existing agreements and the terms of new leases offered to them are matters for the tenants concerned and their landlords; any dispute must ultimately be resolved by the courts.

Mr. Stern: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will review the Beer Orders.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Beer Orders, made in 1989, come fully into force from 1 November 1992. The Director General of Fair Trading is due to review them next year when their effectiveness can be assessed.

Structural Funds

Ms. Quin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement concerning his Department's views on the future of EC structural funds as they relate to objective 2 areas.

Mr. Sainsbury: Article 130[illegible]EC, reaffirmed at Maastricht, makes objective 2 areas one of the tasks of the European regional development fund. The Government will seek to ensure that they continue to receive appropriate priority.

Motor Vehicles

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the effect of inward investment on the level of imports and exports of motor vehicles.

Mr. Sainsbury: Inward investment in the motor vehicle industry in recent years has made a major positive contribution to the balance of payments and to improving the competitiveness of the industry in the United Kingdom.

The establishment of new car plants in the United Kingdom is expected to result in additional exports of 300,000 units per annum by 1995 compared with 1991.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will state the premium rates under the loan guarantee scheme for 1991-92, the income derived from premia in 1991-92 and the net cost of the scheme for 1991-92; and the number and total size of loans guaranteed in each region and nation for 1991-92.

Mr. Leigh: For most guarantees issued in 1991-92 the premium rate was 2·5 per cent. of the guaranteed portion of the loan. For guarantees of loans in the 16 inner city task force areas, the premium paid was 2 per cent.

A total of £3·211 million was derived from premiums in 1991-92.

The net cost of the scheme in 1991-92 was £27·351 million.

The number and total size of loans in each region and Nation in 1991-92 are as follows:

Region	Loans guaranteed	Value £ million
Northern	164	3·61
North West	271	5·43
Yorkshire and Humberside	171	3·36
West Midlands	193	4·76
East Midlands and Eastern	301	7·17
London	393	9·82
South East	681	17·83
South West	477	9·92
Total in England	2,651	61·90
Scotland	131	4·29
Wales	154	3·41
Northern Ireland	14	0·58
TOTAL	2,950	70·18

Computers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library a copy of the reports into computer misuse and safety-related computer systems, commissioned from Coopers and Lybrand by his Department, referred to in his predecessor's answer to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central (Mr. Cousins) 23 January 1992, Official Report, column 290; and what plans he has to publish these reports.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department has received both reports from Coopers and Lybrand. They will both be published shortly and a copy of each will be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Export Licences

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what communications his Department has had with Mr. Tim Kelsey of The Independent newspaper in regard to articles published in the paper on 22 and 23 June on possible circumvention of his Department's export control licensing procedures.

Mr. Needham: Mr. Kelsey contacted my Department's press office on a number of occasions in regard to the articles. I wrote to the editor of The Independent on 24 June pointing out that I was concerned about the allegations, that it was a criminal offence to supply fraudulent documents in support of an export licence application, and that Mr. Kelsey should provide evidence to substantiate the allegations. This has not so far been provided.

Exports

Mr. Battle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the amount of cover by the Export Credits Guarantee Department for (a) military and (b) civil exports, for each year from 1985 to 1991, inclusive.

Mr. Needham: The answer is set out in the table.

Year	Total Capital Cost Insured	Total Arms Capital Cost Insured	Total Civil Capital Cost Insured	Arms as a Percentage total business
	Values in Millions Sterling
1985	1,478	300	1,178	20
1986	1,518	252	1,266	17
1987	1,274	186	1,088	14·5
1988	1,854	623	1,231	33·5
1989	1,248	357	891	28·5
1990	1,615	553	1,062	34
1991	1,855	213	1,642	11·5
Total	10,842	2,484	8,358	23

1. The information relates solely to Project business.

Passenger Ships

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the range and criteria of schemes to subsidise the building of passenger ships available to United Kingdom shipyards; and how many such yards he expects to be eligible in 1992-93 and 1993-94.

Mr. Sainsbury: The shipbuilding intervention fund provides assistance to United Kingdom merchant shipbuilders to enable them to secure orders against competition from outside the EC. The level of grant is intended to allow yards to secure orders at what would otherwise be loss making prices but to break even on the resulting contracts. The maximum grant available for 1992 is 9 per cent. for ships costing more than £7·1 million and 4·5 per cent. for smaller ships. Grants are available for merchant vessels, including dredgers, of not less than 100 gross registered tons, fishing vessels of not less than 100 gross registered tons intended for non-Community based owner and tugs of not less than 365KW. For 1992, grants are available to all merchant shipbuilders which have built a qualifying vessel within the last three years and which were not privatised as warship builders. No decision about availability of grants for future years has yet been taken.

Contact Lens Solutions

Mr. Madden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received about the price of contact lens cleaning solutions and the public availability of such solutions; what inquiries are being made into these matters by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 2 July 1992]: On 30 April the Director General of Fair Trading made a monopoly reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission concerning the supply of contact lens solutions. The Commission will have 10 months in which to complete its investigations and report to the President.

Pyramid Selling

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to strengthen present pyramid selling regulations in the Fair Trading Act 1973 to ensure that (a) promoting companies are able to fulfil their legal obligation to refund money, where participants exercise their rights of resignation and refund and (b) participants may not be subjected to mandatory standing order or fixed payment schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 29 June 1992]: My Department has received a number of representations from hon. Members on behalf of members of the multi level marketing industry which raise the same matters as the hon. Gentleman. As yet, I am unconvinced that there is need for revision of the legislation.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Eastham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will ban the advertising of tobacco in video games where the speed at which they are played could cause the products to be subliminally advertised.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 29 June 1992]: The advertising of tobacco in video cassettes for sale or hire to the public is not permitted under the terms of the voluntary agreement between the tobacco industry and the Government. If the hon. Member has examples of advertisements or promotions which he believes are in breach of this agreement, I suggest he makes them available to COMATAS, the Committee for Monitoring Agreements on Tobacco Advertising and Sponsorship.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Husbands (Murder)

36. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Attorney-General how many prosecutions have been brought by the Crown prosecution service of women for alleged murder of husbands in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: The Crown prosecution service does not keep records in that form. The most relevant figures available relating to domestic homicides are contained in the Home Office criminal statistics for England and Wales 1990.

British National Party

37. Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the consideration being given to prosecution of the British National party in respect of its publications.

The Attorney-General: I am not aware that the Director of Public Prosecutions is currently considering the prosecution of any member of the British National party in respect of its publications.

International Trading Agreements

38. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General what is his policy towards the prosecution of those who breach international trading agreements.

The Attorney-General: Responsibility for enforcement of the law relating to international trading is shared between a number of public authorities who will apply the principles set out in the code for Crown prosecutors.

Crown Prosecution Service

39. Mr. Harris: To ask the Attorney-General what progress is being made to adopt national standards in the Crown prosecution service.

The Attorney-General: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Duncan) earlier today.

Trade Union Bill

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Attorney-General what consultations he has had with interested organisations about the points raised by the Joint Committee on Consolidation Bills about clauses 62 and 226 of the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Bill [Lords]; when these took place; and if he will list the organisations.

The Attorney-General: I have had no such consultations.

In its Report to Parliament on the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Bill, the Joint Committee of Consolidation Bills recommended that the attention of interested organisations should be drawn to the provisions of clauses 62 and 226 of the Bill and to the Committee's decision that the more concise wording and revised arrangement of the Bill was justifiable in order to improve the form of the legislation and did accurately reproduce the existing law.

In response to the Committee's recommendation, the secretary of the Law Commission wrote on 14 February 1992 to the CBI, the Engineering Employers Federation, the TUC and the Law Society drawing their attention to the provisions and to the Committee's decision. The TUC on 27 February and the Law Society on 4 March have written to confirm that they are satisfied that the revised wording does not alter the meaning of the legislation. No response has been received from the other two organisations.

In addition, the Law Commission draftsman wrote to leading practitioners in the field who agreed that the proposed text accurately reproduced the existing law.

The Joint Committee, under the chairmanship of Lord Browne-Wilkinson, reported to this House that it was of the opinion that the Bill as amended is pure consolidation and accurately reproduces the existing law.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Malawi

45. Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what have been the results of Her Majesty's Government's policy of linking aid and good government in relation to Malawi; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Since the United Kingdom and other donors agreed to restrict new non-humanitarian aid to Malawi, the Government of Malawi have released eight detainees and have agreed that the International Committee of the Red Cross may visit places of detention. We will maintain our pressure.

Child Health

46. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution the Overseas Development Administration is making to the promotion of child health both directly and through the United Nations and other international agencies.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We make a significant contribution. The Overseas Development Administration is spending some £100 million a year on health and population activities, bilaterally and multilaterally. It is not possible to provide a detailed breakdown but a substantial proportion of this aid benefits children's health.

Know-how Fund

47. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the Scottish organisations and educational institutions which are taking part in the know-how fund scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are numerous Scottish companies, voluntary organisations and educational institutions involved in the various strands of the know-how fund scheme. A list has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Overseas Aid

48. Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about the United Kingdom overseas aid programme for reaching the target of 0·7 per cent. of gross domestic product.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Government have received a number of representations about progress towards the United Nations aid target. We have said that we shall reach it as soon as possible, but we are not prepared to set down a timetable.

Overseas Development Administration

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people served in the Overseas Development Administration (a) in May 1979 and (b) currently; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The numbers of permanent Overseas Development Administration staff in post were:

	1979	1992
Overseas Development Administration Headquarters	1,375·5	1,229·3
Scientific Units (now the Natural Resources Institute)	628·5	466·2

The 1992 headquarters figure takes account of the transfer of overseas pensions work to the Overseas Development Administration from the Crown Agents in 1987, when 112 staff transferred with the work. The 1979 figure for the scientific units excludes 346 staff of the directorate of overseas surveys which was merged with Ordnance Survey in 1984.

Comparing like with like, rationalisation and efficiency measures introduced during the period have led to a reduction overall of 21 per cent. in the total staff in the Overseas Development Administration.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisons (Halal Meat)

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which prisons currently offer the alternative of halal meat (a) with every meal, (b) with more than half the meals, (c) with less than half the meals or (d) not at all.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The prison dietary scale provides for halal meat for inmates who register as Muslims, and ask to have halal meat.

The number of meals at which halal meat is offered varies from prison to prison and from day to day to take account of the changing inmate population. Detailed statistics are not maintained.

Microfiche Data

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to consult the relative trade unions and professional associations before contracting out back-record conversion of National Identification Bureau microfiche data.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This matter has already been discussed with the Home Office trade union side. It will be kept informed of further developments in accordance with the standing arrangements which are established for such purposes.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of individual convictions and individual records which are involved in the back-record conversion of NIB microfiche data; and whether the contract will cover all convictions regardless of the seriousness of the offence.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The National Identification Bureau only holds records of those who have been convicted of offences for which a term of imprisonment may be imposed. It is estimated that there are some 3 million records in the collection and that these relate to some 9 million convictions. No decision has yet been taken as to how much of this material should be back record converted.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what terms of reference have been prepared by the computer services branch at his Department for the back-record conversion of NIB microfiche data; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No such terms of reference have been prepared.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many posts in his Department would be lost as a result of the contracting out of the back-record conversion of NIB microfiche.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the results of the consultancy on the back-record conversion of NIB microfiche data.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No. Much of the information in the consultants' report is commercially sensitive.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to offering the contract for the back-record conversion of NIB microfiche data to staff of his Department.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This is one of the options being considered.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps will be taken to ensure confidentiality and secrecy in the event of contracting out of the back-record conversion of NIB microfiche data.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This is one of the matters being considered.

Brixton Prison (IRA Escapees)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is to be taken against members of special branch for their part in events leading up to the escape in 1991 of two Irish Republican Army suspects from Her Majesty's prison Brixton; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand that the chief constable of Staffordshire has received the report which he commissioned from the deputy chief constable of Nottinghamshire into allegations of special branch involvement in the escape. The report concludes that there is no evidence to warrant criminal or disciplinary action against any member of Staffordshire police. Any action to be taken on the report is for the chief constable of Staffordshire in the first instance.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proportion of claims to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board are reduced on the grounds of previous convictions of the claimant; and by how much on average they are reduced;

(2) what proportion of claims to the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board are rejected on the grounds of previous convictions of the claimant.

Mr. Jack: The latest figures available relate to 1990-91. They may be found in the board's 27th published annual report, a copy of which is held in the Library of the House. This shows that in that year the board received 50,820 applications and resolved 53,384 cases. In 1,783 cases nil awards were made because of the applicant's character as shown by his criminal convictions or unlawful conduct. In a further 696 cases reduced awards were made, but the available records do not show whether this was because of the applicants' conduct before, during or after the events giving rise to the claim or because of his character as shown by his criminal convictions or unlawful conduct. Information about the amount of any reduction made for such purposes is not recorded centrally.

Saztec Philippines Inc.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what steps he has taken to ensure confidentiality of information passed to Saztec Philippines Inc. as a result of contracting out in the past five years;

(2) how many of his Department's contracts have been let to Saztec Philippines Inc. in each of the past five years; what was the nature of the contracts; what was their total value in that period; and what was the estimated saving to his Department as a result of letting those contracts;

(3) how many persons have been laid off in his Department as a result of contracting out his Department's work to Saztec Philippines Inc. in the past five years.

Mr. Charles Wardle: No Home Office contracts have been let to Saztec Philippines Inc in the last five years.

Data Access Requests

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many subject access requests were made under the Data Protection Act 1984 to the Metropolitan police last year; and what proportion were made to criminal records.

Mr. Charles Wardle: There were 1,623 subject access applications in 1991. Of these 1,576, or 97 per cent. were made to criminal records.

Prison Service (Sick Leave)

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average sick leave figure in the prison service; how many days are lost in the 23 establishments with the worst record; and if he will make a statement on the work of the consultant and the prison headquarters team set up to examine this problem.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Figures for the whole of the Prison Service are not readily available; but the average number of prison officer days lost through sick absence in the 12 month period ending March 1992 was 13·97 days and the average number of days lost in the 23 establishments with the highest level of sick absence was 21·12 days.

An external consultant was commissioned in autumn 1991 to review the Prison Service's handling of sick absence. She found that the average sick absence rate for prison officers was not out of line with other large organisations, although there was cause for concern in some establishments. She did, however, identify a number of ways in which the management of sick absence in the Prison Service could be improved.

In response to the consultant's report, a co-ordinating group, drawn from staff at headquarters and in the field, has been set up to assess the practicality of the recommendations and to oversee their implementation. The group will concentrate action on three main areas: monitoring and reporting, training and procedures for dealing with sick absence.

A guidance document on the management of sick absence was issued to all managers in prison establishments in March 1992.

Sex Offenders

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many hours of special training are given to staff who deal with sex offenders;

(2) how many prison staff have special training in the treatment of sex offenders.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The sex offender treatment programmes currently being run in a number of prisons in England and Wales are run by multi-disciplinary teams. These include professionally qualified psychologists and probation staff and also prison officers and other grades, all of whom have considerable experience of working with prisoners, and many of whom have counselling and other relevant skills.

In addition, last autumn, three weeks specialist training was provided to 84 staff involved in running the pilot core programmes, and a further week's training was provided to 29 prison psychologists who are supporting the programme. Further courses are being run in the current financial year.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are in prison convicted of child sexual abuse.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information about the age of victims of imprisoned sexual offenders is not recorded centrally. About 200 inmates of Prison Service establishments in England and Wales on 31 March 1992 were serving sentences for unlawful sexual intercourse with a female under 16 years of age or gross indecency with or indecent assault on a child. Other inmates will, however, be serving sentences for rape, buggery and other sexual offences, and for murder, involving a sexual assault, where the victim was a child.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners convicted of child sexual abuse are receiving treatment to help them not to reoffend.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: At 1 July 1992, a total of 171 prisoners had taken part in the pilot core programmes, introduced at the end of last year by the Prison Service to address offending behaviour. Of these, 122 had been convicted of sexual offences against children.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many prisons there are schemes for the special treatment of sex offenders.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Structured treatment programmes for sex offenders are currently being run at 14 prisons and one young offender institution.

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans there are to monitor the effect of the special treatment of sex offenders.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Home Office is currently funding an independent research study by a team of criminologists and clinical psychologists of a number of community-based treatment programmes for sex offenders. The study is addressing the content of treatment programmes and how they are delivered; the short-term impact on attitudes to offending and behaviour, and the longer term impact on re-offending. Similar arrangements will be made independently to evaluate the treatment programmes currently being run in prisons in England and Wales, following completion of the initial pilots.

Prisons (Private Caterers)

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department at which prisons food is provided by private caterers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Catering services for inmates are supplied by contract caterers at Downview, Belmarsh, Bullingdon, Holme House and Woodhill prisons. The Wolds remand prison, including its catering service, is run by private contractors.

Wolds Private Prison

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide details of the inmate protests that have taken place at the Wolds private prison since it opened in April.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There have been four instances of inmate protest at HM Prison Wolds since April.

On 16 May a prisoner on morning exercise climbed onto the first floor windowsill of an unoccupied living unit. He tied himself to the window bars with a sweatshirt and stayed there for about four hours, protesting about being in prison. After he was persuaded to come down he went to the hospital to be kept under observation.

On 28 May, 43 prisoners in one living unit refused to go to bed at 2200 hours and remained in the communal living area while discussions took place with management about food distribution methods and drugs dependency treatment. During the night 39 prisoners returned to their own rooms of their own accord and four were escorted to the segregation unit. The incident finished at 0645 hours on 29 May. It was entirely peaceful throughout.

On 18 June, 28 prisoners in A unit, 12 on B unit and 34 on C unit refused to leave the association areas to go to bed at 2200 hours. The director agreed to their request for a prisoner committee comprising representatives of each unit to meet on a regular basis with prison management, and by 0130 on 19 June all prisoners had returned to their rooms voluntarily. The incident was entirely peaceful.

On 27 June, 48 prisoners in two units refused to go to their cells at 2200 hours. The sit-in was peaceful throughout in one unit and after agreement to the request for an early meeting with management and others to discuss medical provision the prisoners went to their cells at 0245 on 28 June. No specific complaints were voiced by prisoners in the second unit who caused damage of around £5,000 to furniture, recreational items and files. The incident was resolved without force with most prisoners returning to their cells voluntarily. Eight were escorted to the segregation unit. One prisoner cut his arm breaking a window and received appropriate medical treatment. The police are investigating the incident with a view to bringing charges if appropriate.

The Home Office controller or her deputy and members of the boards of visitors were present throughout on all these occasions.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the reports made by the Crown Controller into service delivery at the Wolds private prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. The controller's reports on how the contract is managed and delivered contain information that is commercial in confidence. Reports by Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons will be published and the board of visitors is free to publish its annual report.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what statistics he has as to the number of subject access requests, made to criminal records held by the Metropolitan police or the police national computer that have been made for vetting purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on this matter is not available, as applicants for subject access do not have to give their reasons.

Royal Commission on Criminal Procedure

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when it is expected that the Royal Commission on criminal procedure will report.

Mr. Jack: It is anticipated that the Royal Commission on criminal justice will report by June 1993.

Immigration (Medical Examinations)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passengers arriving at United Kingdom ports of entry during 1991 and the first quarter of 1992 were referred to port medical inspectors for examination; what are the most common diagnoses made; and how many people have been (a) refused entry (i) wholly or (ii) partly on medical grounds and for what medical reason or (b) required to report for further medical treatment after entry, and for what medical reason.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Twenty-six passengers were refused entry principally on medical grounds in 1991, and two during the first quarter of 1992. The other information requested is not available centrally.

Public Information

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 26 June, Official Report, column 344, when he expects to complete his review of the Shingle Street incident files.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The review of the files dealing with the evacuation of the civilian population from several villages in East Anglia including Shingle Street during the second world war, which the Home Office has on extended closure, has now been completed. I have decided that all the files will be opened to access in the Public Record Office as soon as possible.

Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many notices have been issued (a) in total and (b) to each airline under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987 in each quarter since January 1991; how much money has accrued as a result; and how many such notices have been contested by each airline.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is not the practice to disclose information on the record of individual airlines under the Act. The total number of notices issued to carriers—airlines and sea operators—in each quarter since January 1991 was as follows:

Quarter ending	Number of notices
31 March 1991	2,843
30 June 1991	2,759
30 September 1991	2,674
31 December 1991	2,031
31 March 1991	1,954

A total of £9·154 million was received in payments, many of which would have related to notices issued before this period. Representations were made by carriers in 4,683 cases.

Deportations

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many decisions to make a deportation order, by nationality of the potential deportee, where there is only a right of appeal under section 5 of the Immigration Act 1988 have been made in each quarter since 1 August 1988; and on what basis these decisions have been made.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's current policy on enforcing deportation decisions against genuine students who have been found to be working in breach of their conditions of entry; how many such deportation decisions have been made in each quarter since January 1991; how he would define a genuine student; and whether he will list the colleges which he would not recognise as providing courses of study for overseas students acceptable under the immigration rules.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Any overseas student who wishes to work during his free time or vacations may do so by obtaining permission from the Department of Employment. Each case in which a student is found working without such permission is considered on its merits. As required by the immigration rules, all relevant factors are taken into account before deciding whether deportation is the right course. A genuine student in this context is one who meets the requirements of the immigration rules for the grant of leave to enter or remain as student. Records are not kept in a form which would enable the number of students deported to be identified.

The immigration and nationality department keeps records of information which come to light about individual colleges, and account is taken of this by staff when dealing with applications from students. Staff are made aware of what information is available by means of internal notices which are part of staff instructions and are not published.

Citizenship

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many minor children born to a British overseas citizen parent outside the United Kingdom have (a) been registered or (b) been refused registration as (i) a British citizen of (ii) a British overseas citizen in each year since 1 January 1983.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is not available in the form requested. Minor children may apply for registration as British overseas citizens under section 27 of the British Nationality Act 1981. The numbers of grants made under this section, most of which will have been to minor children born abroad to a British overseas citizen parent, are as follows:

	Number
1983	2
1984	28
1985	64
1986	32
1987	27
1988	10
1989	29
1991	12

DNA Tests

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many DNA tests to prove family relationships for immigration purposes have been carried out under the Home Office-funded scheme since its inception, listed by country of origin; what was the average waiting period for the test and for its results; and in how many of those tests the family relationships were proved to be as claimed by the applicants.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on the number of DNA tests carried out, the results received and their outcomes is given in the table. Information on the average waiting period for a test is not available centrally. The average time taken from receipt of samples to despatch of results is about six and a half weeks.

Asylum

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for asylum were made (a) at ports of entry and (b) to the immigration and nationality department in each quarter since January 1991; how many asylum applications have been (i) decided, (ii) granted, (iii) refused, but exceptional leave granted, or (iv) refused in each quarter; and how many applications are pending at the latest convenient date.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information is given in the table.

European Constituencies

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he will ensure that the review of European constituency boundaries will be completed in time for the 1994 European elections.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There is currently no requirement for a review of European constituency boundaries to be undertaken before the 1994 European elections.

Mr. Salman Rushdie

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it remains the policy of Her Majesty's Government that adequate protection will at all times continue to be given to Mr. Salman Rushdie as long as his life is in danger.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Decisions concerning the protection provided for Mr. Rushdie are operational matters for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis based on the level of the threat and the police resources available. The necessary level of protection will continue to be provided by the Metropolitan police while the threat to Mr. Rushdie remains high.

South Wales Police

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his assessment of the current manpower needs of the South Wales police in relation to the latest crime figures.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Police force establishments are reviewed annually in the light of bids for extra police officers. Requests for increases are considered in relation to a number of criteria, including rates of recorded crime. Approvals for establishment increases for the current financial year were announced on 28 November 1991.

Police (Inquiry)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now announce the terms of reference and membership of his proposed inquiry into police responsibilities and rewards.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Together with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, I have appointed Sir Patrick Sheehy as chairman of the inquiry and Sir Paul Fox, Professor Colin Campbell, Mr. John Bullock and Mr. Eric Caines as members.

The inquiry will have the following terms of reference:

"To examine the rank structure, remuneration and conditions of service of the police service in England and Wales, in Scotland and Northern Ireland, and to recommend what changes, if any, would be sensible to ensure —rank structures and conditions of service, which reflect the current roles and responsibilities of police officers;

—enough flexibility in the distribution of rewards to ensure that responsibilities and performance may be properly recognised in changing circumstances; —remuneration set and maintained at a level adequate to ensure the recruitment, retention and motivation of officers of the right quality;

having full regard to —the principle recommended by the Edmund-Davies Inquiry that police pay should reflect the special nature of the police officers' role;

—the principles set out in the police service statement of common purposes and values;

—the need to ensure affordability and value for money in public spending.

Background

The Inquiry should take into account:—

—the results of fact-finding studies into

(i) the current roles and responsibilities of police officers;

(ii) the current manpower profiles of the police forces and the possible impact on career development of changes in police retirement policy;

—relevant recommendations by the Audit Commission;

—all work currently being undertaken relating to manpower and personnel issues, including work on police performance measures and indicators;

—developments in pay generally;

—the special and different circumstances of the Royal Ulster Constabulary."

The purpose of the inquiry is to ensure that police rank and pay structures meet the long term needs of the public for a professional, competent and effective police service in the United Kingdom. The inquiry will report jointly to me, to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. In addition to the fact-finding studies mentioned in the terms of reference, the inquiry may decide to set in hand other research which it considers necessary and desirable. We also expect it to take evidence from a wide range of bodies and individuals concerned with the police and the services they provide. It will be expected to have regard to the differing circumstances in which police officers have to carry out their duties in different parts of the United Kingdom, considering in particular the special circumstances of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and the responsibilities of the Metropolitan police in respect of other parts of the United Kingdom. The inquiry will be looking at rank structure, remuneration, including allowances as well as basic pay, and conditions of service and we expect it to make recommendations which will provide a sound basis for establishing these in a way which meets the present and future needs of the police and the public they serve.

DEFENCE

Submarine Reactor Fuel

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the scope and reasons for the new regulations being introduced to replace those covering existing used core transport packages for the movement of spent irradiated submarine fuel.

Mr. Aitken: The national regulations for the road transport of radioactive materials apply equally to used core transport packages as to other loads. The revised regulations, which came into effect last year, were a result of implementation by the UK of new International Atomic Energy Authority regulations for the safe transport of radioactive material—safety series 6.

Radioactive Materials

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many facilities operated by or for his Department store or process radioactive materials; and if he will list all notifiable radiological incidents that occurred at these sites since 1979.

Mr. Aitken: The number of sites that exceed the threshold for exemptions from the Radioactive Substances Act, 1960, is currently under review but is in the region of 160. Records of the notifiable radiological incidents under the Ionising Radiations Regulations, 1985, are held by individual establishments and units and could be collated only at disproportionate cost.

Defence Export Services Organisation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total administrative cost of the Defence Export Services Organisation in 1991-92 and projected for 1992-93, both in full and also net of any offsetting administrative charges.

Mr. Aitken: The administrative costs of the DESO were £10·2 million for 1991-92 and are estimated to be £10·9 million for 1992-93. These costs are more than offset by the revenue earned by the organisation.

Chiefs of Staff

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a statement on the procedure followed for the selection and appointment of the Chief of the Defence Staff and the chiefs of staff of the three armed services.

Mr. Rifkind: The arrangements are that the outgoing chief of staff puts to me, as Secretary of State for Defence, an assessment of the field of possible successors together with a recommendation. He will have checked that the candidates are willing and medically fit. I then take soundings, for example with appropriate officers senior in rank to the candidates, before reporting my conclusions to the Prime Minister.

Once the Government have reached a view, the approval of Her Majesty the Queen is sought.

Departmental Properties

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 2 June, Official Report, column 529, if he will make a statement on the progress of the sale to a housing association of the 170 empty dwellings owned by his Department in Plymouth.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Negotiations are continuing with the Devon and Cornwall housing association.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 2 June, Official Report, column 529, what plans he has for the remaining 106 empty dwellings owned by his Department in Plymouth for which he did not indicate plans in his answer.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: They are available for allocation to service personnel.

Eurosatory '92 Exhibition

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what equipment belonging to the United Kingdom armed forces was loaned or hired back to the company which produced it for display at the Eurosatory '92 exhibition in Paris.

Mr. Aitken: Information of this kind is not held centrally and disproportionate effort would be needed to ascertain whether any service equipment had been so loaned.

EMPLOYMENT

Trade Unions

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were in trade union membership for the latest date available; and what are the comparative figures with other EC countries.

Mr. McLoughlin: The total membership of trade unions known to the Employment Department at the end of 1990, the latest date available, was 9·9 million. Comparative figures for other EC countries are not available.

Industrial Disputes

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many days have been lost due to industrial disputes for the latest year available in local government and public services.

Mr. McLoughlin: A total of 323,000 working days were lost in local government and public services in 1991, the latest calendar year for which data are available.

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many days have been lost due to unauthorised industrial action in each year since 1989.

Mr. McLoughlin: Because of difficulties in categorising disputes, data distinguishing between authorised and unauthorised action are not routinely collected. No such information is available for the years requested.

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many days have been lost due to industrial disputes in each of the years since 1979, expressed both as an absolute figure and as a proportion of employees in employment.

Mr. McLoughlin: Data expressed as absolute figures of working days lost, and working days lost per thousand employees in employment are given in the following table and have been extracted from an article on industrial disputes published in the May 1992 edition of the Employment Gazette.

Year	Absolute figure in thousands	Working days lost per 1,000 employees in employment
1979	29,474	1,273
1980	11,964	521
1981	4,266	195
1982	5,313	248
1983	3,754	178
1984	27,135	1,278
1985	6,402	299
1986	1,920	90
1987	3,546	164
1988	3,702	166
1989	4,128	182
1990	1,903	83
1991	761	34

Equal Pay

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she intends to implement the proposals for reform of the equal pay laws recommended by the Equal Opportunities Commission.

Mr. McLoughlin: The EOC's detailed and complex recommendations are receiving careful consideration.

Legislation (Consultations)

Mr. Pope: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what consultations she has held with employers' organisations, the Trades Union Congress, individual trade unions and other relevant organisations about the proposed Employment Bill.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend and her predecessor have had discussions about these matters in the course of meetings with a number of organisations, including employers' associations and the TUC.

All such organisations are, of course, free to offer views about relevant issues. Many did so, for example, in the form of representations on proposals for further reform of industrial relations and trade union law put forward in the 1991 Green Paper "Industrial Relations in the 1990s" (Cm. 1602) and the 1992 White Paper "People, Jobs and Opportunities" (Cm. 1810).

Disabled People

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average period of assessment, counselling and guidance provided by her Department to (a) disabled people and (b) people with a mental illness for each year since 1985; if she has any plans to change this in future years; what guidelines she issues regarding the maximum length of assessment contracts; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of registered disabled people in the Chesham and Amersham constituency for the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred these questions for reply.

Training

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the budget for employment training and youth training in 1991-92 for each training and enterprise council.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested for each training and enterprise council (TEC) in England is shown in the following table.

Information for Wales is for my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Wales to answer.

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps she is taking to ensure that training and enterprise councils cater appropriately for people with special learning difficulties.

Mr. McLoughlin: TECs are obliged through their contracts with the Employment Department to ensure that suitable high quality training is available for all trainees with special training needs. This includes people with learning difficulties. TECs' business plans are examined before approval to ensure that they have included objectives and targets for helping people with special training needs.

The Employment Department's regional contract managers review TECs' achievements against objectives at regular intervals.

Inspectors of the Training Standards Advisory Service are also used by the Employment Department's regional offices to examine specific issues including special needs provision.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the budget for employment training and youth training in 1990-91 for each training and enterprise council.

Mr. McLoughlin: The allocated budgets for ET and YT for each of the approved training and enterprise councils (TECs) for the financial year 1990-91 are set out in the following table.

Individual budget figures relate to the period from the date when the TEC became operational to the end of the 1990-91 financial year.

Notes:

1. The dates when the TECs became operational are shown in brackets.
2. ET budgets exclude notional allowances (ie unemployment benefit + £10).

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the costs of the Government's youth training, employment training and employment action programmes are met by social security benefits, European social fund or her Department's funding.

Mr. McLoughlin: In 1992-93 the Employment Department expects to spend £851 million on youth training (YT), £807 million on employment training (ET) and £178 million on employment action (EA), including allowances for participants.

An estimated 47 per cent. of ET expenditure and 45 per cent. of EA expenditure is for that part of participant allowances which is equivalent to previous entitlement to social security benefits. Young people on YT are not generally entitled to such benefits.

The latest information available in respect of the European social fund (ESF) is for 1991 when £157 million was received for ET and £16 million for YT. There was no ESF receipt for employment action. Expected receipts from the ESF are taken into account in setting the total expenditure plans for ET and YT.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what plans she has to change the youth training guarantee; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she will make a statement about the youth training guarantee.

Mr. McLoughlin: There are no plans to change the YT guarantee. The guarantee provides for the offer of a suitable YT place to young people under 18 who are unemployed, not in full-time education and seeking training. The Government are committed to ensuring that the guarantee will be met.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the representations she has received from (a) training and enterprise councils (b) local education authority career services and (c) employers about the youth training guarantee.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is not available.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will publish figures of the number of young people seeking a youth training place for (i) standard regions of the Training, Enterprise and Education Directorate, (ii) training and enterprise councils or local education authority careers service areas or (iii) another convenient form, for the most recent date for which the information is available.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is not available.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will give the total number of participants in youth training for the most recent date for which figures are available and in the previous three years for Great Britain and each of the standard regions broken down by sex and those on employer-based schemes.

Mr. McLoughlin: The full information asked for is not available. The following table gives numbers of young people in training by region and gender for years ending March 1989 and March 1990, and regional totals for March 1991 and March 1992. Information about the numbers of people on youth training programmes that were employer based is not held centrally.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list as per the requirement set out in the TEC operating agreement the number of youth training starts and the number of youth training trainees in training at the end of the four-weekly period as set out in the schedule of management information for (a) the most recent period for which information is available, (b) each of the previous periods back to 1 to 26 April 1991 and (c) for each TEC.

Mr. McLoughlin: As the information requested is contained within a number of tables I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when she last met representatives of training and enterprise councils to discuss the delivery of the youth training guarantee.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment meets representatives of training and enterprise councils regularly, and the priority which the Government attach to meeting the YT guarantee is frequently discussed.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the value of the youth training allowance, or its equivalent, in every year since it was introduced expressed in both actual prices and in constant price terms for 1992-93.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is shown in the following table.

Note: The Youth Training Scheme (YTS) was replaced by Youth Training (YT) on 29 May 1990.

Bridging Allowances

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people received bridging allowance in each of the standard regions including Scotland, and in total, in each month since January 1991.

Mr. McLoughlin: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Social Services Guide

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many printing firms in Northern Ireland were invited to print the summary guide "A Charter for Patients and Clients" on Northern Ireland health and personal social services; whether this guide was printed in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The Department of Health and Social Services has an agreement for printing with Her Majesty's Stationery Office. I understand from HMSO that three printing firms in Northern Ireland were among those invited to tender for the printing of the summary guide. The summary guide was printed in Great Britain.

Factor 8

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the operation of the Medicines Act (Exemptions from Licences) (Importation) Order 1984—SI 1984, No. 673—in relation to named patient arrangements for the supply of unlicensed factor 8 preparations and other unlicensed pharmaceutical products.

Mr. Hanley: I refer to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health on 1 July 1992, Official Report column 636. Responsibility for the operation of the Medicines (Exemptions from Licences) (Importation) Order 1984 is a matter for the Medicines Control Agency.

Inter-party Talks

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his oral answer of 25 June, Official Report, columns 373-74, to the hon. Member for Newry and Armagh (Mr. Mallon) what commitment he gave on the proposed strand 3 meeting of the Northern Ireland talks in his letter of 17 June to the hon. Member for Antrim, North.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: When I wrote to the hon. Member and to the other Northern Ireland party leaders participating in the talks on 17 June I was not able to give any commitment as to whether a meeting would take place on any particular date, because discussions with the Irish Government were still continuing. I accordingly gave none. The hon. Member will recall that the question from the hon. Member for Newry and Armagh related to a "written commitment to the Democratic Unionist party that a strand 3 formation meeting would take place this week." In a letter to the hon. Member for Antrim, North and other party leaders I did, however, confirm that the British and Irish Governments both envisaged that the meeting in question would take place the following week. I added that, for my part, I hoped it would take place in the early part of that week.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Support Payments

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total amount of all forms of agriculture support payments made in 1991; and what was the average amount of support payment per farm.

Mr. Curry: The publication "Agriculture In The United Kingdom: 1991" gives details of expenditure on agriculture support—table 9.1—and the number of farm holdings—table 2.3.

[2] Includes eggs, poultrymeat, fruit and vegetables, hops, herbage seeds, dried fodder, peas and beans, fisheries and flax. Also includes expenditure on products covered by the CAP but not produced to any significant extent in the United Kingdom (olive oil, rice, wine, grape must and hemp).

[3] Payments in Great Britain are made by the Intervention Board and included in beef and veal expenditure in section (i).

[4] Payments in respect of potatoes and wool relate partly to the crop or clip of the year indicated and partly to the crop or clip in the preceding year or years.

[7] Includes the farm and horticulture capital grant schemes.

[8] Except for the Northern Ireland Agricultural Development Programme (NIADP) and the milk outgoers scheme expenditure from the Northern Ireland block is excluded.

[9] Includes loan guarantees, grants for agricultural drainage in Scotland and farm structure loans.

[10] Includes the integrated development programme for the Western Isles, the agricultural development programme for the Scottish islands and grants for crofting improvements.

[12] Receipts from the European Community (to which the United Kingdom contributes) are set out below (£ million). Receipts do not always relate to expenditure in the year in which they are received. Reimbursement of spending on structural measures (Section III) is normally a year in arrears. Receipts for 1988-89 and subsequent years reflect the arrangements for depreciation of stocks agreed at the European Council in February 1988.

[1] The provisional 1991 figures include returns on about 3,500 holdings (net) in Scotland which have been reclassified as main holdings.
[2] Land in Great Britain let out under short term lets is attributed to the lessor, but land so let out in Northern Ireland (under the conacre system) is now attributed to the lessee. This difference, which applies to both the 1986 and 1991 figures in the table, affects both the number of holdings and their average size.
[3] The numbers of holdings shown in this part of the table are lower than those presented in the "total area" part of the table because holdings without crops and grass are excluded.

Summer Solstice

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from farmers or farming organisations over damage to fences, gates, hedges, land or frightening of animals arising from the various manifestations to celebrate the 1992 summer solstice.

Mr. Curry: Neither I nor my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department, who has primary responsibility for matters of public order, has received any such representations. However, I understand that the president of the National Farmers Union recently met the Minister of State, Home Office to discuss the general problem of trespass on farm land.

Surplus Food

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the criteria applied in selecting persons or agencies empowered to distribute European Community surplus foods to certain pensioners at the time of the last distribution.

Mr. Curry: Charitable or non-profit making organisations were designated to distribute food to eligible persons if they appeared to the Agriculture Minister to be appropriate and were of a non-commercial character; already involved in the provision of goods or services to the most needy; and not concerned by way of commerce in production, wholesaling, storage or retailing of butter or beef. Preference was given to organisations providing cooked meals to the homeless or destitute, or capable of undertaking the distribution of food widely throughout their local community.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects some of the European Community's food surpluses next to be available for distribution to pensioners in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Curry: I shall shortly be announcing the arrangements for the distribution of food in the United Kingdom under the 1992 EC surplus food scheme. I have already announced that the only change to the categories of people eligible for produce would be the inclusion of recipients of the disability working allowance.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the income, or other criteria, applied to decide which pensioners qualified for a share of the European Community's food surpluses at the time of the last distribution.

Mr. Curry: The following categories of people were eligible to receive food under the 1991 surplus food scheme: the homeless and destitute and those in receipt of income support or family credit, living in welfare hostels.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food by what method, and by which agencies, the share of the European Community's food surpluses was distributed in the borough of Thurrock at the time of the last distribution.

Mr. Curry: Thurrock borough council and the South Ockenden gateway club, were designated to distribute food under the European Community surplus food scheme in the Thurrock area. Arrangements for distribution of food were made by designated organisations in accordance with the conditions laid down in leaflets LP45 and LP46, copies of which were placed in the Library of the House.

Flood Risks

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information his Department holds on coastal areas considered to be at risk of flooding; how often this information is updated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: As part of its investigations into the likely effects of sea level rise, the Department has produced maps showing areas in England and Wales below the 5 and 10 m contour, the areas most at risk from flooding. This information will be kept up to date as required. In addition, regional offices of the National Rivers Authority hold more detailed information relating to their areas.

Peak National Park

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much money has been allocated by his Department to environmentally sensitive areas in the Peak national park; and what is the nature of such projects.

Mr. Curry: The North Peak was designated as an environmentally sensitive area in 1988 and I intend to designate the South West Peak later this year. Both schemes lie within the Peak national park and aim to protect the heather moorland and other characteristic environmental features. The annual expenditure on environmentally sensitive area agreements in the North Peak is currently £735,000. I will be reviewing this scheme during the year with the aim of enhancing its environmental achievements.

Sea Fisheries

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the procedures followed for awarding the contract to build ESF Protector 3 for the Eastern sea fisheries joint committee; and what opportunities were provided for shipbuilders in the area which the new vessel will serve to compete on an equal footing with other contenders.

Mr. Curry: Expenditure by the Eastern sea fisheries committee is the responsibility of the committee and its financing local authority. The committee has sought European Community funding for the vessel and we are satisfied it has followed the tender procedure required under EC rules.

Sugar

Mr. Cann: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response he has made to the recommendation in the second report of the Agriculture Committee, Session 1991-92, on the trade gap in food and drink, as regards the sugar quota.

Mr. Curry: The Government's response to the Agriculture Committee's report on the trade gap in food and drink was published on 17 June—Cm 1982. Copies were deposited in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Cann: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek to increase the EC quota for British sugar beet production to a level equal to or exceeding the domestic consumption.

Mr. Curry: The Commission has not yet made proposals for the reform of the EC sugar regimes for beet and cane sugar: we are pressing them to do so. United Kingdom domestic sugar consumption is supplied both from sugar processed from beets and from sugar refined from cane, imported under the Lomé sugar protocol. There is no case for seeking to increase beet sugar quota to cover our consumption. However, in any review of EC sugar quotas, the United Kingdom will argue for an increase in our share of the total.

Animal Diseases

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculure, Fisheries and Food if he will list the notifiable diseases of animals.

Mr. Soames: The following diseases of animals are notifiable in Great Britain.

African Horse Sickness
African Swine Fever
Anthrax
Aujeszky's Disease
Blue Eared Pig Disease
Blue Tongue
Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy
Brucella Melitensis in Cattle
Cattle Plague (Rinderpest)
Classical Swine Fever
Contagious Equine Metritis
Dourine
Enzootic Bovine Leukosis
Epizootic Lymphangitis
Equine Encephalomyelitis
Equine Infectious Anaemia
Foot and Mouth Disease
Fowl Pest (Fowl Plague, Newcastle Disease and Paramyxovirus) in Poultry
Glanders and Farcy
Goat Pox
Lumpy Skin Disease
Paramyxovirus in Pigeons
Peste Des Petits Ruminants
Pleuro-Pneumonia in Cattle
Rabies
Rift Valley Fever
Sheep Pox
Swine Vesicular Disease (SVD)
Teschen Disease
Tuberculosis in Cattle and Deer
Vesicular Stomatitis
Viral Haemorrhagic Disease of Rabbits
Warble Fly
Sheep Scab

Mastitis

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number and percentage of (a) dairy cattle and (b) beef cattle suffering from mastitis in each year since 1982.

Mr. Soames: Mastitis is not a notifiable disease and comprehensive data are not maintained. The number of cases in all types of cattle recorded by veterinary investigation centres for the years concerned are as follows:

	Number
1982	16,021
1984	9,189
1986	7,052
1988	5,992
1989	5,959
1990	7,008
1992	2,304

Dredging

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the beaches and mudflats in England and Wales on which material dredged from ports and fairways has been used in each of the last five years and the number of tonnes deposited in each case.

Mr. Curry: The information sought is not collected centrally.

CAP Reform

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are Her Majesty's Government's plans to implement the agri-environment measures agreed as part of the May 1992 common agricultural policy reforms.

Mr. Curry: We welcome the positive environmental aspects of the CAP reform agreement. We have a year to draw up our implementation plans for the agri-environment measure and we will consult widely in doing so.

SCOTLAND

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in tabular form the waiting list for operations and procedures in each specialty for each health board area as at 31 December 1990 to 31 March 1991 and at the end of each successive quarter to 31 March 1992.

Mr. Stewart: The latest available information is set out in the "NHS Patient Treatment and Waiting Time Bulletin" for 31 March 1992, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Enterprise Allowance

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total number of applications for enterprise allowance received by each local enterprise company in the area covered by Highlands and Islands Enterprise over the last 12 months and the total number of awards made; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Highlands and Islands Enterprise is responsible for monitoring the enterprise allowance scheme within its area and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Shellfish

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland pursuant to his answer of 16 June, Official Report, column 518, what is the amount of additional resources which have been provided to the Marine laboratory in Aberdeen to assist the laboratory in its work relating to EC directive 91/492.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 2 July 1992]: The marine laboratory's ongoing programme already includes work which will be required under EC directive 91/492 and its financial provision reflects this. An additional £42,000 has been provided for 1992-93 to assist with the work involved in the classification of shellfish harvesting areas.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what additional sums of money his Department has made available to environmental health authorities to facilitate the collection and transmission of shellfish samples in pursuance of EC directive 91/492.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer of 2 July 1992]: In common with most local authority services this activity is met from the general revenues of the local authorities which are supported through aggregate external finance.

HEALTH

Abortion

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total number of abortions performed in the Wessex regional health authority under the Abortion Act 1967 since its implementation; and how many, and what percentage of these abortions, were performed in emergency to save the life of the mother.

Mr. Sackville: Wessex regional health authority (RHA) was constituted on 1 April 1974 and data on this basis are calculated from 1 January 1975 to 30 September 1991 (the latest date for which figures are available). During this period a total of 85,538 abortions have been performed under the Abortion Act 1967 in the Wessex RHA. Of these, 6 (·007 per cent.) were performed in an emergency "to save the life of the pregnant woman" (ground 5).

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total number of abortions performed in the North West Thames regional health authority under the Abortions Act 1967 since its implementation; and how many and what percentage of those abortions were performed in emergency to save the life of the mother.

Mr. Sackville: North West Thames regional health authority (RHA) was constituted on 1 April 1974 and data on this basis are calculated from 1 January 1975 to 30 September 1991 (the latest date for which figures are available). During this period a total of 318,817 abortions have been performed under the Abortion Act 1967 in the North West Thames RHA. Of these 5 (0·002 per cent.) were performed in an emergency "to save the life of the pregnant woman" (ground 5).

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total number of abortions performed in the West Midlands regional health authority under the Abortion Act since 1967; and how many and what percentage of these were performed to save the life of the mother.

Mr. Sackville: West Midlands regional health authority (RHA) was constituted on 1 April 1974 and data on this basis are calculated from 1 January 1975 to 30 September 1991 (the latest date for which figures are available). During this period a total of 354,547 abortions have been performed under the Abortion Act 1967 in the West Midlands RHA. Of these 5 (0·002 per cent.) were performed in an emergency "to save the life of the pregnant woman" (ground 5).

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total number of abortions performed in the Blackpool, Wyre and Fylde regional health authority under the Abortion Act 1967 since its implementation; and how many and what percentage of these abortions were performed in emergency to save the life of the mother.

Mr. Sackville: Blackpool, Wyre and Fylde district health authority (DHA) was constituted on 1 April 1982 and data on this basis are calculated from 1 January 1983 to 30 September 1991 (the latest date for which figures are available). The number of abortions performed in each DHA are not released as a consequence of confidentiality. There were however, during this period and under the Abortion Act 1967, a total of 7,997 abortions performed on residents of Blackpool, Wyre and Fylde DHA. One (0·01 per cent.) of these abortions was performed in an emergency "to save the life of the pregnant woman" (ground 5).

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total number of abortions performed in the Wessex regional health authority under the Abortion Act 1967 in each year since its implementation; and how many and what percentage of these abortions were performed in emergency to save the life of the mother.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is shown in the table.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will fund the development of the Quest cancer test as an alternative to the current method of cervical cancer screening.

Mr. Sackville: The Government are committed to reducing mortality from cervical cancer; that is why we introduced a national cervical screening programme. We are always willing to consider new proposals which might lead to improvements in health care and health promotion.

The Quest test for cancer has been considered in detail and an earlier application to fund a trial, assessed at the same time as 12 other proposals in the field of screening, was turned down in 1988. It is for the medical profession to decide whether to use the Quest test on the basis of published research findings.

NHS-Private Sector Co-operation

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will set out examples of co-operation between the national health service and the private health care sector of the type which her Department wishes to encourage.

Dr. Mawhinney: Detailed information is not collected centrally. We welcome cost-effective co-operation between the national health service and the independent sector. It increases the range of options available to patients, GP's and NHS managers.

Elderly People

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimates her Department has made of the numbers of elderly people requiring health care under the national health service in the years (a) 2000, (b) 2010 and (c) 2020 respectively;

(2) what long-term estimates her Department has made (a) of the cost to the NHS and (b) expenditure in the private sector of health care for people over the age of 60 years in the years (a) 2000, (b) 2010 and (c) 2020 respectively.

Mr. Yeo: Various studies have been undertaken in this area including some work done by the Department's economics and operational research division which will be published shortly in "The Health of Elderly People, An epidemiological overview: companion papers" a copy of which will be placed in the Library.

Hospitals

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) on how many occasions and in what circumstances house officers contracted to work in hospitals of the North-East Thames region, attended patients in Nuffield hospital, Shenfield in Essex over the past two years;

(2) how many consultants who have contracts with the four Thames health regions also have contracts with private hospitals and clinics;

(3) how many consultants with national health service contracts also have contracts with the Nuffield hospital, Shenfield in Essex; and for how many hours each of those consultants is contracted to work in national health service hospitals.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the standard prescription charge for each year from 1962 to the present time.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is in the table.

South-East Essex Health Consortium

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration has been given to making the South-East Essex Health Consortium a new health authority covering the areas currently served by the Southend health authority, the Basildon and Thurrock health authority and the Brentwood part of the Havering and Brentwood health authority.

Mr. Sackville: I understand that North East Thames regional health authority is reviewing the present configeration of its district health authorities. Any proposal for change would be subject to full consultation.

Consultants: House Officers

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what guidelines or advice are given to house officers employed in national health service hospitals who are invited by their consultants to accompany or attend their practices and clinics in private hospitals;

(2) what guidelines are given to consultants with national health service contracts who also have contracts with private hospitals or clinics, about the accounting of their time distributed between their two contracts, their use of national health service equipment and their direction of house officers and other national health service employees.

Dr. Mawhinney: No central guidelines are issued on these matters. However, under their terms and conditions of service, whole-time and maximum part-time consultants are expected to devote substantially the whole of their professional time to their national health service duties. In addition, a whole-time consultant must certify annually that his or her gross income from private practice does not exceed 10 per cent. of his or her gross salary.

Where private practice is undertaken by a whole-time consultant outside the national health service hospitals where he or she is contracted to work, it is to be so limited that significant amounts of the consultant's time are not spent travelling to and from private commitments.

Consultants should be aware that junior doctors practice (including house officers) may only undertake private work outside the times for which they are contracted to an employing authority.

Equipment (Unauthorised Use)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the unauthorised use of national health service medical equipment by national health service consultants in private hospitals is deemed a prima facie dismissable offence.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is for employers to decide what action to take in relation to allegations of misconduct.

Multiple Births

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give the total numbers of (a) sets of (i) twins, (ii) triplets, (iii) quadruplets, (iv) quintuplets, (v) sextuplets and (vi) septuplets born in England and Wales in each year from 1980 to 1991, (b) maternities in England and Wales in each year and (c) multiple births of each type in each year which were conceived as a result of (1) in vitro fertilisation, (2) gamete intra-fallopian transfer and (3) other forms of assisted conception.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested on multiple and total maternities is shown in the table. Figures relating to multiple births following assisted conception are contained in the reports of the Interim Licensing Authority for Human In Vitro Fertilisation and Embryology and in the report of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority, copies of which are available in the Library.

Atopic Illnesses

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of asthma and other atopic illnesses were reported this year, last year and two years ago; and how many of these were for children under 10 years of age.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally.

Cyclo-progynova Tablets

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is her intention that the dispensing of a pack of cyclo-progynova 1 mg tablets containing two different coloured sets of tablets should attract one or two prescription charges.

Dr. Mawhinney: A prescription charge is payable in respect of each quantity of a drug or appliance dispensed, unless the patient is entitled to charge exemption or remission. Cyclo-Progynova 1 mg tablets contain two separate preparations differentiated by colour and two prescriptions charges are, therefore, due when these items are dispensed. The fact that for convenience, and as an aid to patient compliance, the two preparations are supplied in one pack does not alter the patient's liability for prescription charges.

Allergies

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information her Department holds on the incidence of allergic diseases in each of the past 10 years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally.

Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the grants paid for the international work of the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation in each year since 1977 in cash terms and at constant prices; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Since its foundation in 1977, the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation (RADAR) has received a Government grant to cover its affiliation fee to the international body, Rehabilitation International (RI), and to help with the expenses of sending delegates to RI's annual assemblies. The amount of those grants in cash terms and at constant prices is as follows:

Year	Cash amount £	Constant £
1977-78	15,000	15,000
1978-79	15,000	13,529
1979-80	15,000	11,594
1980-81	16,500	10,778
1981-82	16,500	9,829
1982-83	16,500	9,177
1983-84	17,000	9,037
1984-85	18,000	9,106
1985-86	19,000	9,118
1986-87	19,000	8,812
1987-88	20,000	8,806
1988-89	22,000	9,016
1989-90	22,000	8,474
1990-91	22,000	7,865
1991-92	22,000	7,350

Retired People, Waveney

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment her Department has made of the findings of the 1991 census by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys into the numbers of retired people in Waveney and their proportion to the total population of Waveney compared with 1981; and what consequential changes to funding distribution she expects to make.

Mr. Sackville: The findings of the 1991 census will be used progressively in the allocation of national health service funds from the financial year 1993-94 onwards as the census results become available at different levels of detail. Deciding the funding of district health authorities is the responsibility of regional health authorities, applying common principles of weighted capitation funding. Health authorities' capitation-based funding routinely reflects their resident populations' age structure, because the average cost of providing health services is higher for people in some age bands than in others. The funding formula gives successively greater weight to people in age bands over sixty five. Projections of the age structure of regional and district populations (including Great Yarmouth and Waveney) which make full use of the 1991 census findings will be used in the funding distribution from the financial year 1995-96 onwards.

Dentists

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans the Government have to accredit dental laboratories.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government support the concept of self-regulation and independent accreditation. We have no present plans to accredit dental laboratories.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate the Government have made of how much of the funds paid to dentists for laboratory fees is actually paid over to laboratories.

Dr. Mawhinney: Fees for treatments which require dental laboratory work include an element estimated to be the average cost to dentists of commissioning such work. It is then for individual dentists to agree prices directly with laboratories.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will make a statement on the performance of Denplan.

Dr. Mawhinney: Denplan is a private health insurance scheme. Private arrangements are a matter for dentists and their patients. All the treatment which is necessary to secure and maintain oral health is available under the national health service.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment the Government have made of the insurance-based dental services provided in Germany and Italy.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will require all dental laboratories to conform to British Standard 5750.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will consider direct payments from the national health service to dental laboratories instead of funds going through dentists' accounts.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have no present plans to do this. This is an issue which could arise in the proposed fundamental review into the whole system of dentists' remuneration.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to replace current dentistry arrangements with a state-funded insurance system.

Dr. Mawhinney: None.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of dentists and the number of courses of treatment in (a) Darlington and (b) County Durham in each year since 1987-88.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested about Darlington is not routinely available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost for each of the five years requested. The table shows the number of general dental practitioners and the number of courses of dental treatment given in Durham family health services authority in each of the five financial years from 1987-88 to 1991-92.

Durham Family Health Services Authority

Financial year	Number of dentists[1]	Courses of treatment[2,3]
		Children	Adults	All patients
1987-88	164	115,260	223,100	338,360
1988-89	162	116,170	237,890	354,060
1989-90	162	116,450	228,410	344,860
1990-91	172	97,150	232,760	329,910
1991-92	168	42,430	257,090	299,520

[1] As at 30 September in each year, including all principal dentists and their assistants on Durham FHSA's dental list. The figures quoted are those numbers of dentists who provided the courses of treatment shown. Some of these dentists will also be on the dental lists of other family health services authorities.

[2] The numbers of courses of treatment have been taken from a 5 per cent. sample and rounded to the nearest 10.

[3] The apparent decline in the number of courses of treatment to children is misleading. Under the new dental contract from 1 October 1990, most treatment to children is given under capitation arrangements under which it is not possible to monitor all treatment to children.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what statistics she has for the dental health of the population of (a) Darlington, (b) County Durham and (c) the national average.

Dr. Mawhinney: Statistics on dental health are not collected centrally for district health authorities or counties. Information on decayed, missing and filled teeth (DMFT) among 5, 12 and 14-year-old children in Darlington is available from surveys collated by the British Association for the Study of Community Dentistry.

In 1990-91, 358 14-year-olds were examined in Darlington.
The mean number of decayed teeth was 0·54.
The mean number of missing teeth was 0·36.
The mean number of filled teeth was 1·59.
The average DMFT was 2·49.
71 per cent. had evidence of caries experience and 23 per cent. had active decay.

In 1989-90, 215 5-year-olds were examined in Darlington.
The mean number of decayed teeth was 1·01.
The mean number of missing teeth was 0·42.
The mean number of filled teeth was 0·28.
The average DMFT was 1·71.
43 per cent. had evidence of caries experience and 33 per cent. had active decay.

In 1988-89, 271 12-year-olds were examined in Darlington.
The mean number of decayed teeth was 0·18.
The mean number of missing teeth was 0·22.
The mean number of filled teeth was 0·99.
The average DMFT was 1·39.
52 per cent. had evidence of caries experience.

The latest figures available for United Kingdom are from the child dental health survey of 1983 and the adult dental health survey of 1988. In 1983, the average number of decayed or filled deciduous teeth for five-year-olds was 1·8. The average number of decayed, missing and filled teeth for 12 and 15-year-olds was respectively 3·1 and 5·9 permanent teeth. In 1988, 79 per cent. of adults had some natural teeth. Among dentate adults in the United Kingdom, the average number of missing teeth was 7·8, decayed or unsound teeth, 1·0 and filled teeth 8·4.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average earnings of dentists have been (a) in Darlington, (b) in County Durham, (c) in the northern region and (d) in England and Wales in each year since 1987-88, at current and 1987-88 prices.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested about Darlington is not routinely available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The tables show the average gross fee earnings of general dental practitioners in Durham family health services authority, Northern regional health authority, and England and Wales in each of the five financial years from 1987-88 to 1991-92, at current and at 1987-88 prices.

Average gross fee earnings per dentist

Financial year	Durham FHSA (£)	Northern region (£)	England and Wales (£)
Actual prices
1987-88	56,434	56,476	55,971
1988-89	65,134	64,725	64,377
1989-90	69,996	65,143	64,008
1990-91	81,798	73,794	70,410
1991-92	100,527	89,483	84,833
1987-88 prices
1987-88	56,434	56,476	55,971
1988-89	60,744	60,363	60,038
1989-90	61,247	57,000	56,007
1990-91	66,158	59,685	56,948
1991-92	75,988	67,640	64,125

Note: These averages relate only to earnings through fees by dentists in the population group of the Dental Rates Study Group. They exclude maternity payments, sickness payments, postgraduate education allowances and other such allowances; and they relate only to dentists who, for the year in question, were in contract for the complete financial year.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists have withdrawn from the NHS since October 1990 (a) in Darlington, (b) in County Durham and (c) in the northern region.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not available. The number of dentists on the dental list of Durham family health services authority (FHSA), and the number on dental lists in the Northern region (RHA), at 30 September 1990 and at 31 March 1992 (the latest available figures) are shown in the table. Information on the number of general dental practitioners in Darlington district health authority is not routinely collected and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

	Number of dentists
	30 September 1990	31 March 1992
Durham FHSA	144	146
Northern RHA	869	897

Hospital Treatment (Overseas Visitors)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether her investigation of the use of hospital treatment by overseas visitors has been completed; when it will be published; and when any new guidelines for staff will be reissued and published.

Dr. Mawhinney: The national health service management executive has completed its investigation into procedures for NHS hospital treatment of overseas visitors. It has confirmed that the existing guidelines are being correctly and fairly applied. We intend to reissue guidance later this year.

Southampton General Hospital

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will take steps to ensure that district health authorities using the basic medicine and neuro-surgery facilities at Southampton general hospital have sufficient funds to ensure that increases in workload may be fully funded;

(2) if she will take all steps necessary to ensure that no patients will suffer reduced access to treatment or examination at the Southampton general hospital as a result of the hospital management's need to overcome a £350,000 overspend in the first two months of the current financial year.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for the Wessex regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to write to Sir Robin Buchanan, the chairman of the Wessex regional authority, for details.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions she has had on the causes of the £355,000 overspend by Southampton general hospital in the first two months of the current financial year.

Mr. Sackville: The Department is in regular contact with Wessex regional health authority, which is keeping the situation under close review.

GPs (Equipment)

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the regulations controlling the quality and suitability of equipment carried by general practitioners on call.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are no regulations dealing specifically with the quality and suitability of equipment carried by general practitioners on call.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance her Department has issued on the equipment that on-call general practitioners should carry with them.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is for the profession to issue any necessary guidance on clinical matters of this sort.

ENVIRONMENT

Thames Riverbus

Sir John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to seek the transfer of the existing riverbus service on the Thames to the London Docklands development corporation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: My Department has no such plans. The London Docklands development corporation has assembled a consortium of docklands interests who will together meet the expected deficit of riverbus in the short term. The LDDC has contributed to that funding package. The service is a private transport undertaking, and its long-term future must lie in commercial operation by the private sector.

Environmental Health Officers

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has had from individual local authorities or local authority associations about the recruitment of sufficient environmental health officers, with particular reference to those employed to enforce regulations governing, (a) food hygiene and (b) noise.

Mr. Maclean: I am not aware of any recent representations. Local authority responsibilities for food hygiene and noise are taken into account, along with other responsibilities, in the local government finance settlement.

Additional resources have already been provided for new work arising from food safety legislation.

Green Issues

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 18 June to the hon. Member for Croydon, South (Mr. Ottaway), Official Report, column 663, which Ministers will be the spokesmen in this House for those Departments where the green Minister is a member of the House of Lords.

Mr. Howard: That would be decided by the appropriate Secretary of State.

Surface Waters

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he supports the development of a European Community directive on the ecological quality of surface waters to return the quality of such waters to an unpolluted state.

Mr. Maclean: We will consider carefully any proposals that the Commission puts forward. We are already committed to securing improvements in water quality wherever they are justified.

Pollution Consent System

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for the National Rivers Authority to replace the present pollution consent system with measures to eliminate toxic substances so as to return rivers and estuaries to an unpolluted state.

Mr. Maclean: None. Discharge consents and integrated pollution control authorisations, set so as to meet statutory water quality objectives, and in particular those relating to the EC dangerous substances directives, already provide precautionary controls on toxic substances as well as a means of meeting environmental goals and obligations.

Water Pollution

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those instances in which the National Rivers Authority has brought prosecutions against individual managers or directors of industrial concerns found to be committing a criminal pollution offence; and if he will say what sentence resulted in each case.

Mr. Maclean: I understand from the National Rivers Authority that it has not to date brought any prosecutions for water pollution against individuals in industrial concerns.

Community Charge (Travellers)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the success of collecting appropriate community charges from travelling people.

Mr. Robin Squire: Information is not available on the community charge collection rates from specific groups.

Councillors (Bankruptcy)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many councillors have had to resign their seats for reasons of bankruptcy in each year since 1967.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is not collected by my Department.

Regional Office, Nottingham

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans there are for a new East Midlands regional office in Nottingham.

Mr. Howard: There are currently no proposals for a new east midlands regional office in Nottingham.

Environmental Rights (Booklet)

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what responses he has received to his booklet on environmental rights and responsibilities issued in February.

Mr. Maclean: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on Tuesday 2 June 1992 to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) Official Report, column 381.

Rent-a-Room Scheme

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what legislation he is considering to ensure security of tenure for tenants in relation to his Department's rent-a-room scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The new rent-a-room scheme will make no difference to tenants' security of tenure. We therefore have no proposals to make any changes to the legislation.

Green Minister

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline the priorities for future action of the green Minister in his Department (a) over the next year and (b) over this Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Over the next 12 months I shall continue to follow up commitments in the White Paper Cm. 1200 "This Common Inheritance" and its successor Cm. 1655 "The First Year Report". I shall also publish, with the help of my colleagues, a second anniversary White Paper in the autumn. By the end of 1992 my Department will have developed an environmental housekeeping strategy for the management of its accommodation and purchasing. And over the next year and beyond I shall continue to ensure that environmental concerns shape the policy and work of my Department whenever appropriate, in this country, in our presidency of the European Community, and in following up the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in the wider international community.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he calculates the expenditure of opt-out schools in deciding the designation of local authorities for charge-capping; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. and learned Friend does not calculate the expenditure of grant-maintained schools for the purposes of his decisions on designation for capping. He takes these decisions in accordance with principles which operate by reference to the overall amount of each authority's budget. Before deciding his principles, my right hon. and learned Friend has regard to all appropriate considerations.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will set out the budget and planned budget of the National Rivers Authority for the years 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93 at April 1992 prices;

(2) if he will give details of the number of staff working for the National Rivers Authority for the years 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92 and planned for 1992-93.

Mr. Maclean: The figures are as follows:

	National Rivers Authority total expenditure
Year	£ million	£ million	Staff[1]
1989-90	334	404	6,484
1990-91	350	391	7,111
1991-92	417	436	7,735
1992-93	457	457	7,953

[1] Full-time equivalents.

Notes:
Figures are from the National Rivers Authority's 1992 Corporate Plan.
Staff numbers are at 31 March of each year.

Urban Development Areas

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of people unemployed in April in each year from 1987 in each urban development area.

Mr. Robin Squire: Urban development areas do not correspond to areas for which unemployment figures are available.

Pesticides

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy that information gathered regularly by various Government Departments on the sale and usage of pesticides in different localities should be passed on routinely and free of charge to local authorities to help them in the discharge of their duties to monitor drinking water quality.

Mr. Maclean: The Water Quality Regulations make the water undertaker responsible for regular monitoring of drinking water for traces of pesticides. In deciding which pesticides they should analyse for, water undertakers are expected to make use of all the data available, whether from Government Departments or other sources, about the usage and properties of particular pesticides. The drinking water inspectorate reviews each company's monitoring strategy annually to ensure it is doing so. Local authorities receive detailed annual reports on drinking water quality from the relevant water company, and it is not necessary therefore for local authorities to duplicate these procedures.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the public sector cost per additional permanent job created as a result of the enterprise zone experiment, excluding multiplier effects and construction jobs.

Mr. Robin Squire: Consultants commissioned to carry out "An Evaluation of the Enterprise Zone Experiment" calculated that the public cost per additional job in British enterprise zones, excluding multiplier effects and construction jobs, was £8,500 in 1986. The cost per job in 1989, calculated on the same basis, was about £8,700. Copies of the consultants' report, published in 1987 by HMSO, are held in the House of Commons Library.

Leeds Task Force

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has as to the number of businesses which have now been assisted as a result of the activities of the inner-city task force in Leeds.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Government's former Leeds task force assisted more than 400 businesses in the Chapeltown and Harehills area.

EC Environment Proposals

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are Her Majesty's Government's plans to implement the EC habitats directive and the EC fifth environmental action programme.

Mr. Maclean: With regard to implementation of the EC habitats directive, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 16 June, [Official Report, columns 439-40]. The fifth environmental action programme has not yet been approved by the Council of Ministers.

Stray Dogs (Leeds)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the measures taken by the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals in Leeds to control stray dogs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 3 July 1992]: None.

Orimulsion

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to monitor sulphur emissions caused by the burning of orimulsion at Ince and Richborough power stations; and with what results.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 30 June 1992]: Such releases of sulphur to the atmosphere are calculated from the sulphur content of the fuel. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is satisfied that resulting emissions comply with the limits specified.

Marine Dredgings

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the weight of (a) lead, (b) mercury, (c) cadmium and (d) organo-chlorines he estimates is or will be contained in marine or river dredgings dumped in United Kingdom waters in 1990, 1991, 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply.

Information about the annual quantity of contaminants, including lead, mercury and cadmium in wastes dumped in United Kingdom waters are published annually in the Ministry's aquatic environment monitoring reports and reported internationally in accordance with our obligations under the Oslo and London dumping conventions.

Data for the period 1986-89 are contained in report No. 26 "Monitoring and Surveillance of Non-radioactive Contaminants in the Aquatic Environment and Activities Regulating the Disposal of Wastes at Sea 1988-89"—ISSN 0142 2499—a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. Similar data for the year 1990 will be published very shortly.

Comparable information about the quantity of organo-chlorines is not available since samples are only analysed for such substances where there is reason to believe that such contamination might be present to any significant degree.

Dredging

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many tonnes of material dredged annually from harbours, ports and fairways is used in the building industry; and what percentage of the dredged materials it constitutes.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply.

The information sought is not collected centrally.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what methods are used to assess the suitability of material dredged from harbours, ports and fairways for use in the building industry; who makes the assessment; and whether it is carried out on each boatload dredged.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to answers given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales on dredging on 12 June, at column 312.

The Ministry has a duty under section 8 of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 to ensure before issuing a licence to dispose of dredged material at sea that all other disposal options have been examined and that it is satisfied that no practical alternative is available.

A detailed assessment of each application is made by Ministry scientists based on information provided by the applicant about the physical and chemical nature, origin, relative amounts and total tonnage of the materials involved and of the results of analyses of samples submitted. This assessment will include the possibility of commercial use as building aggregate or other beneficial uses including beach replenishment and coastal defence work.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Disability Living Allowance

11. Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many telephone lines are available to people claiming disability living allowance at the Blackpool office of his Department.

Mr. Scott: One hundred and twenty telephone lines are operated by the central inquiry handling service. These are dedicated to inquiries about disability living allowance and the lines are now open from 8 am to 5.30 pm. The benefits inquiry line which is open seven days a week has 29 lines plus a commercial back-up and call-back service. The main switchboard at Blackpool has 149 lines.

28. Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many telephone lines are connected to the disability living allowance office in Blackpool.

Mr. Scott: The main switchboard at Blackpool has 149 lines. There are also 120 telephone lines, with links to Blackpool, operated by the central inquiry handling service which is dedicated exclusively to enquiries about disability living allowance. A freephone benefits inquiry line with 29 lines is also available.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applicants for disability living allowance have received the benefit since January 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The latest available information is that about 81,000 awards of disability living allowance had been made by 30 June 1992. This figure is for new claims and "top up" claims, including claims made on the ground of terminal illness.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will make a statement on the current situation governing arrangements for processing claims for disability living allowance;

(2) what is the average time for dealing with new claims for disability living allowance; how many claims are currently being processed; how many are waiting to be processed; and how long he estimates it will take for the current claims to be cleared.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will consider allowing existing levels of benefit to continue to be paid pending disability living allowance being granted.

Mr. Scott: Existing levels of benefit can continue to be paid pending disability living allowance being granted. For old attendance allowance and mobility allowance cases with expired awards, priority measures have been taken by the Benefits Agency to ensure they are dealt with as quickly as possible and interim awards made if necessary.

Social Fund

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to increase the resources available to the social fund in order to meet demand; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The 32 per cent. increase made to the discretionary budget over the last year will enable even more help to be given to those in need.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number and percentage of total applications which were refused for (a) community care grants, (b) budgeting loans and (c) crisis loans for each of the years of the social fund's operation in his Department's office area covering the Dumbarton parliamentary constituency.

Mr. Scott: The two years for which information is available are 1990-91 and 1991-92. In 1990-91, a total of 1,177 grant, 1,516 budgeting loan and 100 crisis loan applications were refused by Dumbarton office. Last year's corresponding figures for the larger Benefits Agency district of Lomond and Argyll were 3,451, 3,681 and 158. A total of 37·6 per cent. of applications were not successful. Three quarters of the applications refused did not meet the basic eligibility criteria.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will increase the social fund allocations for 1992-93 to enable expenditure to be maintained at March 1992 levels throughout the year; and what would be the cost of doing so.

Mr. Scott: Social Fund budget allocations are made on an annual, not a monthly, basis. The allocations of £302 million for 1992-93 represents a 32 per cent. increase on April 1991 and is already higher than total expenditure for the financial year ending March 1992. We constantly monitor the fund to ensure that the highest priority needs are met throughout the year.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the proportion of income support recipients repaying social fund loans at (a) less than 15 per cent. of weekly income, (b) 15 per cent. of weekly income and (c) more than 15 per cent. of weekly income.

Mr. Scott: This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the administrative cost of making and recovering a social fund loan to a young person whose need for income support has been accepted by the hardship unit; and what would be the administrative cost of arranging for income support to be paid immediately in these circumstances.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the number of people refused help from the social fund on the ground of inability to pay, expressing this number (a) as a whole number, (b) as a proportion of the total number of loan applications and (c) as a proportion of the total number of loan refusals, from 13 April 1988 to the present time.

Mr. Scott: The information is in the Library.

Income Support

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many young people received severe hardship benefit in each of the standard regions, including Scotland and in total, in each month since January 1991.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of income support recipients are now having deductions made from benefit as a result of paying back social fund loans (a) nationally, (b) regionally and (c) for each local benefits agency district.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Members with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Invalid Care Allowance

13. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many women are in receipt of invalid care allowance; and what was the comparable figure for 1978-79.

Miss Widdecombe: On 31 March 1992 there were 134,500 women receiving invalid care allowance, compared to 3,600 in January 1981, the earliest date for which such information is available.

Care Homes

15. Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have benefited from increases in spending on income support for those in residential care and nursing homes since 1979.

Mr. Burt: In 1979 some 12,000 people were receiving supplementary benefit in residential care and nursing homes. By November 1991 some 253,000 people were benefiting from Government support.

Divorced Pensioners

16. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the position of divorced ladies who do not qualify for an old age pension on the basis of their former husband's contributions.

Miss Widdecombe: These ladies are in the same position as any person who does not qualify for a basic state retirement pension because of a deficient contribution record: they still have access to other benefits.

Attendance Allowance

17. Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the operation of the Benefits Agency as it affects attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: The major changes in the assessment and adjudication arrangements for attendance allowance since April have been warmly welcomed by organisations of and for disabled people. These arrangements are assisting Benefits Agency staff in processing a very large number of claims.

Compensation Payments

18. Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will review his Department's policy on the inclusion of criminal compensation payments in the calculation of benefit entitlement.

Mr. Burt: The vast majority of payments from the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board have no effect whatsoever on social security benefits. The rules are kept under review, although there are no plans to change them at present.

Poverty

19. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the extent of poverty in Britain.

Mr. Burt: We continually monitor the effectiveness of the benefit system, and direct extra help to those in most need. Pensioners, disabled people and families on low incomes have all received valuable extra help, in real terms, since our reform of social security in 1988.

Pensioners' Savings

21. Mr. Bates: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of pensioners retiring (a) in 1979 and (b) in the latest year for which figures are available had incomes from savings; and what was the real average level of savings on each of those dates.

Miss Widdecombe: In 1979, 68 per cent. of recently retired pensioners received income from savings; the 1988 figure was 78 per cent. At 1988 prices, the income from savings of these pensioners was £12 per week in 1979 and £26·30 in 1988.

Recently retired pensioners are defined as single women aged 60 to 64, single men aged 65 to 69 and couples in which the man is aged 65 to 69. This provides an adequate sample for analysis of the data.

Housing Benefit

22. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that his Department receives value for money from housing benefit paid to tenants in private rented property.

Mr. Burt: Regulations are designed to ensure that housing benefit is properly paid and there is a range of other measures such as subsidy controls and monitoring arrangements.

Occupational Pensions

23. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress he has made in setting up the committee to review the legal and a regulatory framework for the occupational pensions industry.

Miss Widdecombe: The Pension Law Review Committee has started its work.

24. Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of pensioners have an occupational pension (a) now and (b) in 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: Fifty-seven per cent. of all pensioners receive income from an occupational pension. This compares with only 44 per cent. in 1979.

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners have occupational pensions today; and what was the figure in 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: A total of 6 million people receive income from an occupational pension. Of these, 4·5 million are over state pension age. In 1979 there were 3·5 million occupational pensioners, of whom 3 million were over state pension age.

National Insurance

25. Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what have been the total savings in expenditure that have accrued from the various changes made to national insurance benefits since 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: Between 1978-79 and 1991-92, expenditure on national insurance benefits has grown by around £6 billion in real terms. The costs and savings which have accrued from the main policy changes to national insurance benefits since 1979 are set out in the table.

Changes to national insurance benefits: estimated expenditure effects

Great Britain: £ million

[1]Figures shown represent the initial estimates of the effect on national insurance benefit expenditure only in the first full year following implementation. No account is taken of the impact on the changes on administration costs, income tax and national insurance revenues or expenditure on income-related benefits, other than as shown in note 2.

[2]Amounts shown represent the net effect on N.I. benefit expenditure after employees' recoveries from contributions to the N.I. Fund in respect of payments of statutory sick pay and statutory maternity pay to their employees.

Resettlement Units

26. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement about the current state of the replacement programme for resettlement units.

Miss Widdecombe: Currently there are more than 500 replacement beds in operation; by March 1993 this will have increased to more than 800 and will have led to the closure of eight resettlement units, with a total bed capacity of 533.

Not only do the replacement facilities offer an overall increase in scale but, more importantly, they achieve a much higher standard and a greater mix of hostel provision.

Retirement Pensions

27. Mr. Macklinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to improve the basic rate of retirement pensions.

Miss Widdecombe: This Government have pledged to maintain the value of retirement pension in line with prices. We have done that, and more since 1979, and we will keep to our pledge in the future.

Citizens Charter

29. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress has been made on the application of the citizens charter to the operation of the Benefits Agency.

Mr. Burt: Significant progress has been made towards making the service more accessible, accountable and responsive to customer needs and expectations. The aims in the citizens charter have been expanded and clearly laid out in the agency's own customer charter, which sets out a framework for customer service. This underpins quality standards which local units are setting in consultation with their customers.

I have asked Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, to write to the hon. Member with examples of the achievements so far.

Allowances (Waiting Times)

30. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average time taken to deal with applications for attendance allowance, living allowance and disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: Information is not collected in this form. More than 11,000 disability living allowance claims and nearly 8,000 attendance allowance claims are being cleared each week. These numbers are steadily rising as staff gain experience with the new systems.

Doctors

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of the doctors used by his Department to examine claimants are men; and what guidelines he has issued on the need to increase the proportion who are women.

Mr. Scott: The employment of doctors to examine claimants for social security benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

War Pensioners

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all the countries where United Kingdom war pensioners are currently receiving a United Kingdom war pension or war widow's pension, showing separately the countries of the former Soviet Union and showing for each country the number of war pensioners.

Miss Widdecombe: The operations of the war pensions directorate are a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member, and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Travellers

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what difficulties have been encountered in enforcing the availability for work rule on travelling people; what research he has commissioned; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: Unemployed travellers are required to satisfy the same benefit rules as other unemployed claimants; they must be available for work and actively seek it. The Employment Service makes every effort to ensure that benefit is paid only where these conditions of entitlement are satisfied.

Mortgage Interest

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in receipt of income support payments to cover mortgage interest hold joint mortgages with individuals not on income support.

Mr. Burt: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Pensions

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much total pension incomes have changed per annum between 1979 and 1992; and what was the equivalent figure between 1974 and 1979.

Miss Widdecombe: Between 1979 and 1988, pensioners' average total net income grew by 34 per cent.—an average growth of over 3 per cent. each year. In the period 1974 to 1979 total growth was 3 per cent., a yearly increase of 0·6 per cent. Growth per annum 1979 to 1988 was therefore greater than that for the whole of the period 1974 to 1979. Analysis of pensioners' income on this basis for later years is not yet available.

Newcastle Offices

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will provide an access road into his Department's new complex on Whitley road, Benton, Newcastle from either Coach lane or the coast road, Newcastle;

(2) what consultations took place with North Tyneside council concerning the siting of his Department's new complex on Whitley road, Benton, Newcastle;

(3) what surveys were carried out into the traffic volume implications of the development of his Department's new complex at Whitley road, Benton, Newcastle;

(4) what consideration was given to the safety of children attending St. Bartholomew's primary school, Benton when the decision was made to site his Department's new complex at Whitley road, Benton, Newcastle.

Mr. Burt: The responsibility for investigating such matters as the provision of an access road, the traffic volume implications and the safety of children attending St. Bartholomew's primary school, Benton lies with the local authority.

Planning for the provision of the new DSS offices at Whitley road, Newcastle, and the need for consultation with outside bodies, are matters for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will visit the site of his Department's new complex at Whitley road, Benton, Newcastle in order to listen to the views of local residents about the development.

Mr. Burt: We have no plans so to do.

Maxwell Pension Schemes

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will introduce regulations to implement section 58B of the Social Security Act 1990; and what estimate he has made of the levels of payments to Maxwell pension schemes under that section.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, gave to the hon. Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) on 30 June at column 504, on the introduction of these regulations. We have no estimates of the level of payment that may be made in any particular case. This will depend on the amount of assets available to ordinary creditors.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what funds have been obtained by the Sir John Cuckney unit as part of the exercise to replenish Maxwell pension funds; and which organisations have been approved to make payments into the voluntary trust.

Miss Widdecombe: Sir John Cuckney is chairman of the Maxwell Pensioners Trust, which is being set up to enable voluntary contributions to be made by any individuals or organisations concerned about the plight of Maxwell pensioners and Sir John is holding discussions with a wide range of institutions about the contributions they may be willing to make. Sir John and his fellow trustees act as a board of advisers to the Maxwell pensions unit. The unit's role in securing the speedy return of assets to Maxwell pension funds is to provide all the assistance it can to liquidators, pension scheme trustees and others in carrying out this task. I warmly welcome the decision of NatWest to return some £25 million of Teva shares to Maxwell pension funds.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 19 June, Official Report, column 704, what assistance the special unit established by his Department has provided to date to the liquidators, the trustees and others towards making contact with the authorities in Liechtenstein about Maxwell funds that could be held in that country.

Miss Widdecombe: The Maxwell pensions unit has not been asked to provide assistance in making contact with the authorities in Liechtenstein about Maxwell assets which may be held there; but remains ready to help where it can.

Retired People, Waveney

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment his Department has made of the findings of the 1991 census by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys into the numbers of retired people in Waveney and their proportion to the total population of Waveney compared with 1981; and what changes he expects to make in delivery of his Department's service as a consequence.

Miss Widdecombe: This is an operational matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and Public Information Office.

Child Benefit

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many young people received extended child benefit in each of the standard regions including Scotland, and in total, in each month since January 1991.

Mr. Burt: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

	Weekly average of awards of extended Child Benefit
January 1991	1,184
February 1991	1,828
March 1991	2,208
April 1991	3,257
May 1991	4,302
June 1991	4,889
July 1991	NIL
August 1991	NIL
September 1991	25,270
October 1991	26,006
November 1991	25,243
December 1991	24,577
January 1992	1,510
February 1992	2,563
March 1992	3,131
April 1992	NIL
May 1992	3,498
June 1992	4,916

Notes: A NIL is shown for July and August 1991 as the extension period for Easter leavers finished before the Summer extension period began in September.
The NIL for April 1992 is due to the extension period for Christmas leavers finishing before the Easter extension began in May.

Disability Benefits

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many requests for review of attendance allowance there have been in Carlisle following unsuccessful claims;

(2) how many claims have been made in Carlisle for disability living allowance since its introduction;

(3) how many claims were made in Carlisle for attendance allowance in the financial year ended April;

(4) how many people in Carlisle who claimed attendance allowance were successful; and at what rates;

(5) how many claims in Carlisle were made under special rules and what percentage was successful.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households in the Makerfield parliamentary constituency qualify for payments under the cold weather payments scheme.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households in the Paisley, South constituency qualify for payments under the cold weather payments scheme.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households in Glasgow, Maryhill, qualify for payments under the cold weather payments scheme.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households in Leeds, West qualify for payments under the cold weather payments scheme.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) on what dates the cold weather payments system in Glasgow, Maryhill, were triggered during the winter of 1991-92; and how many households received payments on each occasion;

(2) on what dates cold weather payments were made in Glasgow, Maryhill, in response to a forecast of a qualifying period; and if he will indicate the period taken for payments to be made once the system had been triggered.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) on what dates and in what parts of the Paisley, South constituency the cold weather payments scheme was triggered during the winter of 1991-92; and how many households received payments on each occasion;

(2) on what dates cold weather payments were made in the Paisley, South constituency in response to a forecast of a qualifying period; and how long it took on average for payments to be made once the system had been triggered.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) on what dates cold weather payments were made in Leeds, West in response to a forecast of a qualifying period; and if he will indicate the period taken for payments to be made once the system had been triggered;

(2) on what dates and in what parts of Leeds, West the cold weather payments system was triggered during the winter of 1991-92; and how many households received payments on each occasion.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Members with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) on what dates and in what parts of the Makerfield constituency the cold weather payments system was triggered during the winter of 1991-92; and how many households received payments on each occasion;

(2) on what dates cold weather payments were made in the Makerfield constituency in response to a forecast of a qualifying period; and what were the periods taken for payments to be made once the system had been triggered.

Mr. Scott: Such information as is available is in the Library.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Court Time

Mr. French: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) what progress has been made on the Lord Chancellor's proposals concerning the management of court time;

(2) what measures he has taken to improve the use of court time.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Over the last two years a number of measures have been introduced to improve the use of court time in the civil courts: jurisdictional changes and new arrangements for the allocation of business between the High Court and county courts which ensure cases are directed to the most appropriate forum for trial; procedural changes which advocate the early exchange of more informative pleadings so that trials can be focused on the issues in dispute, and the development of 80 county court trail centres which offer continuous hearings.

In the Crown court and magistrates courts, recommendations to reduce delay made by a working party on pre-trial issues are being introduced. Three pilot schemes are already operating to monitor the effectiveness of magistrates committing defendants to appear in the Crown court on a specific date, either for pleas to be taken or directions given if the case is contested. The guidance for Crown court listing officers is being revised and will include maximum times for the period between committal and trial. Magistrates and their clerks have been asked to give the reduction of waiting times a high priority and are being encouraged to develop methods of listing which will minimise the time people have to wait at court.

Magistrates

Mr. French: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many applications have been made for the post of magistrate; and how many appointments have been made in each of the last five years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The first part of the question cannot be answered without disproportionate cost. The numbers of appointments made by the Lord Chancellor for each of the last five years are:

	Number
1991	1,687
1990	1,756
1989	1,687
1987	1,213

Mr. French: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many magistrates have been relieved of their duties in each of the last five years owing to misconduct.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Prior to 1989, the records kept provide no differentiation between those who were removed on the grounds of misconduct and those removed on other grounds. However, the figures for each of the last three years are as follows:

	Number
1991	10
1989	7

Mr. French: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what criteria are used in the appointment of magistrates.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The criteria used in the appointment of magistrates are set out in the Lord Chancellor's "Directions for Advisory Committees on Justices of the Peace" at pages 12 to 14. A copy of these directions is in the Library.

Mr. French: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many complaints are received each year concerning the conduct of magistrates.

Mr. John M. Taylor: During the period 1 May 1991 to 30 April 1992, a total of 70 conduct files were opened where complaints were received which, by nature of allegations made, could have involved possible disciplinary action by the Lord Chancellor.

Mr. French: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department to what extent political persuasion is taken into account in the selection of magistrates.

Mr. John M. Taylor: A candidate's political persuasion is neither a qualification nor disqualification for appointment. Political persuasion and other factors are taken into account in order to obtain, so far as possible, a bench which broadly reflects the area it serves.

Mr. French: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what training magistrates receive; and how many are deemed unfit for duty after they have been selected.

Mr. John M. Taylor: All newly appointed magistrates receive induction training totalling a minimum of 16 hours before they sit to adjudicate. This should be completed within three months after appointment. Following this, within 12 months after appointment they undertake the basic course—year one—comprising sitting in court to adjudicate with two experienced colleagues; visits to a local adult prison and a young offender institute, and an introduction to the probation service—totalling six hours; and a training course of 12 hours. The basic course continues in years two and three after appointment and may either take the form of four hours' training in each year or be combined into eight hours' training as a residential course. Further training takes the form of 12 hours' training in each three-year period thereafter. Members of the juvenile court—youth court from October 1992—and family panels, and chairmen of courts receive specialist training. No justice has been removed because he or she has failed to complete the training satisfactorily.

Witnesses (Non-appearance)

Mr. French: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many cases are adjourned each year owing to the non-appearance of witnesses.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No figures relating to this subject are generally collected.

Immigration (Guidance)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the effects on his Department's work of the new guidance notes on the interpretation of the Immigration Act 1971.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The only recent policy guidance to immigration officers of which I am aware relates to primary purpose cases. The effect of policy on caseloads is continuously assessed but, as my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department made clear, in answer to a question from the Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 30 June, Official Report, columns 523-24, it is not possible to estimate accurately the number of applicants who may be effected by this guidance. The effect, therefore, on the number of appeals to the immigration appellate authorities is similarly unclear.

Court of Appeal

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he has plans to permit the Court of Appeal to be televised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor's Department has no plans at the present time to promote amending legislation to permit the televising of proceedings in the Court of Appeal.

Retired Judges

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to discontinue the system whereby retired judges are permitted to sit part time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor has no plans to end the arrangements under existing legal provisions whereby retired judges may be asked to sit judicially from time to time. The Judicial Pensions and Retirement Bill [Lords], at present under consideration in another place, contains a provision which would prevent a retired judge from sitting after reaching the age of 75.

Judicial Salaries

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on judicial salaries.

Mr. John M. Taylor: No. The Government are presently considering the salaries of members of the judiciary.

Plea Bargaining

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he plans to introduce a pilot project for court-based plea bargaining; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor and I are considering the matter, but there are no plans to introduce a pilot project for court-based plea bargaining at the present time.

Judicial Pensions

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if it will be possible for judges to buy additional years under the new judicial pension provisions.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Judicial Pensions and Retirement Bill [Lords], which has recently completed its Committee stage in another place, contains a regulation-making power to enable provision to be made to entitle qualifying judicial officers to make voluntary contribution towards the cost of provision of additional benefits under the new judicial pension scheme.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects to lay before Parliament and publish the annual report of the Crown prosecution service for the year 1991-92.

The Attorney-General: The CPS annual report for 1991-92 was laid before Parliament at 11 o'clock this morning. I have caused a copy of the report to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Former Members

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what steps are being taken to make known to qualified former Members the availability of special guest passes.

Mr. Beith: It was agreed by the former Select Committee on House of Commons (Services) that the initiative for applying for special guest passes should lie with the former Members concerned. No specific steps are therefore being taken to alert those concerned to the availability of the new passes, although it is understood that a number of former Members have already submitted applications.

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, how many special guest passes have been issued to qualified former hon. Members of the House.

Mr. Beith: Thirty-three.

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, how many former Members are known to qualify for special guest passes.

Mr. Beith: Excluding the 81 former Members who have been elevated to the peerage and who therefore continue to enjoy certain facilities in this House, 205 former Members are known to qualify for special guest passes.

Disabled People

Mr. McMaster: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what special arrangements are in place within the precincts of the House of Commons for the parking of vehicles used by disabled people; how these arrangements are enforced; how the abuses of these arrangements are dealt with; what plans he has to improve such arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Beith: The Serjeant at Arms has authorised four hon. Members, four Members' secretaries and 10 staff of the House to use on a first-come first-served basis the 12 parking spaces reserved for the use of vehicles driven by or used by photo-identity pass holders who are disabled. In addition, authority for the use of these spaces is given from time to time to disabled visitors and to photo-identity pass holders suffering from temporary incapacity.

Those who use the other parking bays in Star Court have been reminded not to use the spaces reserved for disabled people.

These arrangements are dependent in the first instant on the co-operation of all right hon. and hon. Members; but they do form part of the responsibilities of the Administration Committee in respect of regulations governing car parking in the precincts of the House. That Committee will act on advice from the Serjeant at Arms.

I understand no complaints of misuse or abuse have been received this year and it would appear that the arrangements are working satisfactorily.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what plans he has to improve access and facilities for disabled people in the House; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Beith: The arrangements for access and facilities for the disabled are kept under regular review. The hon. Gentleman may have noticed the recent installation of a stair lift up to the Grand Committee Room and Jubilee Room and handrails leading to the interview rooms off Westminster Hall. Consultants were commissioned last year to look at what might be done to improve access to the main public areas. Their initial report has been examined and further advice is now being sought.

Telephone Directories

Mr. Steen: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what was the cost of producing new green plastic folders for the House of Commons telephone directory; why it was necessary to replace the black folders; how many were issued (a) to each hon. Member and (b) in total; who approved the cost; and how much was spent.

Mr. Beith: Some 3,500 new folders and directories are to be issued including a single personal issue to each hon. Member. The cost of the folders was £5,181. Their purchase was approved by the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee of the Services Committee in the last Parliament. The Sub-Committee's successor committee, the Administration Committee, approved a mock-up of the new directory and the new folder.

The new green folders for the House of Commons telephone directory are to replace the current black folders which are wearing out and which are too small satisfactorily to contain the newly designed telephone directory.

DEFENCE

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how his policy on the release of information concerning low-flying avoidance areas has changed since the introduction of the new open government measures.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My Department will continue to provide information on how to apply for avoidance status and on matters taken into account when applications are considered; applicants are informed of the decision in all cases. Our policy continues to be based on the considerations set out in the Government's reply—HC 659, October 1990, page v—to the Defence Committee's report on low flying.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the numbers of low-flying sorties by aircraft type for each month of 1992 to date.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information for the period January 1992 to April 1992, the most recent month for which figures are available, is as follows:

Numbers of Sorties

Aircraft type	January	February	March	April
Buccaneer	153	153	95	116
F-4	87	167	61	115
Harrier	511	698	433	541
Hawk	1,298	1,563	1,529	1,500
Jaguar	403	647	761	426
Jet Provost	567	730	669	615
Tornado	1,704	2,174	2,232	1,879
Tucano	348	422	349	273
A-10	442	522	586	542
F-15	0	0	4	14
F-111	633	693	916	858
Other aircraft (including helicopters)	3,482	4,922	5,541	3,696
Monthly total sorties	9,628	12,691	13,176	10,575

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to measure the noise levels generated by the F15E aircraft at low level.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We hope to measure the noise generated by the F15E aircraft at low level later this year.

Aurora

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many times the radar operators at RAF Machrihanish have detected the new United States aircraft Aurora during the last 12 months; and if he will list by location where it has been detected by other RAF radar monitoring stations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The existence of such an aircraft would be a matter for the United States authorities.

"Agenda 21"

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he is taking to ensure that his Department's bases and facilities meet the guidelines set out in paragraph 20.23, as amended, of chapter 20 of "Agenda 21" as agreed at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is MOD policy to comply fully with United Kingdom environmental legislation except for certain operational activities where compliance is impractical and closely controlled exemptions are permitted. Appropriate guidance exists on the management of hazardous materials and wastes at defence establishments. It is MOD policy to minimise or eliminate the use of hazardous substances wherever practicable.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence following the agreement between the United States of America and Russia to cut strategic nuclear arms and to co-operate on the global protection against limited strikes system, whether Britain will develop a different tactical air-to-surface missile type delivery system.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We are continuing to study a range of possible options for the eventual replacement of WE177. These include French and American tactical air-to-surface missiles. No decision has yet been taken.

Jet Skis

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans the Queen's Harbour Master, Portsmouth has to extend restrictions on the use of jet skis in those waters off the Isle of Wight for which he is responsible.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

David Pascall

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at what time RAF Leuchars was advised of the needs to provide an aircraft to rescue David Pascall on Sunday 28 June; at what time the aircraft was scrambled; how long was the flight time to the point of pick up of Mr. Pascall; how long was the flight time from the point of pick up to Vale of Leven hospital; and at what time the aircraft returned to RAF Leuchars.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: RAF Leuchars was advised on Sunday 28 June at 2.03 pm. The aircraft was airborne at 2.10 pm, reaching Mr. Pascall some 35 minutes later. Once Mr. Pascall was on board, the aircraft took 20 minutes to reach the Vale of Leven hospital, after which it returned to Leuchars, landing at 5.25 pm. The Royal Navy search and rescue flight at Prestwick, which operates to the same 15 minutes standby as the RAF search and rescue flight at Leuchars, would have had a similar transit time to the incident.

Civil Servants

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civil servants in his Department are paid at a rate exceeding that of a Cabinet Minister.

Mr. Aitken: The total salary, including reduced parliamentary salary, of most Cabinet Ministers is £63,047. The number of civil servants in the Ministry of Defence whose pay currently exceeds this figure is 12.

Empty Property

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the 24 empty houses referred to in his answer of 18 December 1991, Official Report, column 160, have been sold; how many are under offer; and how many have been sold to ex-service personnel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None has been sold. Six are surplus to my Department's requirements and these are currently being offered for sale through the services discount scheme.

Service Children's Schools

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what key targets have been set for the Service Children's Schools (North West Europe) Defence Support Agency for 1992-93.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The chief executive of Service Children's Schools (North West Europe)—SCS (NWE)—has been set the following key targets for 1992-93:

To implement, so far as it is feasible in the British Forces Germany (BFG) situation, the Education Reform Act to the statutory timetable laid down for England and Wales by: Introducing the National Curriculum to SCS (NWE) by subject and Key Stage; introducing pupil assessment by subject and Key Stage; and implementing Teacher Appraisal.

To implement the SCS (NWE) "Schools For the Future Plan" in line with BFG drawdown.

To produce Management and School Development Plans to enable "taut" full cost financial and management planning within an agreed budget and to achieve annual efficiency savings of at least 1 per cent.

To increase the overall pass rate at GCSE (grades A-G) and "A" Levels (grades A-E) by 10 per cent. Within this target achieve an annual 2 per cent. improvement in the proportion of pupils achieving grades A, B and C.

To ensure that all teachers meet at least two of the four qualification-match criteria for their post with at least 75 per cent. meeting three criteria and at least 50 per cent. meeting all four criteria. The criteria are: a recognised professional qualification; relevant Specialist subject or phase qualifications; broad and relevant previous teaching experience; and relevant post-entry in-service training;

To implement Parents' Charter requirements for: child's progress report to parents annually and on change of school; examination/Standard Attainment Tests (SATs) results to be reported to parents annually; and informing parents of relevant educational developments.

To be in a position to submit an application for a Charter Mark in mid-1993.

A copy of the annual report and accounts for 1991-92 will be placed in the Library shortly.

"Options for Change"

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he will respond to the third report of the Defence Select Committee, Session 1991-92, "Options for Change: Army, Review of the White Paper, Britain's Army for the 90s".

Mr. Rifkind: I have today placed in the Libraries of both Houses a memorandum giving the Government's formal response to this report.

Trident

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the progress of the Trident programme.

Mr. Rifkind: I am pleased to announce that an order is being placed today with Vickers Shipbuilding and Engineering Ltd. at Barrow-in-Furness for the construction of the Royal Navy's fourth Vanguard class Trident missile submarine.

Negotiations have resulted in a keenly priced contract, and a price lower on a comparable basis than those for the first three submarines. This reflects improvements in productivity at VSEL and the considerable experience the company now has in building this class of submarine.

The order underlines the Government's commitment to the United Kingdom Trident programme and to the effective maintenance of Britain's strategic nuclear deterrent, while obtaining the best possible value for money for the taxpayer.

Trident remains firmly on course for introduction into service with the Royal Navy in the mid-1990s.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Civil Servants (Shares)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all regulations covering senior civil servants' shareholdings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert Jackson: Central rules covering civil servants' shareholdings are contained in the "Civil Service Pay and Conditions of Service Code", paragraphs 9874 and 9875; and the "Establishment Officers Guide", paragraph 4065. Copies of both documents are in the Library of the House. In some cases, Departments and agencies supplement these rules by further regulations and guidance in handbooks or equivalent documents for their staff. These are not held centrally.

Civil Service College (Theft)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the value of the 3 ft 6 in diameter table stolen from the Civil Service college, Sunningdale; what period of time elapsed before it was noticed it had been stolen; in what circumstances it was stolen; whether it has yet been recovered; how many other items were stolen at the same time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert Jackson: This is a matter for the chief executive and I have asked her to reply direct to the hon. Member. Copies of the letter will be placed in the House of Commons Library and Public Information Office.

Duchy Aid

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many requests were made to the Duchy of Lancaster for financial aid in each year since 1982; if he will give the numbers that were unsuccessful; and if he will list the criteria by which such applications are judged.

Mr. Waldegrave: Since 1982 some 750 payments have been made by the Duchy of Lancaster benevolent fund. Most of these were selected by local advisers within the county palatine. There have been few unsuccessful applicants. These were either not connected with the county palatine or other areas of duchy interest, or had a reasonable prospect of raising funds elsewhere.

Decisions as to suitability have been based on the need for, and benefit to be derived from, each payment, while taking into account the wish to spread payments throughout the county palatine.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what consideration will be given by the Duchy of Lancaster to the application for financial aid from the Lancashire free legal action centre.

Mr. Waldegrave: The application for financial aid from the Lancashire free legal action centre in Blackpool is being considered with other requests for financial assistance the duchy office receives. In keeping with normal practice we will be taking local advice before any decision is made.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if she will commission additional research with the Medical Research Council for the development of Interleukin receptor antagonist—IL-Ira—in the treatment of Alzheimer's disease.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Medical Research Council is funded by grant in aid from the science budget, and is an independent body which normally decides its research priorities on its own expert judgment. It is not currently funding research to develop interleukin receptor in the treatment of Alzheimer's disease. However, it is supporting a considerable body of work relevant to the actions of interleukin in immunology, and has recently launched, with the help of additional funding from the science budget, a neuroscience approach to human health to develop further its research in fields such as Alzheimer's disease. The MRC welcomes high-quality research proposals relevant to the disease, and will consider them in competition by the usual peer review mechanisms.

Information Disclosure

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will set out the improvements in widening the scope of information disclosure to the public that are expected to arise from the European Commission's proposal for a council regulation on security measures applicable to classified information—Com (92) 56 final.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government consider that the draft regulation in its present form is unworkable. In consultation with other member states, the Government's aim will be to ensure that, within a framework which encourages greater openness in the EC's business, any genuinely sensitive material is effectively protected through appropriate security measures.

TRANSPORT

River Safety

Dr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, if he will publish the report of the inquiry into river safety by Mr. John Hayes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: After the tragic collision between the Bowbelle and the Marchioness in August 1989 an investigation by the marine accident investigation branch —MAIB—was immediately mounted. Directions on two new safety measures were made straight away, and action put in hand on six further safety recommendations which were announced in the MAIB interim report 10 days later.

The MAIB final report could not be published until April 1991, because of possible prejudice to legal proceedings, but its 27 recommendations were published separately in July 1990. All were accepted immediately, and prompt action taken to put them into effect. All but eight recommendations have been implemented; five of those outstanding have been the subject of public consultation, and resultant legislation will be in force this autumn; one depends on international developments; and consideration of the remaining two, relating to the involvement of military helicopters in civil search and rescue, is not yet completed.

The MAIB report commented, with the acknowledged benefit of hindsight, that action taken by the Department in the past had not gone as far as it should. My predecessor felt that further investigation was needed and invited Mr. John Hayes, secretary of the Law Society, to carry out an inquiry into the Department of Transport's handling of its responsibility for the safety of vessels on rivers and inland waters. I am today publishing his report.

While pointing out that

"The onus for the safety of travellers rests with the operators who undertake to provide a service for profit",

Mr. Hayes concludes that the Department

"showed technical competence and dedication but lacked the vision and drive to lead the river marine industry into accepting that high safety standards and commercial success were compatible."

I am considering carefully all Mr. Hayes's 22 recommendations. Several concern the overall approach of the Department to the exercise of its functions in this area. We are urged to take a much higher profile in promoting safety among a variety of fragmented operators and regulators. Conditions vary greatly in different parts of the country and I have therefore decided to establish a series of district marine safety committees throughout the United Kingdom to review for each area the way in which responsibilities for safety, rescue and accident prevention are presently distributed. The committees will identify risks and the scope for reducing them, assess the necessary new measures and ensure that systems are set up to support the arrangements.

Mr. Hayes made a number of suggestions concerning the way in which the Surveyor-General's Organisation should in future exercise its responsibilities in connection with safety on rivers and at sea. Following recent reports by the National Audit Office and a Committee in another place, I have had an internal review carried out. This has recommended that the organisation be reconstituted as a Marine Safety Agency, responsible to me and with the degree of independence enjoyed by other next steps agencies. I am therefore putting in hand work to establish whether the Surveyor-General's Organisation should become a candidate for executive agency status. I will make a further announcement of my conclusions in due course.

Mr. Hayes recommended that there should be an early review of the rescue arrangements and equipment on the Thames. The Government have given careful consideration to the recommendation but have concluded that a further review of this kind would not be justified. Action is, however, being taken to ensure that the lessons from the Marchioness/Bowbelle disaster have been fully assimilated. In addition, Thames rescue arrangements and equipment will also be examined by the relevant district marine safety committee as part of its wider review.

A full list of Mr. Hayes's recommendations and the Government's initial response to them is being placed in the Library.

Mr. Hayes's report makes a valuable contribution to the work we are doing to improve safety standards on our rivers and inland waterways, and I am most grateful to him for his work and that of his advisers, Captain Nic Rutherford and Mr. Mike Henderson.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects rolling stock for channel tunnel night passenger services to be ordered.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail and its continental partner railways have now confirmed with Metro Cammell their order for rolling stock. Night services are expected to begin in 1995.

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on discussions, within the Council of Ministers, about the intervention by the Commissioner for Competition Policy in the decision by British Rail, together with the national railways of France, Belgium, Holland and Germany, to operate through sleeper services via the channel tunnel; and if he will resist any attempt to prevent the provision of such services.

Mr. Freeman: There has been no discussion of the channel tunnel night trains within the Council of Ministers. The question of exempting from European Community competition rules the joint venture agreement between the participating railways covering the purchase and operation of the night trains is a matter between the railways and the European Commission.

Air Transport Policy

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to reply to the first report from the Transport Committee of Session 1991-92 on developments in European Community air transport policy.

Mr. MacGregor: My predecessor as Secretary of State, my right hon. and learned Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Pentlands (Mr. Rifkind), submitted the Government's response to the Committee on 16 March 1992. Copies of the response have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Civil Servants

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many civil servants in his Department are paid at a rate exceeding that of a Cabinet Minister.

Mr. Norris: The total salary, including reduced parliamentary salary, of most Cabinet Ministers is £63,047. The number of civil servants in the Department of Transport whose pay currently exceeds this figure is one.

Reduced-Mobility Workers

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the Council of Ministers to approve the draft directive on safe transport to work of workers with reduced mobility; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Roger Freeman: There was full discussion on the draft directive on safe transport to work of workers with reduced mobility in European Standing Committee A on 16 October 1991. I explained my position in detail at that time.

I welcome moves towards more accessible transport for people with disabilities and my Department is actively promoting and encouraging them. There are a number of legal and technical objections to the directive as currently drafted. I will be discussing with the industry, with disabled people as consumers and with European colleagues, the best way to make progress.

Unadopted Roads

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to extend local authorities' duties and powers to adopt currently unadopted roads.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have no such plans.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the obligations on local authorities to maintain those unadopted roads which have operated as public tracks for over 20 years.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Section 31 of the Highways Act 1980 provides that a way over land which has been enjoyed by the public as of right and uninterruptedly for fully 20 years shall be deemed to be dedicated as a highway. But of itself this imposes no obligation for such a highway to be maintained at public expense.

M1/M62

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration has been given to the quality of life in local communities within the proposed M1/M62 link road.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The effects of the proposals on local communities are considered in the environmental appraisal framework.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the extent to which the M1/M62 link motorway will attract traffic from the Snake and Woodhead passes, and divert south Yorkshire trans-Pennine traffic through west Yorkshire via the M1.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: An assessment has been made which indicates that the transfer of trans-Pennine traffic from south Yorkshire to the proposed M1/M62 link road would not form a significant proportion of the total flow on that road.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how financial evaluations of cost-effectiveness have been undertaken for the proposed M1/M62 link road.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The economic evaluation of the scheme has been carried out using the Department's standard cost-benefit analysis—COBA. A copy of the COBA manual is in the House Library.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to be able to announce the results of the public consultation process on the proposed M1/M62 motorway link; and if he will undertake to publish (a) the number of responses in favour of the yellow route, (b) the number of responses against the yellow route, (c) the number of responses in favour of the purple route and (d) the number of responses against the purple route.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A full analysis of the response to the public consultation will take many months, after which an announcement will be made. Information about the responses will be published at that time.

Totton Western Bypass

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he received the inspector's report on the final stage of the Totton western bypass; and when he expects to announce his final decision on the route.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The inspector's report on the reopened inquiries into the Totton western bypass was received by the Secretary of State for Transport on 28 May 1992. A final decision on the route may be expected by mid-August.

TRANSPORT

Lowestoft Relief Road

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will instruct his officials to progress detailed discussions with staff at the Co-operative Wholesale Society factory at Lowestoft over the route of the A12 relief road and the new crossing of Lake Lothing; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he expects to be in a position to give the hon. Member for Waveney a substantive reply further to his holding letter of 2 March, Ref. C/PSO/1907/92; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 6 July 1992]: The Co-operative Wholesale Society's alternative proposals for a Lowestoft relief road are currently the subject of an assessment of economic, environmental and engineering aspects. The assessment is expected to be complete in approximately four to six weeks' time, when a substantive reply to my hon. Friend's correspondence on the subject will be sent.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to ensure that those vans which are of the nature of saloon or estate cars in shape are classified as in category 1 for toll purposes under the Severn Bridges Act 1992.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 6 July 1992]: No. Car-based vans fall within the description of small goods vehicles for tolling purposes, and thus fall in toll category 2.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what assessment he has made of the amount of traffic now taking the northern route for the journey into Wales following the changes in the system of collecting tolls on the Severn bridge;

(2) what change there has been in the amount of road accidents as a result of traffic taking the northern route into Wales following the changes in the system of collecting tolls on the Severn bridge;

(3) what assessment he has made of environmental damage to villages in Gloucester as a result of traffic taking the northern route into Wales following the changes in the system of collecting tolls on the Severn bridge.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 6 July 1992]: No assessment has been made of the effects of traffic diversion from the Severn bridge as result of the recent toll changes. There was a reduction in westbound traffic flows on the bridge immediately after the introduction of the new tolls. There is already some evidence to show that some drivers who may have diverted initially are now reverting to using the bridge.

Motor Cycles

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on type approval as relating to motor cycles.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Many representations have been received on EC type-approval, mostly from private individuals, but also from representative organisations and industry. Apart from questioning the need for type-approval, they stressed, among other things, that customisation, low-volume manufacturers and sale of second-hand machines should be protected. Some went on to advocate that type-approval should apply only to the original design of a motor-cycle and not to machines in use. While supporting the principle of EC type-approval, industry stressed that much more time was needed to bring the scheme into operation. The Government took up these and other points during EC negotiations, and are now content that the main concerns of the motor-cycle user and industry are met in the type-approval framework directive as adopted on 30 June.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on the need for leg protectors for motor cyclists.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Many representations have been received on this matter, mostly from private individuals, but also from representative organisations and industry. The majority are opposed to leg protectors, and many reflect the view of the motor-cycle industry that they could increase injuries to other parts of the body, particularly the head. The Government's response to industry criticism has been in the form of a research paper by the Transport Research Laboratory (working paper WP/VS/213: "TRL Review of Research on Motorcycle Leg Protection—1991"). Among other things, it concludes that all the evidence to date, and there is much of it covering a very wide range of conditions, shows the TRL-designed leg protectors to be successful in achieving their objectives of reducing leg injuries without increase of other injuries, while being compatible with the production of motor-cycles. I have arranged for a copy of the TRL review to be placed in the Library today.

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has has with the EC regarding type approval for motor cycles.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Full discussions were held in Council prior to the adoption of the EC motor-cycle type-approval framework directive on 30 June. A further 23 Commission proposals for the separate directives that will constitute EC motor-cycle whole-vehicle type-approval are yet to be considered by Council.

Street Furniture

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what street furniture local authorities can add to unadopted roads (a) with and (b) without permission of the road owners.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Local authorities may place any street furniture in unadopted roads that they may in adopted roads unless the power to do so says otherwise.

A27

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he proposes to take regarding the blighted properties purchased on the proposed route of the A27 in the Worthing area and then let at an uneconomic rent when the leases expire in August.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: All our properties will be retained until our land-take for roadworks has been confirmed following public inquiries. As they expire, existing tenancies will be extended for further fixed terms. Rent reviews will have regard to current market rent levels and the means of the tenant.

M42

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by how much the volume of traffic using the M42 motorway between the M6 junction and the M40 junction is greater than his Department's predictions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department has made a number of predictions of likely traffic flows on this stretch of motorway over the period of several years during the phased construction of the M42 and M40 motorways. Projected flows for 1991 have varied between about 65,000 and 90,000 vehicles per day, with the whole of the M40 open to traffic. The figures vary for different parts of this stretch of motorway. The reasons for the disparity in the figures are changing circumstances affecting the basis on which traffic forecasts are made and the effects of developing plans for the trunk road network elsewhere. The actual flows for 1991 were about 95,000 vehicles per day.

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of noise levels experienced by residents of Knowle due to traffic on the M42 motorway after the completion of the link between the M42 and the M40 motorways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department has made no such assessment. There is no statutory basis for one. The Department will be making an assessment of noise levels in this area when it widens the M42 motorway as proposed.

Crossing Safety

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans his Department has to introduce safer road crossings.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A new type of pedestrian crossing, called a Puffin crossing, is being installed at 50 trunk road sites in England during 1992-93. This crossing is equipped to detect the presence of pedestrians both on the crossing itself and waiting to cross. It automatically gives sufficient time for slow-moving people to cross in comfort and is designed to improve road safety.

Solus 90

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those ships that currently comply with Solus 90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is not available. All passenger ships built after 29 April 1990 and engaged on international voyages are required to comply with Solas 90.

Air Misses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make a statement in respect of the reported air near-miss on 26 June, involving an United Airlines Boeing 767 and a Venezuelan business jet over south Wales;

(2) if he will make a statement in respect of the reported air near-miss on 25 June, involving an Air UK F27 and a Royal Air Force Tornado at approximately 12,000 ft, 15 miles north of Grimsby.

Mr. Norris: The responsibility for the safety regulation of United Kingdom civil aviation rests with the Civil Aviation Authority.

All air-miss reports in United Kingdom airspace, involving civil or military aircraft, are investigated initially by the joint air-miss section of the national air traffic services, which is a joint CAA/Ministry of Defence organisation. They are then examined by the joint air-miss working group (JAWG), an independent committee drawn from a wide cross-section of responsible civil and aviation bodies.

This incident is the subject of active investigation at this time. I have drawn the hon. Member's question to the attention of the CAA and have asked it to write to him direct when the investigation is complete.

Air Fares

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) under what circumstances he is required to give approval for an air fare for scheduled flights in or out of the United Kingdom;

(2) if he will set out the exact process by which an application for the setting of an airfare, for which he is required to give approval, is made; to what extent it involves (a) the Civil Aviation Authority, (b) officials of his Department, (c) any other body and (d) Ministers.

Mr. Norris: At present, the Civil Aviation Authority has the power to regulate air fares. Fares on scheduled services within the EC performed by EC carriers have to be approved if they are reasonably related to the carrier's long-term fully allocated relevant costs, or otherwise meet the requirements of current EC legislation. Fares on services to points outside the EC are governed by bilateral arrangements. From 1 January 1993 all fares within the EC are to be set by free pricing: there will no longer be an approval system.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what powers he has to regulate the air fares of British charter airlines;

(2) what powers he has to regulate the air fares of non-British charter airlines flying in and out of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norris: The cost of a seat on a charter flight is part of the overall cost of the package offered by the tour operator.

As from 1 January 1993, European Community arrangements will cover charter services for the first time. Existing practice will be continued, as those arrangements stipulate that charter rates are to be determined by free negotiation between the parties concerned.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will set out the powers he has to reject, vary, or accept applications for levels of air fares for (a) British scheduled airlines and (b) non-British scheduled airlines on routes other than EC or transatlantic;

(2) if he will set out what powers he has to reject, vary, or accept applications for levels of air fares for (a) British scheduled airlines and (b) non-British scheduled airlines on transatlantic routes.

Mr. Norris: The Civil Aviation Authority has power to regulate air fares (a) in the case of United Kingdom airlines, under the air transport licensing provisions of the Civil Aviation Act 1982 and (b) in the case of airlines using foreign-registered aircraft, under part X of the Air Navigation Order 1989. In approving or disapproving a fare for international services the Civil Aviation Authority will have regard to the United Kingdom's international obligations.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the powers he has to reject, vary, or accept applications for levels of air fares for (a) British scheduled airlines and (b) non-British scheduled airlines on EC routes.

Mr. Norris: EC regulation 2342/90 presently covers the setting of fares on scheduled services within the EC performed by British and other EC carriers. Generally, fares have to be approved if they are related to the carrier's costs. Fares charged by carriers from third countries on EC routes are governed by the bilateral agreements under which those services are permitted.

Arrangements for EC carriers operating within the EC will change substantially on 1 January 1993 when free pricing is introduced for all carriers. The approval system disappears, and a carrier can bring in a fare on 24 hours' notice.

There will be a safeguard against unfair pricing; but in agreeing this new regulation the Council and Commission made it clear that this safeguard was not intended as a means to reimpose a pricing policy on carriers. In the United Kingdom, whilst fares will be notified to the CAA, it will be for the Secretary of State to decide whether the safeguard should be activated.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the date of the next meeting between his Department and the relevant United States authorities to discuss the Bermuda agreement.

Mr. Norris: The next round of discussions with the US authorities about possible liberalisation of the Bermuda 2 air services agreement is due to begin on 20 July.

Scheduled Flights

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the United Kingdom airports from which scheduled transatlantic flights leave.

Mr. Norris: Scheduled passenger flights to airports in north America, south America, and the Caribbean leave the United Kingdom airports listed:

Glasgow
London Gatwick
London Heathrow
London Stansted
Manchester

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list United Kingdom regional airports from which scheduled flights leave to airports abroad, other than in north America.

Mr. Norris: Scheduled passenger flights to airports abroad, other than in north America and the Caribbean, leave the United Kingdom regional airports listed:

Aberdeen
Belfast International
Birmingham
Blackpool
Bristol
Cardiff-Wales
East Midlands
Edinburgh
Glasgow
Humberside
Leeds Bradford
Liverpool
Manchester
Newcastle
Norwich
Plymouth
Southampton
Teesside

Motor Vehicles Register

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will introduce a public register of motor vehicles on lease or hire purchase, together with an obligation to register, as a measure to protect innocent purchasers and intermediaries from fraud.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. Hire Purchase Information plc (HPI) has for many years maintained a record of third party interests. Motor traders have ready access to this information and I understand that HPI is considering how it may be made more readily available to the general public. I see no reason for the public sector to duplicate this service.

Charter Flights

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list United Kingdom regional airports from which charter flights to airports abroad leave.

Mr. Norris: Comprehensive information about the United Kingdom regional airports from which charter flights leave for airports abroad in the current season is not available in the Department. Information relating to 1991 is available in "UK Airports: Annual Statements of Movements, Passengers and Cargo 1991", published by the Civil Aviation Authority as CAP 504.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make an assessment of the effect on small businesses in the Severnside area of the recent increases in toll charges on the Severn bridge.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 6 July 1992]: A report by Pieda plc which was recently published by the Department of Employment concluded, on the basis of a survey of businesses in Avon and south Wales, that the second Severn crossing scheme, taking account of the new tolls, would have a positive effect on local trading and commercial activity, and stimulate investment opportunities in south Wales. Copies of the executive summary of the report, entitled "The Economic Impact of the Second Severn Crossing", are in the House Library.

Road Blocks, France

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has had concerning the impact on United Kingdom trade, tourism and the free movement of goods and people of the road blocks set up by French hauliers, dockers and farmers in Macon, Narbonne, Perpignan and elsewhere; what proposals he has to approach the French ambassador to the Court of St. James on the matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 6 July 1992]: We have received representations from or on behalf of individual transport operators and the relevant trade associations. My right hon. Friend is keeping in close and regular contact with Mr. Bianco, his French counterpart, and is urging him to find solutions to this appalling situation as quickly as possible.

Trust Ports

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what legislative provisions govern the freedom of trust ports not to release their annual report and accounts to interested parties or the public.

Mr. Norris: The relevant provision, which will be applicable where it has been incorporated in local harbour legislation, is section 50 of the Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act 1847. This provides for the harbour undertakers to prepare annual accounts and send a copy to the county clerk, who will open them for inspection by the public for a small fee.

Yachts

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice he gives (a) Commonwealth countries and (b) Caribbean nations on apprehending stolen United Kingdom registered yachts.

Mr. Norris: Tracing and recovering stolen yachts and apprehending those responsible is essentially a police matter working in co-operation with foreign law enforcement agencies.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to improve (a) the use of ships registered papers and (b) the registration of yachts within the EC.

Mr. Norris: My right hon. Friend has no such plans.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies he has made of (a) the principal destinations and (b) the sale of United Kingdom registered yachts stolen from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is not available centrally and could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

Tilbury

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the management of the recently privatised Port of Tilbury to discuss the write-off of outstanding loans; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: There are no Government loans to the Port of Tilbury.

Marine Theft

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last attended a conference on marine theft from the leisure sector in (a) the EC and (b) worldwide.

Mr. Norris: Never.

Roads, West Lancashire

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made on the proposed improvement scheme for the A59 and A570 roads in west Lancashire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Consulting engineers were appointed last year to investigate possible routes for three schemes in the Liverpool-Preston corridor; the A59 Ormskirk-Walmer bridge improvement (which would incorporate a bypass of Burscough); the A570 Ormskirk bypass; and the A570 Scarisbrick and Pinfold bypass. This work is still at an early stage. I cannot yet say when we shall be able to publish proposals.

Ports (Loans)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the outstanding loans between the Government and the Port of London authority and the Port of Tilbury.

Mr. Norris: The Port of London authority repaid all its outstanding Government loans in April 1992.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fire Station, Crossmaglen

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current projected start date for work on the new fire station, Crossmaglen, Newry; what are the reasons for delays in the commencement of the building work; and if he will take steps to ensure that the work is started within the current financial year.

Mr. Atkins: The fire authority considered tenders for the fire station at Crossmaglen on 23 June 1992 and awarded a contract. Work will commence within the next few months and should be completed in the spring of 1993. The delay in the commencement of building work arose as a result of the authority's decision to retender.

Customs Clearance

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to introduce measures to assist customs clearance agents (a) to prepare for the social impact of and (b) to cope with the economic consequences of the removal of tax barriers within the EC on 1 January 1993.

Mr. Atkins: European social fund assistance is being used by the Training and Employment Agency and others to finance activities aimed at the retaining or redeployment of those employed in small and medium-sized enterprises threatened with redundancies. There is also scope for some assistance within the existing INTERREG programme which was specifically designed to help border regions deal with the advent of the single market. In addition, assistance may become available as a result of recent proposals by the European Commission on the redeployment of customs agents, but it will be some time before final details are known.

Official in the Department of Economic Development, including the Training and Employment Agency, can offer detailed advice about existing initiatives and have been in contact with customs clearance agents' representatives.

Scottish Power

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent communications his Department has had with Scottish Power concerning plans to connect the province's electricity grid with the Scottish grid via a sea bed cable.

Mr. Atkins: None. The project is being progressed by Northern Ireland Electricity and Scottish Power directly.

Civil Servants

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many civil servants in his Department are paid at a rate exceeding that of a Cabinet Minister.

Mr. Mates: Three officials currently earn more than £63,047, the total salary of a Cabinet Minister, including reduced parliamentary salary.

District Electoral Areas

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when a boundary commissioner will be appointed for the purpose of forming district electoral areas; and what is the timetable for his reports.

Mr. Hanley: My right hon. Friend has today appointed Dr. Maurice Hayes as district electoral areas commissioner to report on the grouping of local government wards in district council areas for local elections. The commissioner is an independent officer and it will be for him to decide his precise timetable; but the submission of the commissioner's report will be in time to enable my right hon. Friend to lay before Parliament a draft Order in Council making provision for electoral areas prior to the general local elections to be held in May 1993.

Water Disconnections

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing the number of water disconnections in Northern Ireland in each year since 1979.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Number
1980	59
1981	134
1982	123
1983	345
1984	913
1985	651
1986	388
1987	318
1988	408
1989	292
1990	258
1991	385

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Summer Solstice Celebrations

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what reports he has received of damage to monuments or land in the counties of Hampshire, Wiltshire, Gloucester, Avon, Dorset, Somerset and Devon for which he has responsibility, resulting from the various manifestations to celebrate the 1992 summer solstice.

Mr. Key: Neither I nor my statutory advisers, English Heritage, have received any reports of any damage in the counties listed by my hon. Friend. In respect of Stonehenge, English Heritage advises that due to the vigilance of its representatives and the Wiltshire police, no damage occurred at the monument.

Grant Aid

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will establish grant-aid funding to heritage projects which do not gain private good from public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The Department of National Heritage supports a number of heritage projects, both directly and indirectly, through agencies such as English Heritage and the National Heritage Memorial Fund. In all of the grant regimes funded by DNH resources, the primary objective is to ensure the preservation of the historic buildings, sites, or works of art concerned, or to enhance our knowledge, understanding and enjoyment of the national heritage, by providing financial assistance which would not otherwise be available. Such policies are in the public, rather than private, interest.

Civil Servants

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many civil servants in his Department are paid at a rate exceeding that of a Cabinet Minister.

Mr. Key: The total salary, including reduced parliamentary salary, of most Cabinet Ministers is £63,047. The number of civil servants in the Department of National Heritage whose pay currently exceeds this figure is one.

Church Buildings

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will give financial assistance to the listed grade II church of All Saints, Clayton-with-Frickley, south Yorkshire to cover the costs of subsidence damage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: The church is potentially eligible for grant towards repairs from English Heritage, and an approach has been made by the parish. However, the major part of the repair bill is attributable to subsidence caused by undermining and the parish is pursuing a claim against British Coal for a significant proportion of the costs. A decision by English Heritage will not be possible until the question of compensation has been settled.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the practice in other EC countries of state subsidy of heritage church buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: No specific study has been undertaken, but general information suggests that United Kingdom grant regimes for historic buildings compare favourably with those of most other European countries.

Sports Councils

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much cash from the Sports and Arts Foundation has been disbursed to (a) Wales, (b) the Sports Council for Wales, (c) the Sports Council for England and (d) the Sports Council for Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key [holding answer 3 July 1992]: The Foundation for Sport and the Arts has allocated grants totalling £1,902,380 to projects in Wales, up to 5 April 1992. No grants have been made direct to the Sports Council for Wales, the Sports Council GB or the Sports Council for Scotland. The foundation is an independent body whose grants are made at the discretion of the trustees within the terms of the foundation's trust deed.

Royal Parks Constabulary

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what statutory protection exists for constables of the Royal Parks constabulary from unfair dismissal; what statutory restrictions exist on their taking industrial action; what statutory police federation exists to represent them; and what statutory restrictions exist on their entitlement to join a trade union.

Mr. Key [holding answer 30 June 1992]: No statutory protection exists from unfair dismissal for constables of the Royal Parks constabulary. In line with other police forces, they are an excluded category by virtue of section 146 (3) of the Employment Protection Consolidation Act 1978. There are similarly no statutory restrictions on their taking industrial action or their entitlement to join a trades union. Constables of the Royal Parks constabulary are represented by the National Union of Civil and Public Servants and many have exercised their right to join that trades union. No statutory police federation exists to represent the Royal Parks constabulary.

PRIME MINISTER

Darwin Initiative

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to the answer of 24 June, Official Report, columns 200-1, if he is now able to say what funding for the Darwin initiative will be; if he will make a statement on his plans to set up the initiative; how it will relate to the United States biodiversity project based in New York; what further action he plans to conserve biological diversity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

We are asking interested parties to come forward with ideas on how best to develop a framework for the Darwin initiative and to set priorities for action. We will consider the appropriate level of funding once we have decided those priorities. The Darwin initiative is based on United Kingdom expertise in the field of biodiversity, but we will be looking at action which other countries are taking.

In addition to launching this initiative I have also written to my EC and G7 colleagues urging them to take follow-up action to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, including taking forward the convention on biodiversity.

Global Technology

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister, further to his speech at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, when he plans to hold the global technology partnership conference; where it will be held; who will be the invitees; which British companies will be involved; what discussions he held with British companies prior to announcing the conference; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

The technology partnership initiative will extend the work of the United Kingdom throughout the preparations for the Earth summit to promote the role of technology co-operation in achieving sustainable development. It will provide developing countries with the opportunity to gain direct access to information on environmentally sound technologies, know-how, best practices and case studies available in the United Kingdom and will open up direct channels of communication with British companies.

The initiative will be launched by a conference and exhibition in the first half of 1993. Officials are currently working on the details of both. We propose to invite representatives of developing countries and to approach United Kingdom companies and others who have experience in providing environmental solutions for developing countries.

Non-governmental Organisations

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister which non-governmental organisations he will be inviting to the global forum in June; if NGOs from developing nations will be involved in the preparation for the forum; where the forum will be held; what consultations he held with NGOs before announcing the forum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

We are discussing the arrangements with non-governmental organisations. Overseas NGOs will be invited to attend and we expect them to be involved in the preparations.

UNCED

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister, further to his speech at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, what extra amounts he intends to give to the following areas, stating for each over what time period the donation will be made and in what form (a) forestry conservation, (b) biodiversity, (c) energy efficiency, (d) population planning and (e) sustainable agriculture; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said at Rio, we are planning to make available substantial extra resources for these areas. New commitments will be made as part of the planning and management of our overseas aid programme.

Debt Burden

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister if he has any plans to reduce the debt burden on developing countries and extend the Trinidad terms to other G7 nations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

The Government are fully committed to the agreed international debt strategy, and have given a strong lead in tackling the debt burden of the poorest and most heavily indebted countries. In addition to relieving developing countries of over $1 billion of aid loans, this Government have been responsible for both the Toronto and Trinidad initiatives. These were the first initiatives to result in the partial cancellation of the more substantial and burdensome debts owed by the poorest countries to export credit agencies.

The Paris club began implementing Trinidad terms in December, and seven countries have already benefited. The agreed terms give a 50 per cent. reduction in debts falling due in the course of the debtor country's IMF programme of economic reform, and commit creditors to consider reducing the whole stock of debt in three to four years' time if the debtor keeps to its IMF and Paris club agreements. The Government hope that Trinidad terms can be further developed in the direction of our original proposals, which were for a benchmark figure of two thirds reduction applied immediately to the whole stock of debt. It would also be an important step forward if all creditors, without exception, were to implement debt reduction under Trinidad terms.

Next Steps Agencies

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to ensure that (a) letters from hon. Members to Ministers concerning next steps agencies which are concerned with political rather than administrative or commercial matters and (b) letters concerning the planning inspectorate will be replied to by Ministers and not chief executives.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

The Government's policy on dealing with letters from hon. Members on agency matters was most recently set out in the Government's reply to the Treasury and Civil Service Committee's 1990 report on the next steps initiative, Cm 1263, which said:

"It is for Ministers responsible for particular Agencies to respond in the way they consider most helpful and appropriate to inquiries raised by Members. Ministers will normally ask the Chief Executive to reply to letters which concern day-to-day operational matters delegated to the Agency".

Royal British Legion (Training Centre)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 18 June, Official Report, column 620, if he will make it his policy for any grant from PERIFRA II in respect of the Royal British Legion's bid for the establishment of a training centre at Tidworth, for the purpose of giving specific training to service personnel and dependants for employment in civilian life, to be treated as additional to the Ministry of Defence existing budget, to the extent necessary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

The matter will be dealt with in accordance with the arrangements for grants from the European regional development fund set out in my right hon. Friend the Minister for Trade's statement of 30 June at columns 525-26.

Subsidiarity

Mr. Michael: To ask the Prime Minister what is his policy on applying the principle of subsidiarity to the work of local government within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

It is for Parliament to decide on the distribution of functions between central and local government.

Intervention Wheat

Mr. Michael: To ask the Prime Minister how many tonnes of common wheat held in intervention by the European Commission to which he referred in his answer of 25 July 1991, Official Report, column 782, were released as emergency food and (a) in 1990 and (b) in 1991 and in each half of 1991 and (c) in the first half of 1992; and what is the predicted level for the whole of the current year.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Aid will write to the hon. Member as soon as the information requested is available from the European Commission.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 7 July.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 7 July.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is attending the economic summit in Munich.

Child Health

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer on 24 June, Official Report, column 219, if he will make a statement on the implementation of declaration 76 of the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting in Harare in October 1991, relating to the framework for collaboration to put children first, particularly through co-operation programmes devised to enhance health and literacy levels among children; what priority is being given to enhancing child health in the developing countries in Commonwealth programmes; and what funding has been allocated to these programmes.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 2 July 1992]: I have been asked to reply.

Paragraph 76 of the Harare declaration endorses the declaration and plan of action of the survival, protection and development of children adopted by the World Summit for Children, which we support. The commitments undertaken at the summit to improve child health and security and to develop appropriate education are already among the basic concerns of the British aid programme.

We are making a significant contribution through our aid programme of some £45 million a year to health and population programmes in Commonwealth countries. A breakdown of the likely beneficiaries between adults and children is not available, but a considerable proportion of this assistance will directly benefit child health.

EDUCATION

Civil Servants

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many civil servants in his Department are paid at a rate exceeding that of a Cabinet Minister.

Mr. Forman: The total salary, including reduced parliamentary salary, of most Cabinet Ministers is £63,047. The number of civil servants in the Department for Education whose pay currently exceeds this figure is two.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of local education authorities in England will have two or fewer grant-maintained schools operating within their area in September 1992.

Mr. Forth: A total of 76 per cent. of local education authorities fall into this category. Over 50 per cent. of LEAs will have at least one GM school operating by this September.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what procedures apply to the audit of public money spent by individual city technology colleges.

Mr. Forth: Each city technology college is required to have its accounts audited annually by independent auditors. The auditors are required to report that they are satisfied that the college's internal control arrangements are appropriate and they have not identified any material weaknesses. The books and accounts of the college are also required to be open to officials of the Department for Education and the National Audit Office.

Further Education Funding Council

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will set out the amount of the Further Education Funding Council transitional funds which will be required (a) to fund consultants' reports and (b) to meet the appropriate internal running costs of the FEFC.

Mr. Forman: Of the £25 million that will be available to the Further Education Funding Council for transitional funding in 1992-93, the council's running costs, including the cost of consultancies, will account for approximately one third. Just over £1 million will be spent in 1992-93 on surveys by consultants of equipment, health and safety, and colleges' management and financial controls and systems. These surveys will be of direct benefit to colleges and will save considerable duplication of effort and expenditure on their part.

Voluntary-aided Schools, Rossendale

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he has received an application for capital grant in respect of an extension to St. Veronica's voluntary-aided primary school, Haslingden, Rossendale.

Mr. Forth: Yes.

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he has received an application for capital grant in respect of developments of St. Mary's voluntary-aided primary school, Haslingden, Rossendale.

Mr. Forth: Yes.

Capital for Popular Schools

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if, in the consultation document "Capital for Popular Schools", the definition of popular schools includes grammar schools.

Mr. Forth: Yes. Details of how the popular schools initiative will be implemented, following our consultations, will be issued shortly to LEAs and others.

A-levels

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many students have passed A-levels in English literature, history, sociology, art, maths, physics, chemistry and biology for each year since 1981.

Mr. Forth: The estimated number of school leavers who have passed A-level in English, history, social studies, creative arts, mathematics, physics, chemistry and biology for each year since 1981 are shown in the table.

SCOTLAND

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what information he has as to the number of accesses made to the police national computer by each constabulary over the last year; and what is the proportion of access requests made to the vehicle indexes of the new police national computer;

(2) how many accesses were made to each index of the new police national computer over the last year; and if he will include in these statistics an indication of the number of access requests that could search more than one index.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer to the answer given to the hon. Gentleman today by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department.

Training

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the figures, by region, in Scotland for youth training and employment training budgets for (a) 1991-92 and (b) 1992-93.

Mr. Lang: The outturn figures for 1991-92 and budgets for 1992-93 for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise for youth training and adult training, subject to an adjustment to the 1991-92 outturn for adult training for Scottish Enterprise to make it compatible with the coverage of the 1992-93 budget, are as follows:

	Scottish Enterprise		Highlands and Islands Enterprise
	1991-92	1992-93	1991-92	1992-93
Adult training	99,940	93,567	6,566	5,655

These budgets cover a wider range of activities than the youth training and employment training schemes. The allocation of resources by Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise to local enterprise companies is an operational matter for these two bodies; and I have asked the chairmen to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Michael Cook

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information embassy or consular officials in Portugal received from the Portuguese authorities about the timing and decision of the appeal by Mr. Michael Cook; and if he will make a statement on developments in the case since the Adjournment debate on 9 June.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: When asked by our embassy in Lisbon on 26 June 1992 the Portuguese supreme court confirmed that Mr. Michael Cook's appeal had been heard and turned down on 17 June 1992.

Since the Adjournment debate, consular officials have again visited Mr. Cook. They are also in touch with his Portuguese lawyer and with his brother in the United Kingdom about the implications of the appeal verdict.

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make an official request to the Portuguese authorities that none of the physical evidence connected with the Michael Cook case be destroyed until possible further proceedings are completed.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We understand that Mr. Cook may be appealing to the European Court of Human Rights. We have therefore instructed our embassy in Lisbon to ask the Portuguese authorities to ensure that all remaining evidence is retained.

Green Minister

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will outline the priorities for future action of the green Minister in his Department (a) over the next year and (b) over this Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Over the next year I will, as the responsible Minister, oversee FCO involvement in developing international environmental policy following the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development, and instigate policies for energy saving on the FCO estates. These policies will be carried forward over the lifetime of this Parliament.

Indonesia

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much money is in the British embassy United Kingdom military training and assistance scheme fund in Indonesia; and for what purposes this fund is used.

Mr. Goodlad: A total of £14·7 million is available under UKMTAS worldwide in the current financial year. The allocation of funds to individual countries varies from year to year and is not made public.

In the case of Indonesia, UKMTAS funds enable a limited number of military personnel to attend developmental and educational training courses in the United Kingdom.

EC Draft Regulations

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what categories of draft regulations will be accepted by the British presidency of the European Council as being put forward as list A items by the Committee of Permanent Representatives.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Council's rules of procedure state:

"items for which approval of the Council is possible without discussion shall be included in Part A, but this does not exclude the possibility of any member of the Council or of the Commission expressing an opinion at the time of the approval of these items and having statements included in the minutes.

However, an 'A' item shall be withdrawn from the agenda, unless the Council decides otherwise, if a position on an 'A' item might lead to further discussion thereof or if a member of the Council or the Commission so requests."

It is clearly not possible now to predict which items will be taken as A items in any Council during the United Kingdom presidency.

Civil Servants

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many civil servants in his Department are paid at a rate exceeding that of a Cabinet Minister.

Mr. Goodlad: There are 18 officers in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and diplomatic service whose pay exceeds that of a Cabinet Minister.

Tibet

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the number of Chinese settling in the Tibetan autonomous region and in the Tibetan autonomous areas in Qinghai, Sichnan, Gansa and Yunnan provinces, and the practice of the Chinese authorities to encourage Chinese immigration into these same areas, by freely granting licences to trade.

Mr. Goodlad: There have been numerous reports about the number of Chinese settling in Tibet. However, there is little or no reliable independent confirmation that a policy exists. According to the most recent Chinese census in 1990, over 95 per cent. of the population of the Tibet autonomous region is Tibetan while 3·7 per cent. is Han Chinese. The Chinese authorities have announced their intention of creating a special economic and technological zone in Lhasa aimed at attracting investment from other provinces, and from foreign countries.

Brazil (Street Children)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will meet the Brazilian ambassador on a regular basis to discuss progress on bringing to justice the perpetrators of the killings of street children in Brazil.

Mr. Garel-Jones: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to his question on 30 June, at column 508.

GCHQ, Cheltenham

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will reconsider his policy on trade union membership at Government communications headquarters, Cheltenham.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government remain convinced that membership of national civil service trade unions is incompatible with employment at GCHQ. However, we remain ready to listen to any proposals the Council of Civil Service Unions may have for alternative arrangements which would meet the Government's operational aims.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Expert Witnesses

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what provisions have been made by police forces to give adequate notice to expert witnesses of the date and time of cases in which they are to give evidence in the Crown court.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Police forces recognise the need to give all witnesses as much notice as possible of the date of the trial, and generally do so as soon as they know the date from the Crown court lists. If the trial date is unexpectedly brought forward, however, they might only be able to give witnesses comparatively short notice.

Arrests (Reporting)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on police forces informing the media of opportunities to cover the arrest of people in connection with criminal charges.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Communications between the police and the press is an operational matter for chief officers, who must have regard to the relevant provisions of the Contempt of Court Act 1981.

The Holocaust

Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the adequacy of existing race relations legislation to deal with untrue claims about the holocaust.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government deplore the sentiments expressed by exponents of "holocaust revisionism" and other extreme right-wing groups.

It has always been the tradition in this country that people have the right to express their views—however controversial or repugnant they may be—provided that they do so within the law, including that covering incitement to racial hatred.

We believe that part III of the Public Order Act 1986 has played an important part in deterring acts which are likely or intended to stir up racial hatred and it is for the police and prosecuting authorities to decide whether proceedings should be taken in any particular case. We shall continue to keep the legislation and its operation under review but we have no plans at present for amending it.

Electoral Quotas

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out, on the assumption of an unchanged number of parliamentary constituencies for England (a) the 1991 electoral quota and (b) the entitlement of each county and London borough.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The 1991 electoral quota for England is 69,281.

The entitlement of each county and London borough is given in the tables:

Probation Service, London

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he intends to take to prevent the services provided by the inner London probation service homeless action research team being adversely affected by the imposition of cash limited budgets.

Mr. Jack: Decisions on the deployment of resources within the inner London and City probation service are matters for the management of the service, subject to their statutory responsibilities and national policies, standards and objectives. In 1992-93, the first year of cash limits on central government support to probation service expenditure, to the cash limit for the inner London and City probation service represents a 26·7 per cent. increase over their 1990-91 outturn compared with a national increase of 25·7 per cent.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current size of each index of the new police national computer; and if he will include in these statistics an indication of the minimum and maximum size of each index over the past year.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is as follows:

	Numbers
Vehicles (including stolen reports)	41,222,646
Persons (including wanted/missing and disqualified drivers)	5,658,603
Convictions	4,223,022
Fingerprints	4,305,814
Property	41,682
Police directories	3,542

Figures on the minimum and maximum size of each database over the last year are not available.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current size of each category in the wanted and missing persons' index of the new police national computer; and if he will include in these statistics an indication of the minimum and maximum size of each category on the index over the year.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is as follows:

	Numbers
Wanted	32,378
Failed to appear	36,410

Figures on the minimum and maximum size of each category over the last year are not available.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current size of each category in the stolen and suspect vehicle index of the new police national computer; and if he will include in these statistics an indication of the minimum and maximum size of each category in the index over the year.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is as follows:

Figures on the minimum and maximum size of each category over the last year are not available.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many accesses were made to each index of the new police national computer over the last year; and if he will include in these statistics an indication of the number of access requests that could search more than one index.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The following accesses have been made to the new police national computer since it came into operation on 16 September 1991:

Number of accesses to the new police national computer since 16 September 1991

	Number[1]
Vehicles (including stolen reports)	17,935,412

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the number of accesses made to the police national computer by each constabulary over the last year; and if he will give the proportion or access requests made to the vehicle indexes of the new police national computer.

Prison Escapees

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide a list of all prison escapees since 1974, including their original offences, sentences and time left unserved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information requested by the hon. Member is available centrally only for prisoners who escaped since 20 June 1988. However, it would not be right to publish information which relates to individual prisoners. A total of 936 prisoners are recorded as having escaped between that date and 20 June this year.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were recaptured in 1991 after escape; what was the average length of time before they were recaptured; and what were the comparable figures for 1981 and 1986.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A total of 251 prisoners who had escaped from prison custody were recaptured in 1991, some of whom escaped before 1991. This includes prisoners who had escaped from penal establishments and prisoners who had escaped while being escorted by prison staff outside penal establishments, some before 1991.

The figure does not include prisoners recaptured at or immediately following the time of escape; in these incidents the escape and recapture are subsumed in a single incident report of the escape; and this information could be retrieved only by a detailed manual search and at disproportionate cost.

The average length of time prisoners were unlawfully at large was 40 days.

On 20 June 1988 a new system of recording incident details came into operation. Prior to that date, records were not maintained centrally and information can be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the number of (a) male and (b) female prison escapees in (i) Wales and (ii) the United Kingdom in 1991 together with comparable figures for 1981 and 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The following information relates to England and Wales.

In 1991, 311 prisoners were recorded as having escaped from prison or prison escort in England and Wales. Of these, 306 were male and five female.

There are no female penal establishments in Wales, and consequently no female prisoners are recorded as escaping from penal establishments in Wales in 1991. There is one recorded escape from prison escort when a female prisoner escaped while attending Swansea magistrates court. The inmate had travelled to court, under escort, from a penal establishment in England.

There was one recorded escape incident from male penal establishments in Wales in 1991; two prisoners escaped.

The total number of escapees in 1981 was 201 and in the 12 months to 31 March 1987 it was 192. Information about the sex of those escapees is not available centrally.

On 20 June 1988 a new system for recording incident details came into operation. Prior to that date, records were not maintained centrally and detailed information can be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Race Relations

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the harmonisation of race relations laws of the member states of the European Community.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government are opposed absolutely to discrimination on grounds of race; and this position is reflected in all our discussions with our European partners on these matters. The detailed legislative arrangements in other member states are, however, a matter for them, taking account of their particular circumstances.

Civil Servants

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many civil servants in his Department are paid at a rate exceeding that of a Cabinet Minister.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The total salary, including reduced parliamentary salary, of most Cabinet Ministers is £63,047. The number of civil servants in the Home Office whose pay currently exceeds this figure is three.

Air Guns

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents involving personal injury caused by air guns have been reported in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Jack: Statistics on the number of notifiable offences recorded by the police in which air weapons were reported to have caused injury are published in Criminal Statistics, England and Wales. The 1990 edition gives figures for the years 1980-1990 in table 3.10. A copy of this publication is in the Library.

South Wales Police

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what fresh assessment he has made of the manpower needs of the south Wales police following criticism of his Department for using a mistaken assessment of the urban/rural split in the South Wales area.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 12 June to a question from the hon. Member for Cheltenham (Mr. Jones).

Football Matches

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing for Football League matches in England and Wales for each of the seasons 1987-88, 1988-89, 1989-90, 1990-91, 1991-92 and as a total over to same period (a) the combined total of arrests and ejections, (b) total attendances at such matches and (c) (a), as a percentage of (b); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is contained in the following table:

Season	Arrests and ejections (a)	Attendance[1] (b)	Arrests and ejections (a) as a percentage of (b)
1991-92	8,556	20.487,192	0·04
1990-91	9,190	19,541,341	0·05
1989-90	12,918	19,466,826	0·07
1988-89	13,792	18,477,565	0·07
1987-88	12,689	17,968,887	0·07

[1] These figures which have been provided by the Football League may differ slightly from those given in earlier replies based on information from police.

European Frontier Control

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with his EC counterparts about publishing the convention on European frontier control; if he will take steps to arrange for its publication; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The question of publication has not been discussed between EC Ministers. International treaties are normally published only after signature. In this case, the provisions were explained fully in a reply to a written question by my predecessor on 20 June 1991, Official Report, columns 242-43, in Home Office evidence to the Home Affairs Select Committee. In view of the very long delay since agreement was reached on the general substance of the draft convention, I have now decided to make the draft text available to Parliament. Copies will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

European Community

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the meeting of Trevi and European Community Immigration Ministers in Lisbon on 11 and 12 June.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Discussion at the meeting of Trevi Ministers focused on the establishment of Europol—a European police office to facilitate the exchange of information and experience necessary to prevent and combat terrorism, unlawful drug trafficking and other serious forms of international crime. It was agreed that a convention between the member states would be needed before Europol could be fully operational. However, work on the first stage of Europol—the European drugs unit—is proceeding with the aim of establishing the unit by 1 January 1993 on the basis of a preliminary agreement among the member states.

It was agreed that a project team led by Germany should be established to take work forward on the unit. The project team would begin its work in Strasbourg. No decision was taken on the future location of Europol.

The meeting of Ministers concerned with immigration, which was attended by a vice president of the European Commission, was the 12th in the series of meetings held towards the end of each presidency since 1986. The European Commission made a statement on its communication setting out its views on the requirements of article 8A of the treaty of Rome which has now been deposited in Parliament according to the normal rules for scrutiny of Community documents.

I made clear the Government's view that article 8A applies only to EC nationals and had no effect on our entitlement to retain a frontier-based system for controlling third country nationals. I emphasised that such a system necessitates a light check on EC nationals in order to ensure that the control of third country nationals is not evaded. I stressed the desirability of avoiding confrontation on this issue and I expressed a willingness to explore ways of keeping delays at frontiers to an unavoidable minimum in the interests of British and other Community citizens.

I join other Ministers in stressing the importance of the external frontiers convention, signature of which continues to be held up because of a problem raised by Spain over the application of the convention to Gibraltar.

On asylum, I announced that the United Kingdom hoped to ratify the Dublin convention shortly. Ministers agreed to consider extending the system of the Dublin convention to third countries, by means of a parallel convention.

Ministers discussed the issue of refugees from Bosnia-Herzegovina.

Asylum

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for entry clearance in order to seek asylum in the United Kingdom were (a) received and (b) granted by country during 1991 and the first quarter of 1992.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 6 July 1992]: The available information on applications for asylum in the United Kingdom made abroad is given in the table. These figures may be under-recorded.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many passengers seeking political asylum in (a) 1990, (b) 1991 and (c) 1992 up to the nearest available date were granted temporary admission.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 6 July 1992]: The information requested on temporary admission is not available centrally.

The information on detention is not available in the form requested. However, information on passengers seeking asylum who at 3 July 1992 had been detained for seven days or more is given in the table.

WALES

Castell Alun High School

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will pay an official visit to Castell Alun high school.

Mr. David Hunt: I have no plans at present to do so. My right hon. Friend the Minister of State visited the school in May 1988.

Tourism

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Wales tourist board over its planned consultative paper on tourism and the environment in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend and I meet regularly with the Wales tourist board along with officials to discuss the development of suitable policies including the preparation of a new national tourism strategy to take tourism in Wales into the next century.

The board has announced its intention to issue a series of consultative papers dealing with some of the key themes to be covered within the strategy, including tourism and the environment. The consultations will be supported by research studies and other papers relevant to the strategy.

We commend the board in taking forward this initiative.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of the budget of the Welsh tourist board is currently spent outside the United Kingdom on the marketing of Wales as a tourist location.

Sir Wyn Roberts: For 1992-93, 4·8 per cent of the Wales tourist board's net provisional budget will be allocated for the overseas promotion of Wales as a tourist destination.

Dentistry

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the effect of the decision by Gwent dental practitioners not to accept new national health service patients.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is for the Gwent family health services authority (FHSA), as manager of general dental services in its locality, to address the issue of NHS dental care drawing upon its expert local knowledge. If the FHSA should experience any difficulty in securing NHS care for its local residents, it can apply to the Department for approval to employ a salaried dentist.

In the meantime, the community dental service provides a safety net for patients who are unable to obtain treatment under the general dental services.

Paediatrics

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the health authority areas in Wales which currently have a paediatric pathologist in post; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not available centrally.

Metabolic Disease

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much funding is currently allocated in each health authority area in Wales towards the provision of services for the detection of inherited metabolic disease; and if he will make it his policy to ensure adequate funding is granted to existing schemes for a two-year period to allow for successor arrangements to be fully evaluated.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Screening for inherited metabolic disease is undertaken for health authorities, by the medical genetics centre at the University hospital of Wales and through the supra-regional assay service. Funding has been devolved to the district authorities and details of specific costs are not held centrally.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has concluded his discussions with local authority associations concerning the reorganisation of local government in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: No.

Council House Sales

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has for the phased release of receipts from the sales of council houses in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) on 19 June 1992, Official Report, column 715.

Civil Servants

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many civil servants in his Department are paid at a rate exceeding that of a Cabinet Minister.

Mr. David Hunt: The total salary, including reduced parliamentary salary, of most Cabinet Ministers is £63,047. The number of civil srvants in the Welsh Office whose pay exceeds that figure is one.

Recycling

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much paper, by volume and by cost, he estimates is used annually by his Department; what arrangements are made for its recycling; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department uses an estimated 360 tonnes of paper, with an estimated value of £293,000 per annum. All restricted waste and shredded confidential waste are collected for recycling into various kinds of tissue-type paper. For other types of waste paper, the Welsh Office is currently trialling a waste paper recycling scheme. If the trial is successful, the scheme will be extended throughout the Department.

Unitary Authority

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if it is his intention that the new unitary authority based in Cardiff will be bounded on the north by a line based on the current natural physical boundaries which form the boundary between the current Cardiff authority and the current Rhymny Valley authority.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave him on 6 July 1992, Official Report, columns 7-8.

Commonwealth Games

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the response of the Commonwealth Games Council for Wales to the recommendations of the Sports Council for Wales on the funding and organisation of the Commonwealth Games Council for Wales especially in respect of the Commonwealth games in Canada.

Mr. David Hunt: It is a matter for the Sports Council for Wales to assess the response of the Commonwealth Games Council for Wales to the recommendations contained in its report.

Tenants (Arrears)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will bring forward proposals for powers to issue regulations to local authorities in Wales to prevent eviction of local authority tenants for arrears of water and environmental charges.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No. Local authorities do not have powers to evict tenants solely on the grounds of the non-payment of water and environmental charges.

Trusts (Salaries)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to require national health service trusts to publish the salary and fringe benefit packages of their executive directors in their annual reports.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: NHS trusts in Wales will be required to publish annual financial statements. The information to be provided will include:

(i) Total emoluments paid to the chairman and to the highest paid board member;
(ii) Emoluments paid to other board members in bands of £5,000 with no lower limit;
(iii) The number of employees, excluding executive directors, who received remuneration in excess of £40,000 in bands of £5,000.

Water Disconnections

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing the number of water disconnections in Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside to the hon. Member for Dundee, East (Mr. McAllion) on 24 June 1992, Official Report, column 204. Information prior to 1984-85 was not held centrally. Since privatisation, this information is collected by the Office of Water Services. Data are also published by the Water Services Association in "Water Facts", copies of which are in the Library of the House.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Foie Gras

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will show the volume of imports of foie gras into the United Kingdom, and their countries of origin, in the most recent year for which figures are available.

Mr. Soames: Provisional figures for 1991 show that the United Kindom imported 24,072 kg of foie gras—classified as "fatty livers of geese or ducks"—21,622 kg of which was dispatched from France and the remaining 2,450 kg from the Netherlands.
Source: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Civil Servants

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many civil servants in his Department are paid at a rate exceeding that of a Cabinet Minister.

Mr. Curry: The total salary, including reduced parliamentary salary, of most Cabinet Ministers is £63,047. Only three staff in the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and its agencies are currently paid above that figure.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many fishing vessels beneficially owned in other EC member states are registered as fishing vessels in the United Kingdom; and what countries are involved.

Mr. Norris: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to my answer on 9 June, Official Report, column 110. There are now some 56 Spanish, 18 Dutch, two Danish and one Belgian vessels.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Electricity Prices

Mr. Olner: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has to review the regulatory system for controlling the level of domestic electricity prices.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for the Director General of Electricity Supply.

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what representations he has had from the Major Energy Users Council about the costs of electricity to the steel industry;

(2) when he will next meet the Energy Intensive Users Group and the Major Energy Users Council to discuss electricity-pricing mechanisms;

(3) if he will bring forward proposals to reduce the fossil fuel levy to large users of electricity and manufacturing industry to the extent necessary to bring their energy costs in line with European competitors;

(4) if he will bring in reforms to the regulatory mechanism to ensure that electricity costs for manufacturing industry are competitive.

Mr. Eggar: I recently met representatives of the Major Energy Users Council and Energy Intensive Users Group to discuss electricity prices for their members. Proposals they put forward will be considered.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the opencast coal sites which are now, or have previously been, operated by the R A Young Mining Company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for British Coal as the licensing authority under the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act 1946.

Dounreay

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will place in the Library details of what is stored in the high active shaft at Dounreay.

Mr. Eggar: This is a management matter for the Atomic Energy Authority. I am asking the chairman of the AEA to write to the hon. Member.

Combined Heat and Power

Mr. Dafis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plan he has to remove market distortions affecting combined heat and power developers in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: The operation of the electricity market is a matter for the Director General of Electricity Supply.

British Waterways Board

Mr. Conway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to implement the recommendations of the 1987 Monopolies and Mergers Commission inquiry into the activities of the British Waterways Board; and if he will ask the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to institute a further inquiry.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects the further external review of the British Waterways Board as recommended in paragraph 2.35 of the 1987 Monopolies and Mergers Commission inquiry into the British Waterways Board to commence.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: In response to a question from Lord Brougham and Vaux on 24 July 1990, Lord Strathclyde welcomed the British Waterways Board's third and final response to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's 1987 report. The board accepted almost all the commission's recommendations.

At paragraph 2.35 of its 1987 report, the commission recommended that a further external review of BWB's progress in improving its efficiency should be undertaken in five years' time. There is no immediate plan to invite the commission to undertake such a review.

Energy Study

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the details of the study conducted by the former Department of Energy in conjunction with the Major Energy Users Council.

Mr. Eggar: The study conducted by the former Department of Energy and the Major Energy Users Council is based on information supplied by individual companies; these details are commercially confidential.

Nuclear Safety

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to receive the published report from the nuclear installations inspectorate on the long-term safety reviews for Dungeness A, Oldbury, Sizewell A, Trawsfynydd and Wylfa.

Mr. Eggar: The Health and Safety Executive has already published the nuclear installations inspectorate's detailed findings on Berkeley, Bradwell, Calder Hall, Chapelcross, Hinkley Point A, and Hunterston A. I understand that Nuclear Electric's safety reviews for the remaining Magnox power stations are currently at various stages of assessment by the NII. However, the need for thoroughness in the assessment of these reviews precludes the setting of a precise timetable. Nevertheless, I am assured by the NII that its findings on each of the remaining stations will be published at the earliest opportunity with the last of them, which will address Wylfa, being completed in 1994.

National Engineering Laboratory

Mr. Ingram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the future of the National Engineering Laboratory.

Mr. Leigh: The National Engineering Laboratory became an executive agency of the Department of Trade and Industry in October 1990 with the mission, published in its framework document at the time, of becoming commercially viable with a view to eventual privatisation. Good progress has been made towards that object. The agency's targets for 1991-92, its first year as an executive agency, were published on 16 October 1990 and all of them were achieved.

Post Office

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the non-executive directors appointed to the board of the Post Office; on what basis they were selected; and for what levels of remuneration they are eligible.

Mr. Leigh: The non-executive members of the Post Office Board are as follows:

Mrs. H. M. Cropper
Mr. D. Gladwin CBE JP
Dr. D. Grieves CBE
Mr. D. Hodson

These members were appointed by the Secretary of State for the wide range of skills and experience in industry, and for the independent judgment they bring to the board. Remuneration of directors of the Post Office is determined by the Secretary of State, with the approval of the Treasury, on an individual basis. The levels of remuneration paid are within the ranges shown in the Post Office report and accounts for 1991-92.

Subcontractors (Late Payment)

Dr. Wright: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimates he has made of the effects of late payment in relation to payments due from main to sub-contractors.

Mr. Leigh: No such estimates have been made by the Department of Trade and Industry. I am nevertheless aware that late payment is a significant problem for sub-contractors.

Nuclear Energy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent changes have been made by his Department in the provision of public information on nuclear energy in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: It is the Government's policy to assist Parliament and the public by being as open as practicable in the provision of information on civil nuclear energy in the United Kingdom, subject to considerations of security, commercial confidentiality and the costs of preparing the information.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will list for each year of operation since 1986 the percentage of the yearly total of nuclear material reprocessed at the Windscale B204 plant at Sellafield that arose from reactors operated by Nuclear Electric, Scottish Nuclear or their predecessor electricity boards;

(2) what proportion of the total weight of plutonium reprocessed at Sellafield, in the period 1986 to date, originated in Central Electricity Generating Board/ Nuclear Electric installations.

Mr. Eggar: The information has been extracted from the annual press releases on plutonium for the years in question as published by the former Department of Energy and placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will now make it his policy to make available through the Public Record Office or other appropriate routes all of those documents relating to the foundation of the civil nuclear programme withheld from public inspection beyond the 30-year period.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 30 June 1992]: The records in question continue to be reviewed in accordance with the criteria established under the Public Records Acts. Those which are withheld from public inspection beyond the 30-year period are progressively released as and when the reasons for their closure or retention cease to apply.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will take steps to renegotiate the confidentiality clauses in intergovernmental plutonium export agreements to permit the wider publication of information on amounts and end-use declarations involved.

Mr. Eggar: Intergovernmental exchanges of notes covering the transfer of significant quantities of plutonium are published documents. They contain information on the quantity of material to be exported and a declaration of peaceful end-use.

CE Marks

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment the Government have made of the progress of British construction companies in meeting the requirements for CE marks to be awarded.

Mr. Baldry: I have been asked to reply.

CE marks will be awarded within the framework of the EC construction products directive. They will be based on approved European technical specifications. It will be some time before these specifications are written. A recent sample survey by the Building Research Establishment has indicated that United Kingdom manufacturers are well placed to meet the procedures likely to be followed for CE marking. The Department is in close contact with the industry's representative organisations to ensure the developing requirements of the construction products directive are understood.

Power Cut, Cardiff

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the power cut in Cardiff on 30 June and its causes, costs and consequences and the measures which are being considered to avoid a repetition.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 3 July 1992]: It is for the company to explain the circumstances of a particular incident. I understand that South Wales Electricity is to make an investigation into this matter.

Chlor-alkali

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received concerning the impact of recent bulk electricity price increases on the future production of chlor-alkali in the United Kingdom; what information he has on the prices paid in other Organisation of Economic Co-operation and Development countries by producers of chlor-alkali and other heavy industrial processes, whose viability is dependent on electricity price relativities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 3 July 1992]: I have met representatives of the chlor-alkali industry and of other industries which are major users of electricity.

According to data supplied under the price transparency directive, electricity prices paid by large and medium consumers in the United Kingdom are around the middle of the range of other EC member states. In addition, the latest available data shows United Kingdom electricity prices for industry to be below the OECD average.

Self-catering Accommodation (Fire Safety)

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 29 June, Official Report, column 405, how long a consultation period he envisages for the draft amendment regulations and associated documents relating to the fire safety of furnishings in respect of self-catering accommodation under the provisions of the Consumer Protection Act 1987; what period of moratorium he proposes with effect from 1 March 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 3 July 1992]: The Department plans to allow a period of two months for comments by interested parties on the draft amendment regulations and associated documents relating to the fire safety of furnishings in respect of self-catering accommodation under the provisions of the Consumer Protection Act 1987.

The date on which the requirement will apply will be decided in the light of this consultation.

Electricity Division

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many people were employed in the electricity division of his Department on the most recent date for which this information is available.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 3 July 1992]: Forty-seven people were employed in the Department's electricity division as at Wednesday 1 July 1992.

Small Firms Division

Mr. Betts: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to relocate staff of the small firms division of his Department currently based in Sheffield.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 3 July 1992]: My Department is conducting a review to determine the best location for the work of the small firms division and I will make a decision in due course in the light of the findings. Staff currently working in the division are on loan from the Department of Employment and, on any outcome of the review, will be able to return to that Department if they so choose.

Telephone and Postal Canvassing

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish any proposed changes either emanating from the EC or his own Department which would restrict telephone and postal canvassing for trade or other commercial purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 6 July 1992]: My Department has no plans for restrictions on telephone and postal canvassing for trade or other commercial purposes. We are discussing a European Commission proposal dated 9 June 1992 to the Council of Ministers for a directive on the protection of consumers in respect of contracts negotiated at a distance—distance selling. This proposal would impact on various kinds of direct marketing including mail order, telephone selling and automated telephone calling. A copy of the proposal is available in the Library of the House.

In addition, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Home Affairs is discussing with the Commission a further Commission proposal for a directive on data protection which, if adopted, would also be likely to affect direct marketing activities as well as on cross-border data transfer.

Timeshare

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many complaints his Department has received about International Resort Sales and Travel Ltd.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 1 July 1992]: I have as yet received no such complaints. I understand, however, that a number of complaints have been made to local trading standards officers.

Pyramid Selling

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many complaints his Department has received concerning pyramid selling schemes; how many of the complaints were upheld; and how many companies were prosecuted under part XI of the Fair Trading Act 1973, for each year from 1973 to 1992.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 3 July 1992]: My Department gets thousands of complaints about pyramid selling schemes, but the vast majority are on the mistaken assumption that such schemes are all illegal. The information requested on prosecutions under part XI of the Fair Trading Act 1973 is not available. To the best of my knowledge, my Department has prosecuted two companies and individuals. These prosecutions, which related to a single scheme, were in 1987.

Price Marking Order 1991

Mr. Ancram: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will review section 10 of the Price Marking Order 1991 in the light of representations made to him on its effect.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 6 July 1992]: I am reviewing the order as a whole in the light of representations received. The draft amending order now in preparation will take account of these representations, so far as is practicable within the terms of the EC directives which the order implements.

HEALTH

Prescription Charges

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for each year from 1970 to 1991 what was the total number of people in each of the exemption categories for prescription charges.

Dr. Mawhinney: The available information is shown in the tables.

Metabolic Disease

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to issue direct contacts for the provision of services associated with the detection of inherited metabolic disease.

Mr. Sackville: We recognise that particular care is required in developing appropriate contracting arrangements for specialist services which are provided for a disparate catchment population. The national health service management executive has agreed with regional general managers that regions should take a close interest in purchasing arrangements for such services, both in NHS trust hospitals and in those managed directly by districts. In taking on this role, regions have an interest in ensuring that those services which are required continue to be available and therefore that specialist services have a reasonable level of secure income.

Respite Care

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans she has to collect information on provision of respite care in each local authority area;

(2) what figures her Department currently collects regarding respite care provided through local authorities; and when the figures will be published.

Mr. Yeo: Respite care can take many forms, such as a short-stay placement in a residential setting or hospital, attendance at a day centre, or arrangements for a care worker or volunteer to stay in the person's own home—perhaps for only a few hours a week—to provide respite for their main carer. Statistics collected by the Department do not therefore include respite care as a specific item.

Information is collected centrally on the numbers of short-stay admissions and short-stay residents in local authority staffed residential homes for adults for each local authority in England. These figures do not distinguish people receiving respite care from those receiving emergency, phased or intermittent care, which categories may all include elements of respite care. A copy of the publication—RA/91/2—containing the data for the year ending 31 March 1991 for the elderly and younger physically handicapped client groups is in the Library.

Revised central statistical returns identify the provision of accommodation to children under section 20 of the Children Act 1989 by means of an agreement covering a series of placements. This information will include episodes of respite care but does not specifically identify them. The first such returns relate to the period ending 31 March 1992; no publication date for the information has been set.

There are no current plans to collect additional information in respect of respite care.

Mrs. Jane Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will encourage local authorities to publish detailed information regarding respite provisions available in their respective areas.

Mr. Yeo: Local authorities are expected to provide information to carers about the services available to support them, including respite care services. Community care plans should also include information about the provision of such services.

Atopic Illnesses

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department had undertaken concerning the relationship between the agricultural use of pesticides and the incidence of atopic illnesses.

Mr. Sackville: Biomedical research is a matter for the Medical Research Council which is funded by the Office of Science and Technology.

General Practitioner Fund Holders

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will hold talks with the chairman of the Mid-Cheshire trust on priorities given to fund-holding general practitioners in gynaecology.

Mr. Sackville: It is a matter for the trust to agree contracts with purchasers.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will investigate the effects on patients of fund-holding general practitioners in the Crewe and Nantwich area.

Dr. Mawhinney: No.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidelines she has issued to trust hospitals to ensure that patients from fund-holding general practitioners do not take precedence over the patients of non-fund-holding general practitioners.

Dr. Mawhinney: In June of last year, the national health service management executive and the joint consultants committee of the British Medical Association issued guidance on GP fund holding in EL(91)84, a copy of which is available in the Library. This sets out the criteria for acceptable contracts to be agreed between GP fund holders and all NHS hospitals, whether or not they have trust status. It clearly states that hospitals should not offer contracts to fund holders which would disadvantage patients of other purchasers.

Multiple Pregnancies

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to publish the counselling guide about multiple pregnancies for patients attending infertility treatment centres which was produced by Frances Price of Cambridge university as part of research commissioned by her Department.

Mr. Sackville: No decisions have yet been made concerning the possible publication of this booklet.

Leeds General Infirmary

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of (a) the cost of transferring the cardiothoracic facilities from Killingbeck to the Leeds general infirmary and (b) the cost of improving the Killingbeck facilities in the event of the transfer to the Leeds general infirmary not going ahead.

Mr. Sackville: I am advised that the net cost of transferring cardiothoracic facilities from Killingbeck to the Leeds general infirmary as part of an integrated redevelopment of Leeds general infirmary is estimated to be £2·1 million, taking into account site proceeds. The cost of upgrading Killingbeck to provide similar levels of performance is estimated to be £15·4 million.

Disability Working Allowance

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide for disabled persons who, because of low earnings, are entitled to disability working allowance to be exempt from national health service charges; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are no plans to exempt recipients of disability working allowance from NHS charges. Disability working allowance recipients may qualify for NHS charge remission on grounds of low income under the NHS low income scheme.

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated cost of exempting all disability working allowance recipients from national health service charges.

Dr. Mawhinney: Current estimates indicate that extending NHS charge exemption to everyone expected to qualify for disability working allowance would increase the Department's programme expenditure by over £3 million in a full year.

Trusts

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the current chairs and members of all the hospital trusts so far established, with their previous and current jobs and business interests, and their current salaries.

Dr. Mawhinney: Information concerning chairmen's and non-executive directors' previous and current jobs is not held centrally. Remuneration paid to chairmen and non-executive directors is as follows:

Chairmen
Band 1 £19,285
Band 2 £17,145
Band 3 £15,125

Non-executive directors
£5,000 (all non-executives)

Lists of the initial appointments of chairmen and non-executive directors of first wave NHS trusts which were made on 17 and 21 December 1990 and second wave NHS trusts on 1 November 1991, are available in the Library. Since then, the following appointments to NHS trusts have been made.

CHAIRMEN

Aylesbury Vale Community Healthcare NHS Trust
Sir Timothy Raison appointed from 1 June 1992 to 30 November 1994

Northern Devon Healthcare NHS Trust
Sir Michael Knight appointed from 1 April 1991 to 30 November 1995

West Dorset General Hospitals NHS Trust
Captain Michael Fulford-Dobson appointed from 1 December 1991 to 30 November 1995

NON-EXECUTIVE DIRECTORS

Leeds General Infirmary and Associated Hospitals NHS Trust
Mr. R. Farrar appointed from 7 February 1992 to 30 November 1994

Central Middlesex Hospital NHS Trust
Professor C. E. M. Normand appointed from 20 January 1992 to 30 November 1994
Mrs. D. J. W. Venables appointed from 18 February 1991 to 30 November 1993
Mrs. M. Ryder appointed from 23 January 1991 to 30 November 1992

St. Helier NHS Trust
Mr. R. B. Hill appointed from 1 December 1991 to 31 November 1992

East Somerset NHS Trust
Mr. J. D. P. Keegan appointed from 16 March 1991 to 30 November 1992

East Gloucestershire NHS Trust
Mrs. S. Pullen appointed from 1 December 1991 to 30 November 1992
Mrs. J. Ralph appointed from 1 June 1992 to 30 November 1994

Weston Area NHS Trust
Mr. R. Norton-Collins appointed from 1 May 1991 to 30 November 1994

Mental Health Foundation of Mid Staffordshire NHS Trust
Dr. J. F. Fleming-Patterson appointed from 1 May 1991 to 30 November 1994

Northern Devon Healthcare Trust
Mr. G. E. Andrews appointed from 1 April 1991 to 30 November 1995
Mr. D. Rowbottom appointed from 1 April 1991 to 30 November 1995
Mr. J. B. Nash appointed from 1 April 1991 to 30 November 1995
Miss D. M. Dibble appointed from 1 April 1991 to 30 November 1992
Mr. J. R. Urquhart appointed from 1 April 1991 to 30 November 1992

Bradford Hospitals NHS Trust
Mrs. Z. P. Manzoor appointed from 1 April 1991 to 30 November 1993

Royal National Orthopaedic Hospital

Miss J. Flindall appointed from 9 October 1991 to 30 November 1993

West Dorset Community Health NHS Trust
Ms. A. Neuberger appointed from 1 April 1992 to 30 November 1993

South Yorkshire Metropolitan Ambulance and Paramedic Services NHS Trust
Mrs. P. Battersby appointed from 12 March 1992 to 30 November 1993

Barnsley Community and Priority Services Trust
Mrs. J. R. Lees appointed from 8 June 1992 to 30 November 1994

South Bedfordshire Community Healthcare NHS Trust
Cllr. J. N. Tizard appointed from 15 June 1992 to 30 November 1993

The Bart's NHS Trust
Sir Charles Reece appointed from 17 February 1992 to 30 November 1993

Optimum Health Services NHS Trust
Mr. B. Huett appointed from 27 May 1992 to 30 November 1994

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will acquire and publish information on the comparable salary and fringe benefit packages of executive directors of health trusts in England and Wales.

Dr. Mawhinney: Annual accounts for each NHS trust in England show the emoluments of the highest paid board member separately and the number of board members receiving emoluments in bands of £5,000 with no lower limit. These statements also show the number of employees, excluding executive directors, receiving remuneration of over £40,000 in bands of £5,000.

Copies of NHS trusts' annnual accounts, when available, will be placed in the Library.

Junior Doctors

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of junior doctors in the national health service; what is the comparable figure for 1985; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: At 30 September 1990, the latest date for which figures are available centrally, there were 23,377 whole-time equivalent junior doctors in the national health service compared to 21,368 whole-time equivalent junior doctors at 30 September 1985. These figures are rounded to the nearest whole number and include all permanent paid and honorary medical staff.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average number of hours per week worked by junior doctors in the national health service; what is the maximum amount allowed by law; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: At 30 September 1990, the latest date for which information is available, junior hospital doctors in England and Wales were contracted to be on duty for an average of 79 hours per week. Information on the number of hours spent actually working is not routinely collected centrally.

There are currently no legal limits on the working hours of junior doctors. However, the new deal for junior doctors launched in June 1991 made clear our intention that, regardless of the contracted hours of duty for individual posts, from 31 December 1994 doctors in training employed on a full-time basis should not normally be expected to work for more than an average of 56 hours per week.

Specialists

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average number of weeks it takes a patient in the United Kingdom to see a specialist in the national health service; what is the comparable amount of time it takes for a citizen of (i) Germany, (ii) the United States of America and (iii) Japan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally. Information relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many cases of tuberculosis have been notified nationally in the current year and in each of the last 10 years; and if she will make a statement;

(2) how many cases of tuberculosis have been notified in London in the current year and in each of the last 10 years; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The latest available information from the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys is given in the table.

Notifications of tuberculosis

Year	England and Wales	Greater London
1981	8,128	2,495
1982	7,410	2,146
1983	6,803	2,027
1984	6,141	1,833
1985	5,857	1,741
1986	5,993	1,701
1987	5,086	1,445
1988	5,164	1,486
1989	5,432	1,646
1990	5,204	1,603
[1]1991	5,436	1,794
[2]1992	2,692	893

[2] Provisional (up to week ending 12 June 1992).

Advisory Committees

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the advisory committees and their memberships which advise her on matters relating to the European Community; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: There are no specific committees. We are advised by officials of the Department who consult other bodies on individual issues.

Civil Servants

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many civil servants in her Department are paid at a rate exceeding that of a Cabinet Minister.

Mr. Sackville: The total salary, including reduced parliamentary salary, of most Cabinet Ministers is £63,047. The number of civil servants in the Department of Health whose pay currently exceeds this figure is seven.

Homelessness

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what medical provision is available for homeless men and women and children respectively.

Mr. Yeo: General medical and hospital services are available to homeless people on the same basis as the rest of the population.

In some areas there are significant numbers of homeless people whose needs for general medical services cannot be fully met under the normal arrangements, and the Department is funding special schemes. There are 10 such schemes already and more are being considered. These are designed to make general medical services available to homeless people at places where they are known to congregate. Each is staffed by a team of health professionals, including a GP.

In addition, a demonstration project for homeless people who are mentally ill has been set up in London where the problem of homelessness is most acute. The £20 million programme includes up to 150 specialist short-term hostel places, 750 move-on places and four community psychiatric outreach teams.

Child Employment

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will strengthen regulatory powers to ensure employers' adherence to child employment byelaws.

Mr. Yeo: The Government are very much aware of the need to protect children in whatever form of activity they may be engaged. We are generally satisfied that the safeguards which exist in legislation and byelaws to protect children who work are presently adequate.

Suicide

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people committing suicide in each year from 1987 to the latest convenient date, were recorded as being (a) homeless or (b) schizophrenic or suffering other mental illness; and how many of these were (i) men and (ii) women.

Mr. Sackville: The number of people who have been recorded as having committed suicide and were homeless in each year from 1987 could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The number of those having been recorded as having committed suicide in the period in question as being schizophrenic or suffering from other mental illness is not available centrally.

Clinical Grading Appeals

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many clinical grading appeals have been decided in each month since the start of the current process; how many appeals have been allowed in each month, and how many disallowed (a) in England, (b) in Wales, (c) in Scotland and (d) in each health authority area in England, Wales and Scotland.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 1 July 1992]: The Department does not collect information on appeals at employing authority level. The available information has been placed in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT

Water (Lead Content)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department has received from the drinking water inspectorate on the number of water supply zones which exceed 15 mg/litres in lead content; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The drinking water inspectorate has received data on lead in water supplies from the water companies of England and Wales under the requirements of the information direction. The data relate to the concentration of lead in water supplies taken from consumers' taps in 1991, being set out in concentration bands of 10 µg/1. Information was not sought specifically in relation to 15 µg/1.

In 1991, approximately 77,000 samples from 2,565 water supply zones were analysed for lead: 76·7 per cent. contained 10 µg/1 or less; 10·6 per cent. contained between 11 and 20 µg/1; and 3·7 per cent. contained more than 50 µg/1, the standard set in the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989. At least one sample taken during 1991 from 1,908, 1,396 and 941 zones respectively contained more than 10, 20 and 50 µg/1 of lead. In each zone where there is a risk of the water exceeding the lead standard because of lead dissolved from consumers' pipes, companies are evaluating and, where appropriate, installing treatment to reduce the plumbosolvency of the water.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if Her Majesty's Government supported the amendments to paragraphs 20.1, 20.13, 20.15, 20.17, 20.20 and 20.26 of chapter 20 on the environmentally sound management of hazardous wastes including prevention of illegal international traffic in such wastes, of "Agenda 21" as presented to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

Mr. Maclean: Yes.

Advisory Committees

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the advisory committees and their memberships which advise him on matters relating to the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: There are no committees dedicated to advising my Department on European Community matters. However, we consult as widely as necessary to ensure European Community proposals are given full consideration, and receive advice and views from a wide variety of sources.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households in the Paisley, South constituency qualify for grant aid under the home energy efficiency scheme; and how many houses have been improved under the scheme in each year since its inception.

Mr. Maclean: In order to be eligible for grant under the home energy efficiency scheme, an applicant or his or her spouse must be in receipt of one of five passportable benefits: housing benefit, income support, family credit, community charge benefit and disability working allowance. In addition, his or her property must meet certain criteria concerning existing levels of insulation and receipt of a grant for similar work under previous schemes. Data on numbers of households eligible in any particular area at a particular time are not available.

Figures for the number of homes treated under the scheme are not collected on a constituency basis. Within the network installer area which contains the hon. Member's constituency, 3,495 homes have benefited from home energy efficiency scheme grant since 1 January 1991.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households in the Inverclyde district council area qualify for grant aid under the home energy efficiency scheme; and how many houses have been improved under the scheme since its inception in 1991.

Mr. Maclean: In order to be eligible for grant under the home energy efficiency scheme, an applicant or his or her spouse must be in receipt of one of five passportable benefits: housing benefit, income support, family credit, community charge benefit and disability working allowance. In addition, his or her property must meet certain criteria concerning existing levels of insulation and receipt of a grant for similar work under previous schemes. Data on numbers of households eligible in any particular area at a particular time are not available.

Figures for the number of homes treated under the scheme are not collected on the basis requested. Within the network installer area which contains the Inverclyde district council's area, 3,495 homes have benefited from HEES grant since 1 January 1991.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households in the City of Durham constituency qualify for grant aid under the home energy efficiency scheme; and how many houses have been improved under the scheme since its inception in 1991.

Mr. Maclean: In order to be eligible for grant under the home energy efficiency scheme, an applicant or his or her spouse must be in receipt of one of five passportable benefits: housing benefit, income support, family credit, community charge benefit and disability working allowance. In addition, his or her property must meet certain criteria concerning existing levels of insulation and receipt of a grant for similar work under previous schemes. Data on numbers of households eligible in any particular area at a particular time are not available.

Figures for the number of homes treated under the scheme are not collected on a constituency basis. Within the network installer area which contains the hon. Member's constituency, 1,017 homes have benefited from home energy efficiency scheme grant since 1 January 1991.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homes within the network installer area which contains the Leeds, West constituency have been improved under the home energy efficiency scheme since its inception in 1991.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 6 July 1992]: Within the network installer area, which contains the hon. Member's constituency, 2,058 homes have benefited from home energy efficiency scheme grant since 1 January 1991.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households in Preston have qualified for grant aid under the home energy efficiency scheme in the most recent available period; and how many houses have been improved under the home energy efficiency scheme in the network installer area including Preston since its inception in 1991.

Mr. Maclean: In order to be eligible for grant under the home energy efficiency scheme, an applicant or his or her spouse must be in receipt of one of five passportable benefits: housing benefit, income support, family credit, community charge benefit and disability working allowance. In addition, his or her property must meet certain criteria concerning existing levels of insulation and receipt of a grant for similar work under previous schemes. Data on numbers of households eligible in any particular area at a particular time are not available.

Within the network installer area which contains the hon. Member's constituency, 1,626 homes have benefited from home energy efficiency scheme grant since 1 January 1991.

Environmental Charter

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made towards issuing an environmental charter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State announced his intention to develop a charter for local authority environment services at the Prime Minister's seminar on 19 June. He has proposed that the charter should be developed through a working group of the central and local government environment forum and that it should build on the existing good practice in authorities. In addition, other environmental authorities will apply the charter principles to their services to the public.

Hoop Iron Housing

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what proposals he has to assist former tenants who have purchased hoop iron housing and are now unable to sell their properties;

(2) what consideration he has given to reports on the problems associated with hoop iron housing; and if he will make it his policy to include properties with this type of construction in the definition of defective housing under the Housing Act 1985.

Sir George Young: At the Department's suggestion, the London borough of Sutton has commissioned a report on these houses from the Building Research Establishment, which is expected shortly. When the borough, and the Department, have had an opportunity to consider its findings, it will be possible to decide whether any assistance to owners is needed, and, if so, what form it should take.

Civil Servants

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many civil servants in his Department are paid at a rate exceeding that of a Cabinet Minister.

Mr. Redwood: Four in the main Department and three in the Property Services Agency.

London Docklands (Vandalism)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the extent of building vandalisation in the London docklands area to avoid payment of rates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I have not been advised of any empty properties in London docklands that have been unusable by their owners in order to avoid rates liability.

Salt Water

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research his Department has undertaken on the use of salt water in fire hydrants, street cleaning or domestic sewerage.

Mr. Maclean: None. The Water Industry Act 1991 requires water companies to make available supplies of water for fire fighting, cleansing and watering highways, and other public purposes, in addition to their duty to supply water for domestic purposes. To deliver non-potable water for certain of these purposes would require the development of a separate supply system to avoid contamination of drinking water. The use of salt water for such purposes could also have implications for the contamination of land.

British Waterways Board

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to commercialise the operations of the British Waterways Board.

Mr. Maclean: As far as is consistent with its statutory obligations, the British Waterways Board is already required to run its affairs on a commercial basis. How it manages its day-to-day operations is a matter for the board, but in all its activities BWB should achieve value for money, seek an adequate return on investment and increase opportunities for private sector participation.

Council Rents

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing average council sector rents in each year since 1979 in cash and constant prices.

Sir George Young: Average local authority rents in England were as follows:

Average unrebated rent (£ per week)

As at April	As reported (£)	At 1992 prices (£)
1979	6·40	16·36
1980	7·71	16·19
1981	11·43	21·42
1982	13·52	23·16
1983	14·05	23·14
1984	14·75	23·10
1985	15·63	22·89
1986	16·45	23·38
1987	17·24	23·51
1988	18·88	24·77
1989	20·76	25·21
1990	23·79	26·40
1991	27·26	28·43
1992	[1]30·55	[1]30·55

[1] Estimates.

In 1991 61 per cent. of council tenants were receiving housing benefit and therefore not paying the full rent.

Water Disconnections

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the number of water disconnections in England in each year since 1979.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Dundee, East (Mr. McAllion) on 24 June, Official Report, column 204. Information prior to 1984-85 was not held centrally. Since privatisation this information is collected by the Director General of Water Services. It is also published by the Water Services Association in "Water Facts", copies of which are in the Library.

Local Authority Tenants (Arrears)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward proposals for powers to issue regulations to local authorities to prevent eviction of local authority tenants for arrears of water and environmental charges.

Mr. Maclean: No. Local authorities do not have powers to evict tenants solely on the grounds of the non-payment of water and environmental charges.

Non-domestic Rates

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review non-domestic rating regulations to ensure the same treatment for self-catering holiday units as for bed-and-breakfast accommodation.

Mr. Robin Squire: No. Bed-and-breakfast accommodation is not rated if the person who lives in the premises intends to make the accommodation available to six people or fewer and such use is subsidiary to the use of the property as his home. It would not be appropriate to apply such a test to self-catering holiday units.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his current policy on planning regulations and consents in environmentally sensitive areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The Government's planning policy for areas of environmental sensitivity, including national parks and areas of outstanding natural beauty, is set out in planning policy guidance note 7, "The Countryside and the Rural Economy". Paragraph 3.18 states that designation as an environmentally sensitive area under the Agriculture Act 1986 does not affect the status of the area in terms of national planning policies or development control regulations. However, the features which contributed to the designation of the area as an ESA may sometimes also be important features in local countryside planning policies and development control decisions.

Care Homes

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to restrict the liability of residential care homes to the council tax.

Mr. Robin Squire: It is right that residential care homes should contribute to the cost of local services from which they benefit. However, we have taken several measures to ensure that these contributions are modest and fair.

Special rules mean that the owner of a care home, not its residents, will be liable to pay the council tax bill. The size of that bill will be kept down by the banding arrangements, which ensure that larger dwellings give rise to less tax, proportionate to their value, than smaller ones.

There will be personal discounts for residents of care homes, so that they do not count towards the personal element of the tax. In many cases these discounts will reduce the council tax bill by 50 per cent. Finally, any home with a resident who, because of a disability, needs a room, an extra bathroom or kitchen, or circulation space indoors for a wheelchair will be able to apply to the local authority for a reduction equivalent to one valuation band.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will require county councils to provide information to district councils which is considered necessary by district councils for the purposes of their submissions to the Royal Commission on the restructuring of local government.

Mr. Robin Squire: Under schedule 2 to the Local Government Act 1992, public bodies have a duty to supply the Local Government Commission with any information which it reasonably requires in connection with any of its functions. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State intends to direct the commission to make such information available on request to local authorities provided the information is not sensitive for commercial or other reasons.

Planning

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to review the permitted development rights granted in the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1988 in relation to environmental assessment; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: Yes. We are committed to ensuring that all projects which could have significant environmental effects are thoroughly assessed by planning authorities before going forward. The Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988 already secures this for projects which require a planning permission. But certain minor classes of development defined in the General Development Order do not presently require a specific planning application and this may require amendment.

A consultation paper will shortly be issued with proposals for such amendments on which the views of industry, the public and planning authorities will be sought.

Peat

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the terms of reference of the working group on peat extraction.

Mr. Baldry: I am pleased to announce that a working group has been convened by my Department which will work to the following terms of reference. Membership of the working group includes representatives of the peat industry, mineral planning authorities, the statutory nature and countryside conservation bodies, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Forestry Commission and the Scottish Office Environment Department. The working group will advise my Department about:

current peat extraction and usage having regard to the overall peatland resource in Great Britain and the place of imports and alternatives, and having regard to the Government's general policies for reconciling the supply of minerals with sustainable development; any required guidance at national level in respect of development control over existing extraction sites; guidance on rehabilitation of existing workings; and guidance in respect of future land-use issues affecting peatlands, especially the nature conservation of, and extraction from, lowland peat mires.

Particular topics that the group will need to consider include:

(i) occurrence and types of peat;

(ii) the nature conservation status of the identified peat areas, including the scale and extent of the protected areas; and the archaeological and landscape importance of peatlands;

(iii) current areas of peat production;

(iv) production and uses of peat, and the place of imports;

(v) peat working practices, rehabilitation and after-uses, including the issues of old peat permissions as part of the Department's review of the operation of the 1981 Minerals Act;

(vi) peat alternatives;

(vii) the effects of mineral extraction on other peatland land uses (eg. conservation, agriculture and forestry);

(viii) other land uses affecting peatlands (eg. agriculture and forestry);

(ix) use of information from the above to consider preparation of further planning guidance about nature conservation, peat extraction and other land-use matters affecting peatlands.

Information on these topics will be obtained through factual papers and other information provided by my Department and other members of the working group. The Department will also invite information and views on these topics from additional consultees.

The Department's remit for minerals and planning policy legislation and guidance covers England. The Scottish and Welsh Offices are associated with the group, whose work will assist in preparing any similar guidance for Scotland and Wales.

Rents

Mr. Cann: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from housing associations on the effect of reductions in Government grants on the level of rents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 6 July 1992]: My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning met representatives of the National Federation of Housing Associations recently to discuss housing association matters, including the level of rents. He has also received some letters from individual associations. The Housing Corporation is monitoring outturn rents under the new financial regime and will shortly be putting proposals to the Department for grant rates in 1993-94. In reaching a decision we will take into account the views expressed by the federation and associations. Schemes are now financed by both grant and private loan and this, combined with the substantially increased resources which the Government are making available overall, should result in associations completing nearly twice as many new homes next year as they did last.

Education Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table for each local education authority in England showing their basic credit approval for (a) 1989-90, (b) 1990-91, (c) 1991-92 and (d) 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 6 July 1992]: I have today placed in the Library a table which gives the basic credit approval for all of the services provided by each local education authority in England for 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93. No basic credit approvals were issued for 1989-90 as section 53 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, under which they are issued, was not in force for that financial year.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish his latest estimates for each local authority and for England of (a) the percentage of total budgeted poll tax income collected so far for 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93, (b) the total amounts outstanding in pound sterling million and (c) the numbers of liability orders taken out for poll tax debt.

Mr. Redwood: I estimate that by 31 March 1992 charging authorities in England had collected 97 per cent. and 89 per cent. of their budgeted community charge income for 1990-91 and 1991-92 respectively. Figures for 1992-93 are not yet available.

I am arranging for a listing of the percentage of 1990-91 budgeted community charge income collected by each authority in the period 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1992 to be placed in the Library of the House.

With respect to the percentage of 1991-92 budgeted community charge income collected, I refer the hon. member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire), on 17 June 1992 to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond), at column 565.

My Department does not collect figures for amounts of community charges outstanding or for the numbers of liability orders granted. Figures for the amount of community charge arrears at 31 March 1991, and for liability orders granted in 1990-91, were published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy in "Revenue Collection Statistics 1990-91 Actuals", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Construction Industry Training Board

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many training places were awarded by the Construction Industry Training Board in the north-west last year; and how many of them were filled.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

The Construction Industry Training Board negotiates individually with each training and enterprise council the number of training weeks rather than training places under youth training the CITB will provide. In 1991-92 in the north-west a total of 158,905 weeks were contracted, of which 127,482 were delivered.

At March 1991 there were 2,235 young people in youth training with the CITB in the north-west.

The CITB is not itself a training manager for employment training but provides support to employment training training managers through direct contracts with them. The detail of these contracts is not known to the Department.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Regional Economies

Mr. Biffen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the degree of convergence between the English and Welsh economies based upon the statistical data provided in appendix E of the statistical supplement to the "Autumn Statement 1991" and the territorial gross domestic product data published in the regional accounts of the November 1991 issue of "Economic Trends".

Mr. Lamont: Simple comparisons of regional spending per head are misleading. Account needs also to be taken of a wide range of economic and social differences between the regions. Gross domestic product per head can provide a measure of the relative economic performances of regions of the United Kingdom although, due to the lack of regional price deflators, comparisons of regions' real rates of economic growth cannot be made. Gross domestic product per head in Wales was 82·8 per cent. of the level in England, very close to the equivalent 1980 figure of 82·4 per cent. This ratio has fluctuated a little, but has remained generally steady over the decade.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the variation in the position of the pound sterling against the deutschmark as at the close of business on each of the 10 working days following the reductions in the United Kingdom's bank base lending rates on (a) 8 October 1990, (b) 13 February 1991, (c) 27 February 1991, (d) 22 March 1991, (e) 12 April 1991, (f) 24 May 1991, (g) 12 July 1991, (h) 4 September 1991 and (i) 5 May 1992.

Mr. Nelson: The percentage differences from sterling's central exchange rate mechanism rate of DM2·95 as at the third concertation among central banks for the days in question were as follows:

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he considers it will be prudent to move the pound sterling into the narrow band of the exchange rate mechanism; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: Sterling will move to the narrow band of the ERM in due course at the current central rate of DM2·95.

Pension Funds

Mr. Betts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the provisions which govern the power of the Investment Management Regulatory Organisation to investigate the conduct or control of pension fund managers.

Mr. Nelson: Schedule 2 to the Financial Services Act 1986 sets out the requirements which a self-regulatory organisation must meet in order to be recognised under the Act. These include adequate arrangements for the effective monitoring and enforcement of compliance with its rules and with any directly applicable conduct of business requirements.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to publish the latest Treasury forecast on the PSBR.

Mr. Portillo: No. Forecasts are published twice a year. The next forecast will be published in the autumn statement.

Oil Taxation

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those organisations and individuals whom he has consulted during his review of oil taxation.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government remain in contact with a range of parties interested in oil production taxes. For instance, my officials have had exchanges with oil industry representative bodies—the United Kingdom Offshore Operators Association and BRINDEX—and individual oil companies in devising the oil tax measures now before Parliament in the Finance Bill.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to complete his review of oil taxation; and if he intends to report to Parliament before deciding what reforms, if any, to introduce.

Mr. Dorrell: As with other taxes, the fiscal regime for oil production is kept under continuing review. Proposals are put to Parliament as appropriate.

Civil Servants

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many civil servants in his Department are paid at a rate exceeding that of a Cabinet Minister.

Mr. Dorrell: Eight.

Third World

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy that any future structural adjustments agreed with third world Governments should take fully into account the effect of the changes experienced by vulnerable groups in debtor countries.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 6 July 1992]: The Government have made clear—most recently in my right hon. Friend's statement to the development committee at the spring meetings of the International Monetary Fund and World bank—the priority they attach to Governments and the international financial institutions taking full account of their responsibility to devise and implement effective strategies for the reduction of poverty when designing adjustment programmes. It is the policy of the IMF and the World bank to pay full regard to the impact of adjustment programmes on the poor.

Inheritance Tax (Exemptions)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the hectarage of land where there is currently exemption from inheritance tax for access purposes in each county or region.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 6 July 1992]: I regret that this information is not readily available.

The Countryside Commission has estimated that, in England, there are about 130,000 hectares—315,000 acres—of heritage quality land for which a management agreement has been or is being negotiated. It is thought that about half of this area is land for which conditional exemption has been granted; the remainder relates to private treaty sales of land to bodies qualifying under schedule 3 to the Inheritance Tax Act, acceptances in lieu of tax, designations of land for heritage maintenance funds and conditional exemption claims which have not yet been agreed. Comparable figures for the rest of the United Kingdom are not available.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) on what dates and in what parts of the City of Durham constituency the cold weather payments scheme was triggered during the winter of 1991-92; and how many households received payments on each occasion;

(2) on what dates cold weather payments were made in the City of Durham constituency in response to a forecast of a qualifying period; and what period was taken for payments to be made once the system was triggered.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) on what dates, and in what parts of the Falkirk, West constituency, the cold weather payments system was triggered during the winter of 1991-92; and how many households received payments on each occasion;

(2) on what dates cold weather payments were made in the Falkirk, West constituency in response to a forecast of a qualifying period; and whether he will indicate the period taken for payments to be made once the system had been triggered.

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) on what dates the cold weather payments system was triggered in Preston during the winter of 1991-92; and how many households received payments on each occasion;

(2) on what dates cold weather payments were made in Preston in response to a forecast of a qualifying period, indicating the period taken for payments to be made once the system had been triggered.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) on what dates cold weather payments were made in the parliamentary constituency of Greenock and Port Glasgow in response to a forecast of a qualifying period; and what was the period taken for payments to be made once the system has been triggered off;

(2) on what dates, and in what areas of the parliamentary constituency of Greenock and Port Glasgow, the cold weather payments system was triggered during the winter of 1991-92; and how many households received payments on each occasion.

Mr. Scott: Such information as is available is in the Library.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households in the Falkirk, West constituency qualify for payments under the cold weather payments scheme.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households in the City of Durham constituency qualify for payments under the cold weather payments scheme.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households in the parliamentary constituency of Greenock and Port Glasgow qualify for payments under the cold weather payments scheme.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Members with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Disability Living Allowance

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will rewrite the section of the disability living allowance form on preparing a cooked main meal;

(2) if he intends to rewrite the claim pack for the disability living allowance.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Rochdale (Ms. Lynne) on 15 June at column 384.

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the claim pack for the disability living allowance will be available in a format accessible to blind and partially sighted people; and what the format will be.

Mr. Scott: The benefit inquiry line provides a forms completion service for disability living allowance. The claim pack is completed over the telephone and then sent to the person to be checked, signed and returned. The forms completion service is available in Braille and large print. The benefit inquiry line also provide audio cassette tapes to help visually impaired people to complete the disability living allowance forms.

Pension Rights

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he will take to reduce the gender imbalance in pension rights.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government have long been committed to the principle of equal treatment in pensions. We are now actively considering how best to achieve this in the state and occupational schemes.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reasons he decided that women widowed before the age of 45 years cannot receive widows' pensions.

Miss Widdecombe: The changes were made in 1988 to target help where it is most needed—older widows and widows with dependent children. This is fairer and reflects the reality of the changed employment pattern of women. Widows under 45 with dependent children continue to be eligible for widowed mother's allowance and there is now a widow's payment of £1,000 for all eligible women immediately on bereavement regardless of entitlement to a subsequent weekly benefit.

Young People (Hardship Payments)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for special hardship payments to 16 and 17-year-olds have been made at each benefit office in Tyne and Wear in each year since the general right to benefit was withdrawn; and how many of these applications were successful.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Pensioners (Income Support)

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will allow pensioners in receipt of income support to continue to have benefit entitlement for housing/community charge benefit without having to re-apply every 12 months.

Mr. Burt: The existing arrangements are currently being examined in conjunction with representatives of the local authority associations.

Lodgers

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he proposes to take to encourage the taking in of lodgers (a) generally and (b) among those of or near retirement age.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no plans for such initiatives in the social security system. However, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has introduced proposals for fiscal incentives in the current Finance Bill.

Correspondence

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for South Hams, dated 23 April, regarding Mrs. J. Thorne of Southfield Rise, Paignton.

Mr. Scott: A reply was sent to my hon. Friend on 3 July. I very much regret the delay in responding.

State Pensions

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the average level of (a) a single person's state pension and (b) a married couple's state pension in each of the last 15 years; and how pension levels have related to average earnings in each year.

Miss Widdecombe: Information is not available in the form requested. Details of the levels of the standard basic retirement pension, and how these have related to average earnings, are given in the table.

Child Support Act 1991

Mrs. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated annual loss of revenue due to members of the armed forces being exempt from the provisions of the Child Support Act 1991.

Mr. Burt: It is intended that members of the Armed Forces will be subject to the child maintenance provisions of the Child Support Act 1991 in the same way as they are currently subject to court orders for maintenance. The necessary amending legislation is intended to be brought before the House in time for the implementation of the new scheme in April next year.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications his Department received in 1991 for back payment of attendance allowance; and how many of those applications were successful.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will specify the criteria used by his Department in determining applications for back payment of attendance allowance.

Mr. Scott: Payment of attendance allowance cannot be made for any period before it is claimed.

Advisory Committees

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the advisory committees and their memberships which advise him on matters relating to the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I am advised by the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council (IIAC) on relevant EC matters. This is a statutory advisory body made up of medical experts in occupational health, representatives of employers and employees organisations, a lawyer and an independent social researcher. A list of members can be found in their report published in May 1992, "Work-Related Upper Limb Disorders", Cm 1936.

Other advisory committees associated with the Department are kept informed of EC issues. The Department also discusses EC issues with representatives of the pensions and financial services sector as necessary.

War Disablement Pension

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the present level of war disablement pension for each rank; and what plans he has to increase the level.

Miss Widdecombe: Information regarding levels of war disablement pension is contained in leaflet MPL 154, a copy of which is available in the Library. For ranks above private the levels include rank additions: for most war pensioners these represent only a few pence a week but several pounds for some officers.

In order to simplify the war pensions scheme and provide a better service, rank additions will be abolished from April 1993. To ensure that no individual war pensioner will lose out as a result of the abolition the basic war disablement pension will be increased by 84p a week for non-commissioned officers and £5 for most officers.

Mrs. Joanna Rotas

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the progress of the application of Mrs. Joanna Rotas of Western Villas, Collins road, Totnes, south Devon, for (a) attendance allowance, made in October 1991 and (b) disability living allowance, made in March 1992; and when she can expect to learn whether these applications have been successful.

Mr. Scott: The administration of attendance allowance and disability living allowance are matters for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Civil Servants

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many civil servants in his Department are paid at a rate exceeding that of a Cabinet Minister.

Mr. Burt: The total salary, including reduced parliamentary salary, of most Cabinet Ministers is £63,047. The number of civil servants in the Department of Social Security whose pay exceeds that figure is three.

Social Fund

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what errors were made in the calculation of social fund allocations to district offices for 1992-93; when they were discovered; what changes were made in consequence and when; how many districts have had their allocations reduced or increased; and if he will supply details of the changes to hon. Members whose constituencies are affected.

Mr. Scott: An error in the data on which social fund discretionary budget allocations were based was identified on 17 March 1992; figures on income support caseload for a small number of districts had been attributed to the wrong districts. A full list of the revised allocations made to all districts was placed in the Library on 21 May 1992.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been his Department's response to the Social Security Advisory Committee's report "The Social Fund—A New Structure".

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) on 11 May at column 47.

Benefits Agency Answers

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a daily addendum to the Official Report which includes details of answers provided to hon. Members by the director of the Benefits Agency.

Mr. Burt: Copies of letters from the chief executive of the Benefits Agency which respond to hon. Members' questions are placed in the Library and Public Information Office. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Lord President of the Council to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 29 June at column 577 about future arrangements.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will now publish the evidence of all the organisations that replied to him in his recent consultations regarding the Child Support Agency regulations.

Mr. Burt: A number of interested organisations were approached for their views on the proposed content of the various regulations to be made under the Child Support Act 1991. It is for the organisations themselves to publish their views, if they wish to do so.

Retirement Age

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list those organisations that supplied evidence to him in his recent consultations over the question of the equal state retirement age for men and women; and if he will now publish the evidence provided by all these organisations.

Miss Widdecombe: Over 3,500 responses have been received from organisations and individuals on the question of equalising state pension age. We will be examining these responses in detail and will be prepared to accept late responses. The publication of the evidence received, and other issues arising from the discussion period, are still under consideration.

EMPLOYMENT

Unemployment

10. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what specific measures she is taking to help the long-term unemployed.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I am determined to provide the best possible range of help and advice for long-term unemployed people. I keep our comprehensive package of employment and training measures under review to ensure that they continue to offer the most practical and effective help in getting back to work.

27. Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current level of unemployment; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Compared with the previous month, there was a welcome slow-down in May in the increase in seasonally adjusted claimant unemployment, which for the United Kingdom stood at 2,716,600.

22. Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures she has planned to reduce unemployment in Ilford, South.

Mr. McLoughlin: The employment service and training and enterprise councils deliver a wide range of employment, enterprise and training programmes to help unemployed people find the best and quickest route back to employment. In Ilford, South, as elsewhere, these programmes are tailored to take account of special local circumstances.

18. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement about the level of unemployment in the northern region.

Mr. McLoughlin: In May 1992 seasonally adjusted claimant unemployment in the northern region was 153,800.

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will publish a table showing unemployment rates by ethnic origin in Greater London on the same basis as the answer on 13 November 1990, Official Report, column 123, to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman).

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is as follows:

Unemployment rates by ethnic origin in Greater London aged 16 and over Spring 1991 per cent.

All persons[1]	9
White	8
Non-white	14
West Indian/Guyanese	15
Indian	12
Pakistan/Bangladeshi	18
other ethnic origins[2]	15

Source: Labour force survey.
[1] Includes those who did not state origin.
[2] Includes those of mixed origin.

Health and Safety

12. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the definition of health and safety as used by European institutions in assessing the procedures by which instruments of European legislation are processed.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Article 118A of the treaty of Rome does not define health and safety, and we will continue to argue vigorously against its use where there are no proven health and safety risks.

Youth Training

15. Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will increase the Government's provision for young people's training.

Mr. McLoughlin: We plan to spend over £850 million on youth training in the current financial year. This compares with a mere £63 million spent on YOP in 1978-79. I am satisfied that this Government has given training and enterprise councils the resources they require to meet the training needs of young people.

Bridlington Agreement

16. Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will introduce legislation to make the Bridlington agreement unlawful.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Following proposals in the Green Paper, "Industrial Relations in the 1990s", my right hon. Friend intends to bring forward legislation which would greatly increase individuals' freedom to belong to the trade union of their choice. That legislation would make it unlawful for a union to exclude or expel an individual simply because it was required to do so through the application of the Trades Union Congress "Bridlington principles".

Employment

17. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how full employment is currently defined.

Mr. McLoughlin: Full employment is a concept with no generally accepted definition.

Training

19. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what recent review she has undertaken of the effectiveness of the Government's training programmes.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I am satisfied that, across the country as a whole, the Government's training programmes are meeting the needs of young people, unemployed people and the economy.

Single Parents

20. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action she is taking to allow single parents to carry out employment and training.

Mr. McLoughlin: We offer single parents help to join employment training through special eligibility conditions and the chance to train on a part-time basis. In addition, all single parents who have been out of work for six months or more are eligible to join a job club. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security is also making changes to the benefit system which will make it easier for single parents to go to work when they are ready to do so.

European Community Working Time Directive

21. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement about the EC's proposals to introduce a 48-hour working week.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The proposed working time directive was discussed at the Social Affairs Council on 24 June. I made it clear that the United Kingdom continues to have very severe doubts about the directive as a whole and its proposed legal base. In discussions on the text, the United Kingdom secured all its key objectives, in particular the right for employees to work for more than 48 hours a week if they choose to do so. Other member states continued to have difficulties with the directive as drafted and in consequence the Council did not reach a common position.

Women Workers

23. Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how she intends to increase opportunities for women throughout the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have nothing further to add to the reply that I gave my hon. Friend on 9 June 1992, Official Report, column 140.

Pregnant Workers

24. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will support the European Commission pregnant women at work directive.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government are seeking to uphold the common position on the directive which was agreed by the Council of Ministers in 1991.

Travel-to-Interviews Scheme

25. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to review the pilot scheme for travel to interviews currently operated on the Isle of Wight.

Mr. McLoughlin: I am informed by the chief executive of the Employment Service that the pilot arrangements for travel to interviews currently operated on the Isle of Wight are being considered as part of an ongoing review of the travel-to-interview scheme. In the meantime, the pilot arrangements for the Isle of Wight will continue.

Training and Enterprise Councils

26. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps she is taking to raise awareness among small businesses of the services offered to them by training and enterprise councils.

Mr. McLoughlin: Training and enterprise councils (TECs) offer businesses, including small businesses, a variety of support services to help business development. In doing so, TECs work with other local organisations such as chambers of commerce and local enterprise agencies. TECs are therefore best placed to raise awareness and market these services at local level.

Work Statistics

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the estimated ratio of the work force to the non-working population (a) currently and (b) in the years (i) 2000, (ii) 2010 and (iii) 2020, respectively.

Mr. McLoughlin: In 1991, the ratio of the estimated United Kingdom civilian labour force to the non-working population was 0·999. In the year 2000, the corresponding ratio is projected to be 0·995.

Labour force projections are not currently available beyond the year 2001.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is her estimate of the size of the work force relative to the size of the retired population in the years (a) 2000, (b) 2010 and (c) 2020, respectively.

Mr. McLoughlin: In the year 2000 the United Kingdom civilian labour force is projected to be 29,449,000, 2·97 times the retired population.

Labour force projections are not currently available beyond the year 2001.

Disabled People

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what criteria she uses to measure the performance of employment services for disabled people; what plans she has to improve these services; what consultations she intends to carry out with disability organisations before introducing any amendments to service provision; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Employment Department's main provision for helping to meet the employment needs of people with disabilities is delivered through the Employment Service (ES).

The ES's objectives in its services for people with disabilities are to provide them with particular assistance to take advantage of work and training opportunities; and to help and encourage employers to make such opportunities available. The annual performance agreement between the Employment Department and ES sets out a performance target for the ES for 1991-92 that 2·5 per cent. of the total number of people placed in work are to be people with disabilities. In addition, the ES monitors the effectiveness of schemes using both management information, such as the numbers of people benefiting, and special research and surveys.

Proposals for improving the Department's services for people with disabilities were contained in the consultative document "Employment and Training of People with Disabilities" published in June 1990 and further proposals were made when the "Evaluation of Special schemes for People with Disabilities" was published in November 1990. We received many responses to these documents from various individuals and organisations, including organisations of and for disabled people.

As a result of these consultation exercises, we have announced and implemented changes in some areas and we are considering other ways to improve our provision. For example, the ES is introducing placing assessment and counselling teams (PACTs) during 1992. PACTs will take on all the present functions of disablement resettlement officers, the disablement advisory service and the assessment functions of the employment rehabilitation service. These new teams will provide a more integrated service to both employers and disabled individuals.

Ministers consult regularly with the National Advisory Council on Employment of People with Disabilities on plans and performance nationally and on local matters with committees for the employment of people with disabilities. When reconstituting the Department's advisory bodies care has been taken to include in them individuals with knowledge of the needs of people with disabilities, some of whom are members of disability organisations.

In considering, planning and implementing improvements to employment services for people with disabilities the Department involves disability organisations as appropriate. For example, a number of interested organisations will be consulted on proposals arising from a recent review of funding for sheltered employment.

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps are being taken by her Department to improve the accessibility of mainstream employment services to people with disabilities.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Most people with disabilities who find work through our services do so using our mainstream services. These services are kept under review with the aim of ensuring accessibility for people with disabilities.

Since April 1991 people with disabilities have priority access to the main employment and training programmes —employment training, employment action, the job interview guarantee scheme, job clubs and the enterprise allowance scheme.

The Employment Service has issued guidance to mainstream personnel about their role in helping people with disabilities to find work. The new placing assessment and counselling teams and regional ability development centres will offer support and guidance to mainstream personnel, including help with training, in providing help for people with disabilities who do not require specialist help.

The Employment Service has issued to staff responsible for its premises guidance on improving access to jobcentres for people with disabilities which takes account of the latest standards in the building regulations.

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the audit of non-specialist programmes against the needs of people with disabilities was completed; and if she will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Department's consultative document "Employment and Training for People with Disabilities" referred to the Department's intention to audit new and established programmes and services to ensure that they meet the needs of clients with disabilities. Auditing is now under way but the process is continuous and so there will be no report on its completion.

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has to evaluate the policy of using agencies for the assessment and rehabilitation of disabled people.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Employment Service regularly monitors the effectiveness and quality of provision within individual agencies with which it contracts to provide specialist employment assessment and rehabilitation. It is currently considering carrying out further research into the effectiveness of rehabilitation.

Health and Safety at Work Festival

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 5 June, Official Report, columns 645-46, if she will list the titles and originators of the videos chosen to represent the United Kingdom at the festival on safety, hygiene and health protection at work in Greece in October.

Mr. McLoughlin: A list of the titles and originators of the United Kingdom video entries to the European video film festival is not yet available from the European Commission.

The film festival was open to all health and safety videos made after 1989. Entries were made direct to the European Commission and there was no pre-selection or nomination process.

I will write to the hon. Member when the information is available and place a copy in the Library.

Nursery Facilities

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures her Department are taking to encourage industry to make nursery and creche facilities available for female employees.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department consistently encourages employers to consider the possible advantages to them of supporting nursery and creche facilities which could benefit all employees with young children. The booklet, "The Best of Both Worlds", describes some initiatives which different employers have taken.

EC Social Affairs Ministers

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will state the purpose of the informal meeting of Social Affairs Ministers of the European Community scheduled to take place on 12 and 13 October; when she expects to announce the agenda of that meeting; and in what manner the results will be communicated to Parliament and the public.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The informal meeting will focus on means of making progress on major employment and social affairs issues facing the Community. The discussion is, for example, likely to be concerned with how best to promote employment growth in the member states, and with ensuring effective implementation and enforcement of existing EC legislation across the Community. I shall arrange for the House to be informed of the main outcomes.

Building Trade

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many full apprenticeships in the building trade were begun in the north-west in each of the last five years and in 1981, 1971 and 1961.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information is not collected by the Department in the form requested. However, the labour force survey for the years 1987 to 1991 indicates that the numbers in the north-west of those continuing a construction trade apprenticeship were as follows:

	Numbers
1987	[1]under 10,000
1988	[1]under 10,000
1989	11,002
1991	10,344

[1] Estimates for 10,000 people or fewer (after grossing up) are not shown, since they are likely to be based on small samples and therefore unreliable. This is in line with current practice for labour force survey based analyses.

Jobseekers Charter

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the working of the jobseekers charter.

Mr. McLoughlin: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Advisory Committees

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the advisory committees and their memberships which advise her on matters relating to the European Community; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment consults widely on all proposals for EC legislation and other significant Community instruments. She particularly values the comments of advisory committees whose responsibilities cover matters which are the subject of the EC proposal in question.

My right hon. Friend is advised by the Health and Safety Commission (HSC) on matters relating to health and safety at work, including proposed EC legislation in this area. HSC's advice follows consultation with its relevant consultative committees. The members of the Health and Safety Commission are:

Sir John Cullen (Chairman)
Councillor Eddie Carrick
Mr. Paul Gallagher
Mr. Peter Jacques CBE
Mr. John C. Marvin
Mr. Nigel J. Pitcher
Councillor Dr. Colin Shannon CBE
Mr. Rex H. M. Symons
Mr. Alan Tuffin
Dame Rachel Waterhouse

Civil Servants,

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many civil servants in her Department are paid at a rate exceeding that of a Cabinet Minister.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The total salary, including reduced parliamentary salary, of most Cabinet Ministers is £63,047. The number of civil servants in the Department of Employment group whose pay currently exceeds this figure is three.

The chairman of the Health and Safety Commission, the chairman of the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service and the President of the Central Office of the Industrial Tribunals, Scotland are also paid more than a Cabinet Minister but are not civil servants.

Wages Councils

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the future of the wages councils as they affect Wales.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government have made it clear on many occasions that the wages councils have no permanent place in the labour market in Wales or the rest of the United Kingdom.

International Labour Organisation

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will make a statement on the implementation by the Government of those conventions of the International Labour Organisation to which the Government are currently a signatory.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government continue to have full and proper regard to the importance of the International Labour Organisation conventions which the United Kingdom has ratified and to honour its obligations accordingly.

Earnings

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if she will provide a table indicating the average gross weekly earnings of (a) women and (b) men in each county area in the northern region for each year from 1979, (i) at current prices and (ii) at 1979 prices;

(2) if she will provide a table indicating the average gross weekly earnings of (a) women and (b) men in each standard region for each year from 1979 at (i) current prices and (ii) 1979 prices;

(3) if she will provide a table indicating the numbers and proportion of (a) women and (b) men earning less than 68 per cent. of the national average gross weekly wage in each county area in the northern region in (i) 1979 and (ii) 1991;

(4) if she will provide a table indicating the proportion of (a) women and (b) men earning less than 68 per cent. of the national average gross weekly wage in each standard region in (i) 1979 and (ii) 1991;

(5) if she will provide a table indicating the number of (a) women and (b) men earning less than 68 per cent. of the national average gross weekly wage in each standard region in (i) 1979 and (ii) 1991.

Mr. McLoughlin: The average gross weekly earnings of men and women by standard region and county can be found in tables 110 and 113 of part E of the new earnings survey report from 1979 onwards. Information on the retail prices index—all items—to convert 1979 figures to 1991 prices is published in table 6.4 of the latest Employment Gazette for April 1991, and in table 26 of the annual supplement to Economic Trends for April of earlier years. Copies of the publications are available in the Library.

Sixty-eight per cent. of average gross weekly earnings for all full-time adult employees was £60·09 in 1979 and £193·06 in 1991. Estimates of the numbers earning less than these amounts are not available. The proportions earning less than the available figures which are closest to these are shown in the table.

[1] The percentages are not strictly comparable because the 1979 figures are for men aged 21 and over and women aged 18 and over while the 1991 figures are for men and women on adult rates of pay. Additional tables in part F of the 1983 NES report provide information on the change.

Source: New earnings survey, 1979 and 1991.

Employment Service

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will provide a table of expenditure showing the cost of running each regional office of the Employment Service aggregated by region, with Greater London shown as a separate region and excluding the funding programmes operated by the offices for each year from 1987-88 (a) at current prices and (b) at 1987-88 prices.

Mr. McLoughlin: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Training Credits

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of all 16 and 17-year-olds is currently on a training credit scheme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 3 July 1992]: Training credits schemes currently operate in 10 of the 82 training and enterprise councils in England and Wales, and one of the 22 local enterprise companies in Scotland, and offer training to those 16 and 17-year-olds who leave full-time education.

The number of 16 and 17-year-olds currently on a training credit scheme represents an estimated 1 per cent. of the total number of 16 and 17-year-olds in Great Britain.

Training

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is her estimate of the number of young people seeking a youth training place for the most recent date for which figures are available.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 6 July 1992]: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the contribution of the European social fund to the Government's youth training, employment training and employment action programmes.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 6 July 1992]: In 1991, the latest year for which contributions received are available, employment training received £156·59 million and youth training received £15·81 million from the European social fund (ESF). There was no contribution to employment action.

Written Answers to Questions

DEFENCE

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the speed limits for each aircraft type while low-flying over the United Kingdom at (a) 100 ft and (b) 250 ft; and if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which these speeds may be exceeded during interceptions or the run-up of simulated targets.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: For military aircraft flying at 250ft in the United Kingdom low-flying system the normal maximum cruising speed is 450 knots, except for F-111s which, for aircraft handling reasons, are allowed to fly at speeds up to 480 knots. At this height aircraft may increase their speed to maxima ranging from 480 knots to 550 knots, depending on aircraft type, in special circumstances such as the run-up to simulated targets or during mock interceptions. The maximum speeds for aircraft flying at 100 ft above ground level are as follows:

	Knots
Jaguar	520
Tornado	500
Hawk	480
Harrier GR 5/7	420

Household Cavalry

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much the Household Cavalry will receive from Anglia TV for the assistance it is giving to that company's forthcoming television production "Riders"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Costs are still being collated and formal charges will be raised by MoD in due course.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of maintaining British armed forces in the Falkland islands in each of the last 10 years; and what is the estimated cost for the current year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The cost of maintaining British armed forces in the Falkland islands in each of the last 10 years (at outturn prices) was as follows:

	£ million
1982-83	780
1983-84	637
1984-85	644
1985-86	572
1986-87	402
1987-88	229

USAF Bombing, Golspie

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he received a report from the United States Air Force into an incident on 5 June, when a practice bomb was dropped 8 miles off target by a United States Air Force jet into a site of special scientific interest near Golspie, Sutherland, Scotland; what compensation is being negotiated for the damage by fire to the rare lichen moss destroyed in this incident; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The incident referred to took place on 4 June. A written report detailing the cause was received from the United States Air Force by the Ministry of Defence on 12 June. Full details of claims for compensation have not yet been received.

Defence Facilities

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to make available to interested United Kingdom citizens and organisations, aerial photographs of such United Kingdom defence facilities as are permitted to the Russian military forces under the Helsinki "Open Skies" treaty of 24 March.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The purpose of the "Open Skies" treaty is to establish a reciprocal confidence-building regime which will help us build trust with other parties to the treaty. Under the treaty, information gathered during "Open Skies" flights may be used only for treaty-related purposes. We would not want to see this provision waived, not least because aerial photographs from "Open Skies" flights could be of use to terrorist organisations.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he last met representatives of the British Nuclear Test Veterans Association to discuss compensation; when he next plans to meet them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I have discussed this matter with a number of hon. Members. I have not met and have not received any request to meet representatives of the British Nuclear Test Veterans Association. The position on compensation remains as set out by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in his answer of 5 June, Official Report, column 655.

Accommodation

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many units of personnel accommodation are vacant in each county in England and Wales, and in each region in Scotland.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Records are not maintained by counties in England, but at 31 March 1992, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 9,002 MoD-owned service married quarters and civilian residential dwellings vacant in England, Wales and Scotland out of a total stock of 69,841. This excludes barrack and mess accommodation.

Many of these properties were undergoing major works or modernisation, some were already allotted to service families who were due to move in shortly, and others were being considered for disposal. In addition, some 1,850 properties were in the process of being sold.

Army Redundancies

Mr. Merchant: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement about redundancies in the Army.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A total of 3,338 Army personnel, comprising 838 officers and 2,500 soldiers, were selected in February 1992 for the first phase of redundancy. Of the total, all but 143 officers were volunteers.

As foreshadowed in my answer to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neil) on 8 November 1991, Official Report, column 296, we shall shortly be promulgating details of the next phase of redundancy in the Army. This will follow the pattern of the first phase with the timetable and plans to be published at the end of July, and individuals informed during the first quarter of 1993. It is likely that the number of personnel to be made redundant in the second phase in 1993-94 will be in the region 6,500. Individuals will receive up to 12 months' notice and full resettlement assistance.

TRANSPORT

Scotland

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the extent of his responsibilities in Scotland.

Mr. MacGregor: I have general responsibility for transport policy throughout Great Britain, which I exercise in association with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales. My specific responsibilities for Scotland cover matters other than those for which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland is directly responsible. These are Scottish roads policy and legislation, including the construction, maintenance and management of motorways and trunk roads; capital allocations and grants to local authorities for local roads and public transport; some aspects of bus policy; subsidies to some local ferry, airport and air services; Caledonian MacBrayne Ltd; transport piers and harbours other than ports, freight facilities grants; toll bridge regulation; and civil emergencies planning. There is very close consultation between my Department and the Scottish Office over all aspects of transport policy affecting Scotland.

Traffic Flows

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what was the average daily vehicular flow on the A420 between Swindon and Oxford in (a) 1980, (b) 1985 and (c) the latest year for which figures are available;

(2) what was the average daily vehicular flow on the A417 between Cirencester and Gloucester in (a) 1980, (b) 1985 and (c) the latest year for which figures are available;

(3) what was the average daily vehicular flow on the A419 between Swindon and Cirencester in (a) 1980, (b) 1985 and (c) the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The latest available estimates are for 1990 when the average daily traffic flow was 17,000 vehicles on the A417 between Gloucester and Cirencester, 25,000 on the A419 between Swindon and Cirencester and 14,000 on the A420 between Swindon and Oxford. The Department's national traffic surveys do not allow changes in traffic levels between years to be estimated for particular roads.

Airport Directors

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those directors of airports, operated on behalf of municipal authorities by companies, who are also councillors on the authority or subject to appointment by them and give the percentage of the non-independent directors in each case.

Mr. Norris: The information relating to airports owned by public airport companies is as follows:

Airport	Local authority members	[1]Other non-executive directors	Executive directors	Total
Birmingham	9	1	4	14
Blackpool	5	1	2	8
Bournemouth	6	—	2	8
Bristol	5	—	2	7

Airport	Local authority members	[1]Other non-executive directors	Executive directors	Total
Cardiff-Wales	9	3	3	15
East Midlands	18	—	3	21
Exeter	5	1	2	8
Humberside	12	1	3	16
Leeds Bradford	15	—	3	18

Manchester	18	—	3	21
Newcastle	24	—	3	27
Norwich	6	2	3	11
Southend	8	—	1	9
Teesside	11	1	3	15

[1] Includes former local authority member, local authority officers, businessmen and worker directors.

Under section 17(1) of the Airports Act 1986 it is the duty of the controlling authority of a public airport company to exercise its control over the company so as to ensure that at least three of the directors of the company, or at least one quarter of their number—whichever is the less—are full time employees of the company with experience in airport management. Southend airport, which is managed on behalf of its owners by a management company, is currently exempted from this duty (under section 17(2) of the 1986 Act).

M4

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to provide lighting on any section of the M4 between junctions 7/8 and 15 which is not presently lit.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Work is currently taking place to light the M4 between junctions 10 and 11. We have no plans at present to light any other unlit sections of the motorway between junctions 7 and 15. The provision of lighting along these sections will be considered in conjunction with planning for widening the M4 presently in hand.

Lighthouse Authorities

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much was paid by the general lighthouse authorities to the Commissioners for Irish Lights in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Norris: Nothing.

Roads

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, following the publication of the British Rail annual report, he will prepare and publish an equivalent document for British roads, listing all the costs and benefits.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department of Transport report, published annually in February, includes details of the Government's expenditure on trunk roads and on transport supplementary grant for local authority roads in England. It also outlines expenditure plans for the next three years. Schemes in the road programme were last set out comprehensively in "Trunk Roads, England—into the 1990s" published in February 1990. Trunk roads in Wales and Scotland are the responsibility of the respective Secretaries of State.

Aircraft Seating

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to bring civil air transport seating up to the most up-to-date safety and fire precaution standards.

Mr. Norris: The Civil Aviation Authority has the statutory responsibility for the safety regulation of civil aviation in the United Kingdom. I have drawn the hon. Member's question to the attention of the authority and asked it to write to him direct to inform him of the latest position on the safety of air transport seating.

Trust Ports

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to replace those directors of trust ports appointed by him whose port authority has refused to make its annual report and accounts available to the public.

Mr. Norris: So far as I am aware, this situation has not arisen at any of the small number of trust ports where the Secretary of State appoints some or all members of the authority.

Working Group

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will announce the remit and membership of the transport working group; and how it will contribute to the development of the Government's policies for transport in London.

Mr. Norris: I will be chairing the transport working group whose broad remit will be to advise me on issues affecting public transport in London and to help improve transport co-ordination. The membership, selected for its practical experience, will be the managing directors of London Underground Ltd., Network SouthEast and London Buses Ltd.; the chief executive of the LDDC; the South East and Metropolitan traffic commissioner; the chairman of the London Regional Passengers' Committee; and representatives of the private sector bus operators, the London Chamber of Commerce and Industry, the London tourist board and the London planning advisory committee. Sir George Young from the Department of the Environment will also be joining the group. I will be calling a first meeting in early autumn.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Tourism

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he expects to publish his input into the conference on tourism in November.

Mr. Mellor: The English tourist board plans to publish the proceedings of the conference towards the end of the year.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the impact on tourism of the EC proposals for VAT on ferry fares, train tickets and air fares in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Mellor: I have made no assessment of any such impact. An agreement reached by Finance Ministers enables us to maintain our existing zero rates.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to visit those educational establishments offering courses in tourism-related subjects.

Mr. Mellor: I have no engagements of this kind planned at the moment, but I look forward to seeing tourism-related courses in action in the future.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he last met the chairmen of the regional tourist boards.

Mr. Mellor: My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State frequently meets representatives of all sectors of the tourism industry on engagements around the country. My noble Friend Lord Astor attended the annual meeting of the regional tourist board chairmen held at the Belton Woods hotel near Grantham, on 1 July.

WALES

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made in setting up a trust fund for the transfer of assets from the Cardiff Bay development corporation for the purpose of accumulation of capital assets.

Mr. David Hunt: Cardiff Bay development corporation has considered a number of options for meeting the costs of operating the barrage and the inland bay after its dissolution. A trust fund was one of the options considered by the corporation but the Government have not yet taken a final decision on the preferred choice.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his most up-to-date estimate of the cost of the mitigation works for the provision of alternative feeding grounds for wading birds on the south Wales foreshore on an out-turn cost on the comparable timing of construction basis to the £167·4 million cost of the barrage in his answer of 26 June, Official Report, column 340.

Mr. David Hunt: The out-turn cost of the mitigation works will depend on the method and phasing of construction, which will not be known before the feasibility study is completed in the autumn.

Unemployment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is the level of unemployment among 16 and 17-year-olds in Wales and by county; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many persons aged 16 and 17 years who are not in employment or education are not currently on youth training programmes in each county in Wales and in total; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The 1988 Social Security Act changed the benefit entitlement of under 18-year-olds. It coincided with the guaranteed offer of a place on a youth training programme. Information is not centrally available on the numbers of 16 and 17-year-olds who are neither employed nor in education and who have chosen not to take a place on a youth training programme. However, among these are some who, due to exceptional social or domestic circumstances, are entitled to claim income support and are therefore included in the unemployment count. The numbers of these are shown in the following table:

Fire Services

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes in the management of the fire services in Wales he envisages will follow the introduction of unitary authorities.

Mr. David Hunt: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary.

Green Minister

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will outline the priorities for future action of the green Minister in his Department (a) over the next year and (b) over this Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Over the next 12 months I will continue to progress the commitments made in respect of Wales in the Environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance" (Cm. 1200) and in the follow-up report—"The Environment in Wales" published by the Welsh Office last September. I will also be publishing a further report in the autumn on our environmental programme in Wales and future plans. This will include an account of progress made by the Welsh Office in integrating environmental concerns into policies and programmes, including internal housekeeping practices, which will be developed further in the future.

Home Care Service

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy concerning the home care service in Wales; what extra resources he plans to allocate concerning this service; if he will meet directors of social services from each of the counties in Wales to consider this service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government attach great importance to the development of all forms of care, including home care services, which will help enable people to be cared for in their own homes and communities, rather than in institutions.

The management of the home care service is the responsibility of social services authorities. It is a matter for those authorities to decide on a level of provision within the resources available to them. The proper assessment of need to make sure that services are optimally targeted to meet the needs of individuals is clearly essential, and indeed is required by Government policy on community care provision. It is for each authority to determine how best to go about this, but the Welsh Office has issued clear guidance on assessment and the provision of social and community care to help them. The "Caring for People" White Paper sets out our commitment to provide adequate resources for local authorities in the exercise of their wider responsibilities from April 1993. I have no present plans to meet directors of social services to discuss their management of the home care service.

Water-borne Viruses

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the spread of water-borne viruses in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Government are funding an ongoing epidemiological study to assess the minor risks to health of sea bathing. The first two interim reports of the study are available in the Library of the House and I look forward to receiving the final report and recommendations next year.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases there are of swimmers contracting water-borne viruses in Wales since April; what were the comparable figures for 1990 and 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not available.

Hydatidosis

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of hydatidosis were reported in Wales in 1991; how many related diseases in children were reported; what were the comparable figures for each year since 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not available in the form requested. However, the number of deaths and discharges from NHS hospitals in Wales for which a diagnosis of hydatidosis—ICD9 code 122—was recorded, in each of the years 1987-90, is given in the following table:

The figures show:

a. deaths and discharges for patients of all ages; and

b. deaths and discharges in which the patient was under 16 years of age.

Year	All ages	Under 16

The figures may understate the true position in that not all hospitals provide complete clinical details relating to patient discharges and deaths.

Corresponding data for 1991 are not available centrally at present.

Teachers

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of first-year teachers in (a) Wales and (b) the United Kingdom in 1991; what were the comparable figures for the previous two years; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The number of full-time, qualified teachers in their first year of service is given in the following table:

	1989	1990	1991
Wales[1]	516	575	861
England[1]	12,857	13,790	14,449

Auditing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether the accounts of each of the non-departmental public bodies under his responsibility are audited by (a) the National Audit Office, (b) private accountants or (c) another body; if he will name the private accountants or other bodies used; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The Comptroller and Auditor General audits the accounts of all but two of the executive non-departmental public bodies in Wales in existence at 31 March 1992, either certifying separate accounts or as part of the Welsh Office appropriation accounts.

The Cardiff Bay development corporation's accounts are audited by Ernst and Young and those of Housing for Wales by KPMG Peat Marwick.

The accounts of the Welsh National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting are audited and laid before Parliament by the Comptroller and Auditor General, but a primary audit is carried out by Touche Ross and Company.

"Getting in on the Act"

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his Department's response to the recommendations of the Audit Commission report "Getting in on the Act" on provision for pupils with special educational needs.

Mr. David Hunt: I welcome the publication of this report which will help to stimulate valuable discussion about educational provision for children with special educational needs. The Government have already promised legislation in this area later in the year.

Commonwealth Games

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he supports the initiative taken by the Assembly of Welsh Counties to bring together the Sports Council for Wales and the Commonwealth Games Council for Wales to seek agreement on the future organisation and funding of participation in the games in Canada and beyond.

Mr. David Hunt: The Sports Council for Wales is responsible for ensuring that public funds made available to it are used effectively. I understand that the Sports Council for Wales has indicated its willingness to participate in the meeting proposed by the Assembly of Welsh Counties and I hope that this will be helpful in resolving the matter.

Unitary Authority, Cardiff

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether it is his intention that the new unitary authority based on Cardiff will have an eastern boundary based on the current boundary between the present Cardiff—south Glamorgan area and the present Newport—Gwent area.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him 6 July 1992 at columns 7-8.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Famine Aid

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list by country what aid his Department is currently giving to countries suffering from famine; and what was the position 12 months ago.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Commitments of aid to relieve famine (in some cases compounded by civil strife) are:

Multilateral Assistance

In addition, our share of the cost of food aid allocated to the southern Africa region in 1992 under the EC special food aid programme is estimated at £11·3 million. Our share of EC allocations to the Horn of Africa is £12·4 million. Figures for other 1992 EC emergency aid programmes are not yet available.

Green Minister

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will outline the priorities for future action of the green Minister in his Department (a) over the next year and (b) over this Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Over the next 12 months my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development will continue to follow up commitments made in the White Paper Cm 1200—"This Common Inheritance"—and its successor Cm 1655—"The First Year Report". She will also contribute to the second anniversary White Paper in the autumn. The ODA will continue to examine the environmental implications of all the activities it finances for developing countries, and to finance a wide range of measures which directly help tackle environmental problems in developing countries.

A particular priority for the ODA for the next year and beyond will be helping developing countries implement the agreements reached at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

International Development Association

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much Britain's contribution to the earth increment to the International Development Association will be; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The question of an earth increment, which was proposed by the president of the World bank at UNCED, is one of the issues being discussed in the context of the 10th replenishment of the resources of the International Development Association (IDA). The negotiations on the replenishment are likely to be completed sometime this coming winter.

Family Planning

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to improve world-wide access to family planning and education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We are continuing to increase our support to population programmes in developing countries, focusing particularly on strengthening family planning services and support for the purchase of contraceptives. We are on course to achieve the goal which we announced in August 1991 of establishing at least 15 new bilateral population projects over the following two years. New contraceptive supply projects have been initiated in four African countries.

We are also looking for opportunities to increase our support for adult education, particularly in women's literacy which has a close relationship with the demand for family planning advice.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Iran

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Iran concerning the well-being of the 3,000 members of the People's Mujahedin who were arrested at a protest in Mashad on 30 May.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As I told the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) on 3 July at column 758, we continue to make clear to the Iranian Government our serious concern at their human rights record, both bilaterally and together with our EC partners.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations he has received from Amnesty International concerning mass executions carried out throughout Iran; and what response he has made;

(2) what representations he has made to the Government of Iran concerning the practice of carrying out mass executions in the country.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We receive reports from Amnesty International on the situation in Iran on a regular basis. We continue to make clear to the Iranian Government our serious concern at their human rights record, both bilaterally and with our EC partners.

Tibet

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions the British diplomats who visited Lhasa and Shigatse in the Tibetan autonomous region from 16 to 25 May had about the proposed special economic zone in Lhasa; what discussion there was about British participation; and what results were achieved.

Mr. Goodlad: During their visit to Tibet in May the two British diplomats called on the local authorities, including the Economic Planning Commission. They were told of plans to establish a light industrial development zone and a high technology development zone in Lhasa, both intended to increase foreign trade and investment.

Western Sahara

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will ask the United Nations Secretary-General to intervene personally to solve the current stalemate in holding a referendum in western Sahara by talking directly with the Moroccan and Saharawi leaders.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Secretary-General's special representative, Mr. Yaqub Khan, has been pursuing talks with all parties to the western Sahara dispute. The Secretary-General hopes that substantial progress will have been made by the end of August.

Spanish Fishermen

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his office has made to the Spanish Government regarding the instances of Spanish nationals being charged and convicted of fishing illegally in Scottish waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: My Department has made no representations to the Spanish Government on this matter.

Earth Summit

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he holds on which nation's delegations to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development were comprised only of Government representatives.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Our information is incomplete. A copy of the final list of delegates to UNCED will be placed in the Library as soon as it is available.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Knives

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for a new knives campaign; how he proposes to publicise it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is for chief officers of police to consider whether publicising facilities for the disposal of knives would be a worthwhile crime prevention initiative in their force area. I understand that the Metropolitan police have recently launched a publicity campaign, which will run until 16 August, and that a similar campaign is planned for Greater Manchester in September.

Dangerous Dogs Act 1991

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there have been under the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information is not yet available on the number of prosecutions under the Dangerous Dogs Act 1991, which did not come into force until August 1991.

Telephone Interception

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the organisations authorised to carry out telephone interception since 1986.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Warrants authorising the interception of communications may be issued following application by the police, HM Customs and Excise and the security and intelligence agencies.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many claims of unauthorised interception of telephones were investigated since 1985; and how many have been prosecuted.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Information held centrally shows that there were four prosecutions under section 1 of the Interception of Communications Act 1985 in England and Wales in 1988 and one in 1990. There are no centrally held records of the number of investigations.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will propose amendments to the Interception of Communications Act 1985 to make explicit that it is illegal to monitor or eavesdrop on domestic and industrial telecommunications unless a warrant is authorised, notwithstanding that a physical tap has not been put on the line.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Under the Interception of Communications Act 1985 the intentional interception of communications in the course of transmission by means of a public telecommunications system is an offence unless carried out under the authority of a warrant issued by the Secretary of State or there are reasonable grounds for believing that one of the parties to the communication has consented to the interception. I have no proposals to amend the Act.

Wolds Remand Centre

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking over the disturbance at Wolds remand centre, Everthorpe on 27 to 28 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I have received a report on the incident from the Home Office controller based in the prison. I am satisfied that it was handled in a calm and professional way by the contractor.

Gambling

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with his EC counterparts on the harmonisation of gambling policy within the EC; and what is the position of each member state on this subject in the context of the European single market.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: This subject has not yet been discussed at ministerial level. As part of its consideration of gambling in the single market, officials of the European Commission met officials from all member states on 2 and 3 April to discuss the issues. We understand that there is wide support amongst other member states for our view that gambling policy should remain a matter for national authorities.

Green Minister

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will outline the priorities for future action of the green Minister in his Department (a) over the next year and (b) over this Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My hon. Friend the Minister of State will continue to ensure that the policy and work of my Department take full account of environmental concerns, in accordance with the principles set out in the White Paper "This Common Inheritance" Cm 1200 and the first year report, Cm 1655. Current initiatives include the reclamation and development as wildlife conservation areas of land adjoining new and existing prisons; a wide range of measures to reduce pollution arising from the activities of prison service industries and farms; the cessation of incineration in the disposal of waste at prison establishments; a review of departmental policy on the purchase and use of ozone-depleting chemicals; and a continuing programme of energy efficiency measures in Home Office buildings.

Fireworks

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what statistics his Department holds on the incidence of injury to animals from fireworks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have been asked to reply.

No information is collected on the incidence of injury to animals from fireworks.

Recorded Offences

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of offences recorded in each police authority area in 1991-92; what was the percentage change compared with the preceding year; how many offences were notified for each uniformed officer in each police authority area for 1991-92; and what was the percentage change compared with the preceding year.

Mr. Jack: The requested information on notifiable offences recorded by the police is published in table 2 of Home Office statistical bulletin 14/92, a copy of which is in the Library. The figures for the number of notifiable offences recorded by the police per police officer and the percentage change are contained in the following table:

Prisoners' Home Leave

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners have been released on home leave in 1992; and how many of these prisoners failed to return to custody.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information required is not held centrally at present but arrangements are being made for its future collection and publication.

Correspondence

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long he normally expects to take to respond to letters from hon. Members.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The aim is to reply to letters from hon. Members as quickly as possible. The time required in each case is influenced by factors such as the need to search records or to make inquiries outside the Department. Work is presently in hand to further improve the service to hon. Members.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to be in a position to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Stretford of 18 May regarding Mr. R. H. (Reference R 303898/2).

Mr. Charles Wardle: I replied to the hon. Member on 24 June.

Police Recruitment

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers were recruited in 1991; what were the comparable figures for the previous two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: During 1991, 5,338 police officers were recruited in England and Wales. The figures for 1989 and 1990 are 7,364 and 5,560 respectively. Recruitment figures for 1991 reflect the fact that establishment increases did not come into effect until October.

Prisoners' Children

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any proposals to enable mothers of young children who are serving prison sentences to keep their children with them; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Facilities already exist in three prisons for mothers to keep their young children with them. At present there are a total of 37 places in mother and baby units; 15 places are at Askham Grange, 12 are at Holloway and 10 are at Styal. At Askham Grange and Styal children may remain until the age of 18 months, while at Holloway the age limit is nine months.

Plans have already been drawn up to extend the number of places. Ten more places will be provided at Styal by the end of the year, and work will start on a purpose-built unit at New Hall during the winter months, to provide a further nine places.

EC Border Controls

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will immediately make available the draft European Community regulation relating to European Community border controls.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) on 7 July 1992 at column 132.

Immigrants Advisory Service

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his plans for the future funding of the United Kingdom Immigrants Advisory Service.

Mr. Charles Wardle: My hon. Friend the Member for Fareham (Mr. Lloyd) announced on 29 January at column 566 that although the Government had a high regard for the service which UKIAS staff provided to its clients we were not satisfied with the manner in which the general council and executive committee oversaw the organisation.

The Government and the London representative of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees have since transferred the funds available for refugee work from UKIAS to the new refugee unit. This unit was formerly part of UKIAS. It is, however, now a separate independent voluntary body supervised on an interim basis by a board chaired by Mrs. Usha Prashar which is devising proposals for a long-term constitution for the unit.

My hon. Friend also gave UKIAS notice in January that continued payment of the grant for the service's general immigration work depended on its making changes to meet the standards expected of an organisation receiving grant-in-aid. The necessary changes have not been made and the Government have now decided to terminate the grant to UKIAS.

The Government attach importance to the provision of satisfactory counselling services and representation for people with rights of appeal under immigration legislation. We wish to apply the funds which have hitherto been applied to UKIAS under section 23 of the Immigration Act 1971 to a new voluntary body which will take over the general immigration work of UKIAS. My right hon. and learned Friend has invited Mr. Humfrey Malins to lead a small planning group, outside Government, whose task will be to draw up proposals for such an organisation. Others will be invited to be members of the group, which will be encouraged to complete its work as soon as possible.

In drawing up its proposals, the planning group has been asked by my right hon. and learned Friend to have particular regard to the need for the trustees of the new body to be able to meet their responsibilities under charity law and to satisfy the Home Office that there will be proper accountability for the grant paid. Provided these criteria are met, I hope that the group will then take steps to implement its proposals and establish the new body.

In the meantime, the Government hope that it will prove possible for advice and representation to continue to be available to appellants. We are, however, not prepared to provide any further funds for UKIAS while it is overseen by the present executive committee. We have today written to members of UKIAS's general council explaining that we would be prepared to fund UKIAS to provide legal advice and representation during this interim period only if the executive committee were replaced by a new, separate administration acceptable to the Home Office. We hope that the general council will respond positively, so that the service to UKIAS's clients can continue while plans for the new body are being made.

Bail Hostels

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for each police authority area in Yorkshire and Humberside and for England as a whole (a) how many bail hostel places were provided by the probation service at 31 December 1991, (b) what the average number of residents in these bail hostels was in 1991 and (c) how many convictions were recorded in 1991 of people who were resident in a bail hostel at the time of the offence for which they were convicted.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 7 July 1992]: As at 31 December 1991 there were 26 bail and 82 probation/bail hostels in England as a whole, providing 559 bail and 1,782 probation/bail places. Of these, 19 probation/bail places were provided by Humberside, 22 bail and 122 probation/bail places by south Yorkshire, and 45 bail and 95 probation/bail places by west Yorkshire. There are currently no hostels in north Yorkshire.

Statistics on the average number of residents are collected in terms of percentage occupancy. The 1991 figures, against 74·6 per cent. for England as a whole, are Humberside 64·3 per cent.; south Yorkshire 76·5 per cent.; west Yorkshire 83·0 per cent.

Information on the addresses of offenders at the time their offences were committed is not collected centrally.

Prisons, Wales

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prisons in Wales that are overcrowded, the maximum number of prisoners allowed at these institutions, and the current number of inmates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 7 July 1992]: Two Welsh prisons, Cardiff and Swansea, are overcrowded. In common with most other local prisons the operational capacity of these establishments—that is, the normal working capacity—is higher than the certified normal accommodation (that is, the uncrowded capacity). The figures for 24 June were as follows:

	CNA	Operational capacity	Population
Cardiff	325	447	437
Swansea	213	285	283

EDUCATION

Animal Experiments

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether experiments on live animals are included in the national curriculum.

Mr. Forth: No.

Public School Teachers

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many public school teachers were trained at a cost to public funds; and what is the current cost of a three-year teacher training course.

Mr. Forth: Data on the number of teachers in public schools who were trained at a cost to public funds are not held centrally. The estimated average cost at 1991-92 prices of training a teacher in a higher education institution outside London through a three-year undergraduate course is about £19,000. The majority of undergraduate initial teacher training courses are of four years' duration.

White Paper

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what will be the title of his proposed White Paper on the organisation of education; and when it will be published.

Mr. Forth: As announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, we will publish the White Paper, complete with title, by the end of the summer.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will indicate the scope and purpose of his projected White Paper on education; and if he will list any consultative paper, speech or departmental circular of relevance to its contents, either at the present time, or after its publication.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has already announced the Government's intention to publish a White Paper by the end of the summer. Its scope and purpose will be made public then. The speech given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the Adam Smith Institute on 16 June made it clear that the White Paper will include proposals for new types of schools to develop, and proposals to tackle the worst inner city schools.

Special Needs

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the average length of time that children with special needs have to wait before being assessed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Information for each local education authority is not available centrally. However, there is recent evidence that some authorities are failing to meet the Government's guidelines that the procedures for assessment and the issue of a statement should not exceed six months. The Government have now decided that there should be comprehensive provisions for regulating the time and way in which the assessment and statementing procedures are carried out. My right hon. Friend is about to consult widely on the form and content of the regulations which will be required.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the Audit Commission's report on the assessment of children with special needs.

Mr. Forth: A press statement welcoming the publication of the report was issued on 25 June, and was placed in the Library.

University Students

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the average cost per student per year of educating a university student in (a) Wales and (b) the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forman: The Universities Funding Council provides the same level of funding for teaching for funded student places in each subject in all universities, irrespective of location. Allocations for research and other factors are made separately. Details of the UFC's allocations for all universities in 1992-93 are set out in UFC circular letter 4/92, a copy of which is in the Library.

New Schools

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many new schools opened in 1991; and what were the comparable figures for the previous two years.

Mr. Forth: Thirty-one new schools opened in 1991. This compares with 74 in 1990 and 47 in 1989.

Retired Teachers

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many teachers retired in 1991; what were the comparable figures for 1982 and 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The number of members of the teachers' superannuation scheme for England and Wales who were awarded retirement benefits during the periods in question is as follows:

Financial year ended 31st March	Total
1982	16,462
1986	17,336
1991	21,318

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Machine Tool Industry

19. Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next expects to meet representatives of the Machine Tool Technologies Association to discuss the effects of the recession on the machine tool industry.

Mr. Heseltine: My right hon. Friend the Minister for Industry met the Machine Tool Technologies Association on 8 June. I plan to meet the association later in the year.

Manufacturing Industry

22. Mr. Rooker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many of the professional institutions associated with manufacturing he has met since taking up his appointment.

Mr. Heseltine: To date, I have had no formal meetings with the professional institutes. I have, however, had the pleasure of meeting many of the institutes' representatives during my business engagements.

Manufacturing Output

21. Mr. McFall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations he has received about manufacturing output.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Department receives considerable correspondence about the state of manufacturing industry.

30. Mr. Hawkins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the level of output of manufacturing industry (a) in the north-west and (b) in Lancashire.

Mr. Sainsbury: In 1989, the latest year for which data are available, manufacturing output in the north-west was £14 billion. The figure for Lancashire will be published in "Regional Trends 27" on 9 July, a copy of which will be placed in the Library of the House.

33. Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has recently received about manufacturing output.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Department receives considerable correspondence about the state of manufacturing industry.

RECHAR

23. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the operation of RECHAR.

Mr. Sainsbury: RECHAR programmes are now ready to proceed and I look forward to their making a useful contribution to the economies of coal field areas.

Assisted Areas

24. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if his Department will be introducing any changes to the criteria for assisted area status.

Mr. Sainsbury: Measures of unemployment will continue to be the main criteria in the assisted areas map review now under way. The consultation paper recently issued makes clear, however, that other factors will also be considered, including future job demand, other performance measures, activity rates, urban problems, peripherality and the incidence of known major closures or rundowns.

Shipbuilding

25. Dr. Godman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent discussions he has had with representatives of management and employees of the United Kingdom merchant shipyards on matters relating to the European Community's seventh directive on the shipbuilding intervention fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade and I have had a number of discussions with management and employee representatives of the shipbuilding industry during the last few weeks.

Consumer Protection

26. Mr. Bennett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the implementation of European consumer protection legislation; and if he will make a statement.

28. Mr. Hoon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he is taking to ensure the effective implementation of European consumer protection law.

Mr. Leigh: Implementation of European Community consumer protection legislation into the national legislation of a member state is the responsibility of that member state. My Department has not made an assessment of the effectiveness of such implementation by other member states. If the hon. Member has information that they are failing to implement Community legislation effectively, he should send it to me.

Trade Deficit

27. Mr. Chisholm: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the visible trade deficit for the latest available month; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The United Kingdom had a visible trade deficit of £0·8 billion in May 1992.

EC Directives

29. Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 17 June, Official Report, columns 500-51, what assessment he has made of the effect of recent community directives on the profitability of small businesses.

Mr. Leigh: My Department's deregulation unit monitors proposals for legislation from the European Commission and identifies those which are likely to impose significant burdens on business. In conjunction with other Departments, we seek to ensure that the costs of those directives are properly assessed and taken into account by the Commission through its fiche d'impact system. Departments also take account of compliance costs when they consult business and interested parties on proposals both during negotiations and at implementation stage. The views of small business organisations are sought and taken into account in this process. The directives listed in the reply referred to are under consideration, and have been or will be subject to appropriate assessment and consultation.

Animal Experiments

31. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will ban the import of all animals purchased for the purpose of experimentation.

Mr. Needham: No. Imposition of an import ban was rejected by Parliament during the passage of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Industrial Policy

32. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will next meet representatives of the northern region CBI to discuss industrial policy.

Mr. Heseltine: I shall be meeting representatives of the northern region CBI on 18 September.

Industrial Investment

34. Mr. Burden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the level of industrial investment in the west midlands.

Mr. Sainsbury: In 1989, the latest year for which data are available, manufacturing investment in the west midlands amounted to £1·6 billion.

Trading Standards Officers

35. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the number of trading standards officers in post and the number required.

Mr. Leigh: According to returns submitted by local weights and measures authorities in England, Wales and Scotland, the number of qualified trading standards officers in post on 31 March 1991 was just over 1,500 against a complement of just under 1,800.

Telephone Charges

36. Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the ranking of the United Kingdom in terms of local telephone charges compared to other countries in the OECD.

Mr. Leigh: Comparisons of individual telephone call prices can be misleading. Factors such as duration of call, time of day, distance and charging structure all have to be taken into account. Oftel publishes annually a comparison of the prices in the United Kingdom for typical residential and business customers. The most recent produced the following comparisons.

Country	Residential Basket	Business Basket
United Kingdom (BT)	100	100
France	78	92
Germany (DB)	99	99
Italy	105	133

Notes:
United Kingdom = 100; conversion of currencies by means of purchasing power parities (PPPs).

United Kingdom tariff for local calls have fallen by between 14 and 19 per cent. since privatisation.

Industry Links

37. Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he proposes to take to improve the links between industry and his Department in the northern region.

Mr. Heseltine: I announced on 3 July my plans for reorganising my Department so as to relate more closely to individual sectors of industry throughout the United Kingdom. These plans include the creation of a new industrial competitiveness division, a number of new divisions to cover key sectors not dealt with at present, and the assigning to all sectoral divisions of an explicit role to sponsor their industries. My Department's regional offices will continue to be the first point of contact for many firms. The offices based in Newcastle and Manchester will continue their work of building closer and more effective links with industry in the northern region.

Exports

38. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the value of United Kingdom exports in each of the past three years to (a) the United States of America and (b) the 11 countries of the European Community.

Mr. Needham: United Kingdom exports to the United States of America were £12·2 billion, £13·0 billion and £11·3 billion in 1989, 1990 and 1991 respectively. Exports to the EC countries were £47·4 billion, £54·9 billion and £59·3 billion in the same three years.

Post Office

39. Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he next intends to meet the chairman of the Post Office to discuss Post Office reorganisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: My right hon. Friend last met the chairman of the Post Office, Sir Bryan Nicholson, on 20 May and will continue to meet him on a regular basis to discuss a range of issues of mutual concern.

National Grid

40. Mr. Spearing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the changes necessary to the national grid for electricity consequent on the current text of the treaty on European union, articles 129 b, c and d.

Mr. Eggar: None.

Recession

12. Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the long-term effects of the recession in industry.

Mr. Heseltine: British industry is well placed to grow as we recover from recession.

Insolvencies

Mr. Sproat: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many recent representations he has received about companies with debts which declare themselves insolvent and are replaced by new companies with similar names run by the same people; what plans he has to take action; what general advice he issues to the creditors of such companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: A few representations have been made to my Department recently on directors of failed companies starting new companies with similar names. Provisions contained in the Company Directors Disqualification Act 1986 and, more specifically, section 216 of the Insolvency Act 1986 address these concerns where companies go into insolvent liquidation. Creditors are advised to report any breaches of the provisions to the liquidator, or my officials at the Insolvency Service.

Beer Orders

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate has been made of the effect of the Beer orders in the United Kingdom upon (a) the number of public houses, (b) the number of brewery companies brewing beer and (c) the number of tenants leaving the brewery trade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Beer orders do not come fully into force until 1 November 1992. The Director General of Fair Trading will be reviewing them next year when their effects on the beer market can be assessed.

UN International Conventional Arms Transfer Register

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on how Her Majesty's Government believe the United Nations international conventional arms transfer register will play an important role in safeguarding against diversion of significant military material.

Mr. Needham: The United Nations register will show each year member states' exports to and imports from individual countries in certain major categories of arms, for example missiles and missile systems. One of the register's main purposes is to provide transparency in the trading of such items. The availability of this information to all member states will make it possible to trace the movement of significant military material, and to compare declared exports against declared imports. It is hoped therefore that the need to report transfers will act as a deterrent to those who would otherwise divert supplies of such equipment.

PERIFRA Programme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will set out the rules and guidelines governing applications under the PERIFRA defence industry conversion programme; whether local authorities and training and enterprise councils may apply; and what is the number and regional distribution of applications so far received.

Mr. Sainsbury: In a letter dated 25 March 1992, the European Commission set out the conditions for grants under the PERIFRA programme, and invited Governments to send applications. A copy of this letter has been placed in the Library.

The closing date for applications was subsequently extended to 5 June 1992. Over 25 applications were received from all parts of the United Kingdom, of which 12 have been forwarded to the Commission. We await its decision as to the projects to be awarded grant.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many papers concerning the development of civil nuclear energy his Department requested be withheld under section 5(1) of the Public Records Act in regard to the release of papers for (a) 1958, (b) 1959, (c) 1960 or (d) 1961.

Mr. Eggar: Information on the numbers of my Department's files which are closed or retained under the Public Records Acts is shown in the class lists which are open for inspection at the Public Record Office, Kew. Where individual papers have been withheld, this can be ascertained from dummy documents which are inserted in the relevant files.

Nuclear Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much has been allocated by his Department in each of the last five years to the International Atomic Energy Authority to undertake monitoring work in relation to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Eggar: Monitoring work is carried out under safeguards agreements including those concluded pursuant to the non-proliferation treaty. The cost of safeguards forms part of the agency's regular budget. The United Kingdom has contributed the following amounts to the regular budget in the past five years:

	£ million
1987-88	3·5
1988-89	3·7
1989-90	4·0
1990-91	4·7
1991-92	4·9

Computer Programs (Patents)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy towards proposals under the general agreement on tariffs and trade to allow patenting of the general techniques underlying computer programs, and the patenting of software-related inventions.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 7 July 1992]: We welcome the proposals under the GATT agreement to protect computer programs as literary works under the Berne convention, 1971. Copyright protection extends to expressions and not to ideas, procedures, methods of operation or mathematical concepts as such. Since computer programs are treated as literary works in the United Kingdom and they are protected by copyright there is no conflict between the GATT agreement and United Kingdom law and practice. The United Kingdom Patent Office will continue to be able to exclude computer software from patentability.

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list each recipient company and the level of grant provided through regional selective assistance since 1984-85 in the Darlington area.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 6 July 1992]: Details of offers of regional selective assistance are normally made public only after the company has made a claim and has been paid. Since 1984-85 there are 72 companies in the Darlington travel-to-work-area who have benefited from regional selective assistance. The firms and the offers made and accepted (excluding details of three cases where the amounts offered and accepted was less than £5,000) are as follows:

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Commercial and Industrial Tenants

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what estimate he has made of the effect on tenants of commercial and industrial property as a result of delays in implementing the proposals in the Law Commission consultation paper of 1986 "Landlord and Tenant: Privity of Contract and Estate", Law Commission paper No. 95; and if he will now take steps to implement the proposals.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor has received a number of representations from those affected by the rules of privity of contract and estate. He is well aware of the difficulties faced by some tenants and has recently met representatives of both tenants and landlords. He is now considering their representations and hopes to make a statement about the Law Commission's proposals before long.

Porthmadog County Court

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will make a statement on the future of Porthmadog county court.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Department is currently examining the court services provided in Gwynned, where Porthmadog county court is situated.

No moves will be made to close Porthmadog county court or any other office without consulting users who have an interest in its future.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many accesses were made to each index of the new police national computer over the last year; and if he will include in these statistics an indication of the number of access requests that could search more than one index.

Mr. Mates: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 7 July at columns 128-29 by my hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department.

Health Promotion Agency

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland where the first report of the Health Promotion Agency for Northern Ireland was printed.

Mr. Hanley: The report was printed in Northern Ireland.

Green Minister

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will outline the priorities for future action of the green Minister in his Department (a) over the next year and (b) over this Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Over the next 12 months I shall continue to follow up commitments in the White Paper "This Common Inheritance" (Cm 1200) and its successor "The First Year Report" (Cm 1655) and I shall also be providing a Northern Ireland contribution for a second year report in the autumn. Over the next year and beyond I shall continue to ensure that environmental concerns shape the policy and work of the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments, whenever appropriate.

Rate Collection Agency

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what performance targets have been set for the Rate Collection Agency in 1992-93.

Mr. Atkins: For 1992-93 the following performance targets have been set for the Agency:

1. To reduce rating debt to 1.95 per cent. of the gross collectable rate (excluding late assessments) by 31 March 1993.
2. To achieve a reduction of 2 per cent. in the real value of the unit costs of collecting rates per hereditament.
3. To generate refunds to 96 per cent. of ratepayers so entitled within 14 days of credits being identified.
4. To process by 31 March 1993 94 per cent. of applications in respect of the incoming year received from existing housing benefit recipients before 15 March 1993.
5. To achieve a reduction of 1·6 per cent. in the real value of the unit costs of processing housing benefit cases.
6. To achieve at least 96 per cent. of housing benefit assessments free of error.

Health and Social Services Boards

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the perceived religious affiliation of persons appointed to permanent posts in each of the health and social services board headquarters in Northern Ireland, by director, section and grade, over the past three years.

Mr. Hanley [holding answer 30 June 1992]: The perceived religious affiliation of persons appointed to permanent posts in each of the health and social services board headquarters in 1990 and 1991 is as follows:

	1990			1991
Board	Protestant	Catholic	Not known	Protestant	Catholic	Not known
Eastern	71	54	12	63	52	14
Northern	112	33	9	53	28	5
Southern	23	10	2	33	11	2
Western	23	61	8	24	37	7

It would not be appropriate to break these down by directorate or grade. Information for 1989 is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Privy Purse

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will set out for each year since 1987 the heads of expenditure of the privy purse of the Duchy of Lancaster, stating in each case whether the payments were made for a charitable purpose.

Mr. Waldegrave: The accounts of the Duchy of Lancaster are placed in the Library of the House each year. It can be seen from these accounts that there is no such item as "the Privy Purse of the Duchy of Lancaster".

Greater Manchester Sheriff

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he will be attending the ceremony of pricking the nomination of the sheriff for the county of Greater Manchester; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster normally attends when Her Majesty the Queen picks the names of the three high sheriffs for the county of Greater Manchester.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Scotch Whisky

Mr. McFall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer on 21 May, Official Report, column 203, to the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing), what progress has been made in talks with his European partners at the ECOFIN meetings on the EC excise tax issue as it affects Scotch whisky.

Sir John Cope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend gave on 3 July 1992 at columns 755-56.

Green Minister

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will outline the priorities for future action of the green Minister in his Department (a) over the next year and (b) over this Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: I consider the environmental implications of Treasury policies as necessary.

VAT

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the annual gain to the Exchequer of imposing VAT at the standard rate on (a) books, (b) magazines, (c) newspapers, or (d) all currently non-rated or zero-rated goods and services other than fresh food and children's clothes.

Sir John Cope: The extra revenue accruing, in a full year, from applying the standard rate of VAT to the zero-rated items listed is approximately estimated, for the last financial year, at:

	Revenue effect[1] 1991-92 (£ billion)
(a) Books	0·3
(b) Magazines	0·2
(c) Newspapers	0·5
(d) Goods and Services other than Food and Children's Clothing
Domestic Fuel and Power	2·5
Construction of New Dwellings	[2]3·4
Passenger Transport	2·3
Water and Sewerage Services	0·5
Drugs and Medicines on Prescription	0·4

[1] These estimates make no allowance for the fact that changes in taxation may cause people to change their behaviour.
These estimates cannot be added together to give a meaningful total. Not all expenditure under these headings is zero-rated.
[2] Includes zero-rated expenditure on land purchased for construction of new dwellings.

These figures are based on information provided in table 4B.1 in the 1992-93 "Financial Statement and Budget Report".

Goods and services which are not standard-rated or zero-rated are either exempt from VAT or out of scope. No estimates are available for these.

Public Sector Pay

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his target for the rate of increase of public sector pay in real terms.

Mr. Portillo: The Government set no such target.

Business Rate

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many appeals are outstanding against uniform business rate valuations on the Isle of Wight; and how many appeals have been heard.

Mr. Dorrell: For the Isle of Wight 202 appeals against uniform business rate valuations have been heard and 863 remain outstanding.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of the appeals of the Isle of Wight against uniform business rate valuations resulted in (a) a reduction and (b) an increase.

Mr. Dorrell: The information requested is not available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Petroleum Revenue Tax

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what has been the total annual revenue raised through corporation tax paid by companies also liable for petroleum revenues tax for each of the years since petroleum revenue tax was introduced;

(2) what has been the total annual revenue raised through petroleum revenue tax in each year since its introduction; and what is his estimated yield for the current financial year.

Mr. Dorrell: Revenues raised from United Kingdom oil and gas production by petroleum revenue tax and corporation tax are as follows:

£ million

	Petroleum revenue tax[1]	Corporation tax[2]
1975-76	0	5
1976-77	0	10
1977-78	0	10

	Petroleum revenue tax[1]	Corporation tax[2]
1978-79	183	93
1979-80	1,435	250
1980-81	2,410	341
1981-82	4,415	681
1982-83	5,669	521
1983-84	6,017	877
1984-85	7,177	2,432
1985-86	6,375	2,916
1986-87	1,188	2,676
1987-88	2,296	1,318
1988-89	1,371	1,230
1989-90	1,050	743
1990-91	860	971
1991-92	−214	647
[3]1992-93	100	600

[1] Including Supplementary Petroleum Duty in 1981-82 and 1982-83.
[2] Before ACT set-off.
[3] 1992-93 Financial Statement and Budget Report forecast.

Pensions

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those EC member states who pay their national government employees index linked inflation proofed pensions.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that this information is not held centrally.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Bank of England will respond to the fourth report of the Treasury and Civil Service Committee of Session 1991-92, "Banking Supervision and BCCI: international and national supervision".

Mr. Lamont: I understand that the Bank of England has now responded to the fourth report of the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee in Session 1991-92 "Banking Supervision and BCCI: international and national supervision". A copy of this response has been placed in the Library, together with a paper on minimum standards for the supervision of banking groups recently agreed by the Basle committee of G10 banking supervisors, to accompany and reinforce the 1983 Basle concordat.

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he is yet in a position to reply to the fourth report of the Treasury and Civil Service Committee of Session 1991-92, "Banking Supervision and BCCI: international and national supervision".

Mr. Lamont: As the former Economic Secretary told the House on 12 March 1992 at column 603, the Government will await Lord Justice Bingham's report on BCCI before reaching any conclusions on the Committee's recommendations.

Money Laundering

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the work of the financial action task force on money laundering.

Mr. Nelson: The financial action task force on money laundering (FATF) published its third annual report on 25 June. The FATF has focused on three key areas of work over the last year. It has reviewed the 40 recommendations that were drawn up in 1990 in the light of recent experience and developments in money laundering techniques. It has produced interpretative notes on matters such as unlawful use of shell companies and the use of lawyers as nominees for illegal entities. The FATF has also begun a study of ways to make it easier to track the movement of suspect funds through electronic payment systems.

The external relations working group of the FATF, chaired by the United Kingdom, has continued to encourage world wide action against money laundering, and has drawn up a detailed action programme for future work. Over the past year FATF members, including the United Kingdom, have taken part in a number of regional meetings to discuss money laundering including the Caribbean financial action task force in Kingston, Jamaica and the South East Asia Central bank board of governors in Jakarta. Links with other international organisations, such as the United Nations international drugs control programme and the Council of Europe are being developed.

Finally, the FATF has established an effective mutual evaluation programme to assess progress among its members in implementing the anti-money laundering measures that it has developed. Four of these in-depth country examinations have so far taken place. Australia, France, Sweden and the United Kingdom have been examined. The FATF report includes summaries of these assessments.

The report on the United Kingdom is very complimentary. It notes the scale and international nature of the United Kingdom financial sector and the importance we attach to its remaining clean. The report commends the co-operative nature of the United Kingdom response to the threat of money laundering, and the good relations between the financial institutions, the regulators and the law enforcement community. The report concludes that the United Kingdom approach to combating money laundering could serve as a model for other countries.

I have arranged for copies of the report to be placed in the Library.

Banknotes

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all the banknotes issued in (a) England, (b) Northern Ireland and (c) Scotland, indicating which notes are legal tender in each jurisdiction.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 7 July 1992]: In England, the Bank of England is the sole note-issuing authority and notes are currently issued in the denominations of £5, £10, £20 and £50. In Northern Ireland, four commercial banks (Bank of Ireland, Allied Irish banks, Northern bank and Ulster bank) issue notes of £5, £10, £20, and £100, with Northern bank and Ulster bank also issuing £50 notes. In Scotland, three commercial banks (Royal Bank of Scotland, Bank of Scotland and Clydesdale bank) issue £5, £10, £20 and £100 notes, with Clydesdale bank also issuing a £50 note and Royal Bank of Scotland a £1 note.

Bank of England notes are legal tender in England and Wales only. Notes issued by banks in Scotland and Northern Ireland are not legal tender anywhere. Notes that are not legal tender may be used—anywhere in the United Kingdom—so long as both parties to a transaction agree that they are acceptable.

Financial Services (Regulation)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will publish the full report of the review by the Securities and Investments Board of the Investment Management Regulatory Organisation's regulatory responsibilities for Bishopsgate Investment Managers and London and Bishopsgate Investment.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 6 July 1992]: I am advised that publication of IMRO's review in full, whether by the Government or the Securities and Investments Board (SIB), might be severely prejudicial to criminal proceedings. SIB has announced it will be making a statement on SIB's assessment of IMRO's and its own performance together with the conclusions and decisions about resulting action from the IMRO review.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Claim Processing Times

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what rights to compensation or redress claimants have whose claims or review applications have not been processed within the Government's target periods.

Mr. Scott: The administration of social security benefits is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Cold Weather Payments

34. Ms. Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households in Rochdale qualify for payments under the cold weather payments scheme.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households in Glasgow, Central qualify for payments under the cold weather payments scheme.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) on what dates the cold weather payments system was triggered in Glasgow, Central during the winter of 1991-92; and how many households received payment on each occasion;

(2) on what dates cold weather payments were made in Glasgow, Central in response to a forecast of a qualifying period; and how long it took for these payments to be made.

Mr. Scott: Such information as is available is in the Library.

Attendance Allowance

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is the date of the longest outstanding new claim for attendance allowance;

(2) how many new claims for attendance allowance, made before April 1992, are outstanding; and when it is expected that they will be decided;

(3) how many applications for review of attendance allowance, made before April 1992, are outstanding; and what is the date of the longest outstanding application for review.

Mr. Scott: The administration of attendance allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend and copies will be placed in the Library and Public Information Office.

Maxwell Pensions

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what contributions he has received into the fund set up for Maxwell pensioners.

Miss Widdecombe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 28 June further details about the Maxwell pensioners trust. Work on the trust deed is being taken forward quickly and Sir John Cuckney and his fellow trustees hope to launch their formal appeal shortly.

Pending the formal establishment of the trust, the Department has opened a holding account to receive contributions in advance of Sir John's appeal and I am pleased to report that £120,000 has already been paid into this account.

Pension Rights

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 25 June, Official Report, column 307, if he will ask the Government Actuary to place in the Library the detailed calculation of his estimate of the cost of full retrospective equalisation of pension rights; and how much of this estimate derives from recalculations of existing benefits in payment and the enhancement of pension payments to existing male occupational pensioners.

Miss Widdecombe: A copy of a detailed calculation of the Government Actuary's estimate has been placed in the Library. This was given in response to an inquiry from the European Commission. A copy of the Commission's inquiry has also been placed in the Library.

Disability Working Allowance

Sir John Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for disability working allowance have been received; how this compares with the anticipated take-up; what is the success rate; and how long it is taking for new claims to be decided.

Mr. Scott: The administration of disability working allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Income Entitlement

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will specify the annual income entitlement (supplementary benefit or income support), excluding housing benefit, for (a) a single unemployed person aged 24 and (b) a man and a woman both aged 34 with two children aged 12 and 11 years respectively for each of the years 1979 to 1989 inclusive, at 1989 prices.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is in the table.

Part of our policy in replacing supplementary benefit was to target benefit on those groups most in need, and we succeeded. Since 1988 we have given extra help, over and above normal upratings, to families with children. The income support rates for single people aged 18 to 24 take account of the fact that the vast majority live as members of someone else's household.

A Financial year	B Annual entitlement at April 1989 prices £	C Annual entitlement at April 1989 prices £
1979-80	1,542·25	3,802·38
1980-81	1,572·16	4,002·40
1981-82	1,612·82	4,270·16
1982-83	1,654·58	4,379·18
1983-84	1,704·56	4,509·83
1984-85	1,706·86	4,516·65
1985-86	1,709·09	4,523·13
1986-87	1,725·19	4,571·23
1987-88	1,707·39	4,524·02
1988-89	1,398·44	4,820·73
1989-90	1,394·52	4,885·92

Notes:

Col. B—shows for 1979-88 the annual Supplementary Benefit entitlement, at 1989 prices, for a single householder. From April 1988 the figures are the annual entitlement to Income Support, at 1989 prices, for a single unemployed person age 18-24. No additions which might have been payable within Supplementary Benefit or Income Support premiums for special needs have been included.

Col. C—shows for 1979-88 the annual Supplementary Benefit entitlement, at 1989 prices, for a couple (aged 18 or over) with two children aged 11 and 12. From April 1988 the figures are the annual Income Support entitlement, at 1989 prices, for the same family composition. No additions which might have been payable within Supplementary Benefit have been included. The Income Support figures include the family premium which is paid automatically.

The Rossi Index (ie, the Retail Prices Index less housing costs) has been used to revalue at 1989 prices because there is no housing element in the entitlement amount.

Green Minister

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will outline the priorities for future action of the green Minister in his Department (a) over the next year and (b) over this Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: The main priority for environmental issues over the next year will be to finalise an environmental strategy for the Department and to ensure that there is an action plan to implement it. In the longer term, the aim will be to ensure that, as far as possible, the Department's activities take environmental consideration fully into account. This will include cutting down our production of carbon dioxide by reducing our energy consumption by 15 per cent. by 1996.

Social Fund

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to publish his annual report on the social fund; and when he will publish the social fund commissioner's annual report.

Mr. Scott: The Secretary of State's annual report (Cm 1992) has been published today and I have laid it before Parliament. This report records that in 1991-92 more than 1·5 million discretionary payments amounting to £276 million were made from the fund; and that the total paid out from the fund, including the regulated maternity, funeral and cold weather payments was £361 million.

The social fund commissioner's annual report has also been published today and copies placed in the Library.

The findings of research on the social fund which we commissioned from the social policy research unit at the University of York have also been published today. This research—based on two years of fieldwork carried out in 1990 and 1991—provides a considerable amount of information and will require careful study.

The research unit acknowledges that the social fund budget is a small, but important, part of social security spending. It represents around 0·5 per cent. of the total DSS budget, now approaching £70 billion a year. The fund's discretionary budget alone has been increased to £302 million for 1992-93, an increase of 32 per cent. from April 1991.

I am pleased to note that the findings confirm the message of the Secretary of State's annual report that the fund has provided cash assistance for exceptional needs to millions of people; and also recognise the excellent job being performed by social fund officers.

Stadex Industries Pension Fund

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will make a statement concerning the Stadex Industries Limited retirement savings plan;

(2) when he expects that members' benefit entitlement can be determined consequent upon continuing investigations into Stadex Industries Limited retirement savings plan;

(3) how many individuals are involved in the Stadex Industries retirement savings plan; and what is his estimate of the arrears under the insurance content concerning the Stadex retirement savings plan;

(4) for how long employee contributions were continuing to be deducted from the salary of members of the Stadex retirement savings plan and placed on deposit in a trustee bank account before members were contracted back into the state earnings-related pension scheme.

Miss Widdecombe: The information requested is not collected by the Department. The Stadex Industries Limited retirement savings plan is a contracted out, salary-related pension scheme first contracted out on 1 June 1988. The Occupational Pensions Board, an independent statutory body, is currently considering the position of the scheme and its ability to meet its guaranteed minimum pension commitment.

Mortgage Payments

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proportion of households receiving income support have no record of being in arrears in their mortgage interest payments to banks or building societies; what consideration he has given to concerns that the introduction of automatic direct payments would remove from them a responsibility that they have hitherto discharged reliably and could be perceived as a slur on their willingness to pay; and if he will make it possible for people in such circumstances to continue to make their own mortgage interest payments.

Mr. Burt: Information on mortgagees receiving income support who are, or have ever been, in arrears with mortgage payments is not collected.

The new direct payment scheme is part of a package of measures agreed with mortgage lenders, aimed at reducing the number of repossessions. The previous selective scheme did not readily identify all arrears cases and therefore did not provide an adequate reassurance against the risk of repossession for claimants and their families. The new scheme does not suffer from this defect and ensures that benefit provided specifically for mortgage interest payments reaches the lender. There is no question of any such slur on any benefit recipients, the majority of whom discharged their liability towards mortgage lenders faithfully.

We have no plans to revise the new scheme.

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the estimated total additional administrative costs associated with introducing automatic direct payments to mortgage lenders of income support in respect of mortgage interest in 1992-93; and what contribution to these additional administrative costs have been made, or are likely to be made by mortgage lenders in 1992-93.

Mr. Burt: The scheme will result in extra administrative costs of about £15 million for each year beginning 1992-93. In addition there were start-up costs of about £2·5 million. Mortgage lenders are expected to contribute £10 million towards these costs.

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what arrangements are being made to meet the administrative costs of automatic direct payments to mortgage lenders of income support in respect of mortgage interest in 1993-94; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: A review of the fees payable by qualifying lenders will take place later this year in consultation with appropriate lender organisations.

Young People

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated cost of implementing each of the recommendations in the eighth report of the Social Security Advisory Committee regarding young people's benefit entitlements.

Mr. Burt: On the recommendation regarding removing the general exclusion of 16 and 17-year-olds from benefit, information about the cost of restoring entitlement to income support is not available.

On the recommendation that young people under 25 living away from home should be paid the full rate of income support, the information is in the table.

Benefit	Cost (£ million)
Income support	80
Community charge benefit	5
Housing benefit	25
Total	110

Source: Modelled at 1992-93 prices and benefit levels using data drawn from the 1987-88-89 Family Expenditure Surveys. People living away from home have been defined as those who are classified in the Family Expenditure Survey as (a) heads of household or (b) not related to the head of household.

Overpayment

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the amount of money which the Government have recovered from overpayments of social security benefits not involving fraud under section 20 of the Supplementary Benefits Act 1976, and as amended by section 53 of the Social Security Act 1986, in each of the years since 1 April 1979, the maximum amount in any individual case claimed in each year, the average amount claimed, and the proportion that the total represents of all claims for overpayment.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not available.

Social Fund

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number and percentage of total applications which were refused for (a) community care grants, (b) budgeting loans and (c) crisis loans for each of the years of the social fund's operation; and if he will provide a breakdown by (i) region and (ii) local DSS office.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 17 June 1992]: Information for 1988-89 and 1989-90 in respect of local offices is not available. Regional summaries for those years and for 1990-91 are in the tables.

The 1990-91 information for DSS local offices and 1991-92 information for Benefits Agency districts is in the tables.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 25 June, Official Report, columns 311-13, whether he will give figures calculated on the same basis as tables 2 and 7 of the departmental survey "An Analysis of Voluntarily Unemployed Claimants" published in 1989, showing the proportion of unemployment benefit claims disqualified in each quarter from 1989 to 1991 and the proportion of disqualified claimants receiving income support from May 1980 to November 1991, with an explanation of the difference between these figures and those given in his answer of 25 June.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the tables. The figures in table 2 of "An Analysis of Voluntary Unemployed Claimants" were limited to disqualifications under section 20 of the Social Security Act 1975, whereas the figure given in table 1 of the answer of 25 June included some disallowances on other grounds. Table 2 of the answer of 25 June differs from table 7 of "An Analysis of Voluntary Unemployed Claimants" in that table 2 contains numbers for all disqualifications and, as footnote 1 explains, some disallowances. Table 7 was based upon the "Half-yearly Analysis of Unemployed Claimants" which is limited to disqualifications on the grounds of misconduct and leaving voluntarily without just cause.

HEALTH

Leeds General Infirmary

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will review the need for the proposed redevelopment of Leeds general infirmary; and if she will make a statement on (a) the cost implications and (b) the effect on the various hospital trusts in surrounding districts.

Mr. Sackville: I announced on 7 July that the Government have given approval in principle to the proposed redevelopment of the general infirmary at Leeds. In reaching this decision, careful consideration was given to the affordability of the likely capital and revenue costs and consistency with purchasers' strategies for the future health services for Leeds.

Mr. Mudie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how it is intended to fund the capital cost of the Leeds general infirmary redevelopment; what are the expected capital costs and if she will break these down by financial year; and if she will give the details and timings of capital receipts which will be allocated to fund this development.

Mr. Sackville: The scheme will be funded through the United Leeds Teaching Hospitals NHS trust's external financing limit. The outturn capital cost is estimated around £88 million. Capital expenditure is likely to be of the order of £15 million per year for five years.

Hip Replacement Operations

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the waiting list for hip replacement operations in the North East Thames region and each of its component district health authority areas for (a) up to six months, (b) six months to one year, (c) one year to 18 months, (d) 18 months to two years and (e) more than two years on 1 April 1987, 1988, 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992 and the latest figures available.

Mr. Sackville: Waiting time information is collected centrally by specialty not by procedure. Waiting times for trauma and orthopaedics, which includes hip replacements, are published in the six-monthly publication "Hospital In-patient Waiting Lists", copies of which are available in the Library.

Fostering

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases she is aware of where children from ethnic minorities in care have been removed from white foster parents during the last 12 months; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not collected centrally.

Metabolic Disease

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much funding is currently allocated to each health region in England towards the provision of services for the detection of inherited metabolic disease; and if she will make it her policy to ensure adequate funding is granted to existing schemes for a two-year period to allow successor arrangements to be fully evaluated.

Mr. Sackville: Services for the detection of inherited metabolic disease are funded out of general allocations to regional health authorities. Such allocations are made on the basis of the size, age and relative health of their resident populations. In turn regional health authorities fund their districts broadly on the same basis. District health authorities are responsible for purchasing health services for their populations including national health service genetic services which are provided by regional genetic centres, the supraregional assay service and in certain NHS trusts and directly managed units.

Solvent Abuse

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans her Department has to monitor the incidence of solvent and volatile substance misuse;

(2) what are the Government's targets for the reductions of mortalities and incidence of solvent and volatile substance misuse; and how her Department intends to achieve them.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs is currently looking at the whole area of solvent and volatile substance misuse. We will consider in the light of its recommendations, what further steps need to be taken with the aim of reducing the incidence of and mortalities from solvent misuse. We hope that increased parental awareness of the problem following the Government's recent publicity campaign will help to play a part in reducing incidence.

Green Minister

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will outline the priorities for future action of the green Minister in her Department (a) over the next year and (b) over this Parliament; and if she will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Over the coming year, I shall continue to follow-up the commitments expressed in the White Paper Cm 1200 ('This Common Inheritance') and its successor Cm 1655 ('The First Year Report'); a second anniversary White Paper will be published in the autumn. My Department is developing an environmental housekeeping strategy for the management of its accommodation and purchasing and this will be in place by the end of the year. I shall continue to ensure that the policy and work of my Department reflect environmental concerns and their potential impact on the public health.

Census

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when all the population information of the 1991 census in Wales will be published.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Tipping) on 18 June at column 672. County monitors for Powys, West Glamorgan and Gwent have been published. The timetable for publication for the remaining Welsh counties will be included in the next "Census Newsletter", issue 22, a copy of which will be placed in the Library.

Asthma

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the mortality rates for asthma for each of the last 20 years (a) among the whole population and (b) among under 16-year-olds; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is shown in the table.

Note. Population figures for 1991 not yet available, therefore rates for 1991 have been calculated using 1990 population. Deaths for 1986 onwards exclude neonatal deaths, (aged under 28 days). Populations are in thousands. Death rates are per million populations.
The standard mortality rate shows the number of deaths registered each year as a percentage of those which would have occurred had the age/sex mortality conformed to the year (1972) being taken as the standard. Expected deaths are calculated by sex/age mortality rates for the standard to the sex/age population for the year for which the SMR is being worked.
SMRs have only been calculated for all ages as SMRs require calculations based on the summation of age specific data. Please note that figures are not readily available for under 16 year olds.
In 1979 there was a change in the rules of assignment and therefore data before and after this date are not necessarily comparable.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the criteria by which a medical condition carries exemption from prescription charges for all sufferers, regardless of age.

Dr. Mawhinney: Exemption from prescription charges on medical grounds alone is granted for specified readily identifiable chronic illnesses calling for lifelong medication.

Abortion

Mr. Michael Allison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total number of abortions performed in the Yorkshire regional health authority under the Abortion Act 1967 since its implementation; and how many and what proportion of these abortions were performed in an emergency to save the mother's life.

Mr. Sackville: Yorkshire regional health authority (RHA) was constituted on 1 April 1974 and data on this basis are calculated from 1 January 1975 to 30 September 1991 (the latest date for which figures are available). During this period a total of 139,602 abortions have been performed under the Abortion Act 1967 in the Yorkshire RHA. Of these, two (0·001 per cent.) were performed in an emergency "to save the life of the pregnant woman" (ground 5).

NHS Trusts

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money has been spent on producing and printing trust application forms in each health authority region.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Child Care

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Lord President of the Council what information he holds on the provision of day nurseries and other child care facilities and assistance in the legislative assemblies of European Community member states; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: This information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

CATERING COMMITTEE

Animal Welfare

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee, if the Committee will make it its policy to recommend that the Refreshment Department take animal welfare into account in its food purchasing policy.

Mr. Richard Shepherd: It is understood that the Director of Catering Services, who has formal responsibility for these matters, already takes account of animal welfare in respect of their rearing, capture and slaughter when putting into practice the Department's food-purchasing policy. I shall, nevertheless, arrange for this issue to be considered by the Catering Committee in order that it may be discussed and, if necessary, further guidance given.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Dietary Supplements

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Hain) of 2 June, Official Report, column 430, what position the Government have adopted on the Commission's consultation paper on dietary supplement as in respect of the suggestion that vitamin supplements should only be available on prescription; and when he expects the European Community scientific committee on food to complete its consideration.

Mr. Soames: The Commission consultation paper on dietary supplements contains no suggestion that vitamin supplements should be available only on prescription. The Government's general position is that consumers should be able to choose for themselves whether to buy dietary supplements that are safe. The Commission expects the EC scientific committee for food to reach conclusions about acceptable upper levels for vitamins and minerals in the autumn.

Intervention Stores

Mr. Michael: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the commodities held by the European Commission in intervention, the quantity of each in store on the latest date for which information is available, and the percentage of each that is committed to use for emergency food aid.

Mr. Curry: Tables listing the commodities held by the European Community in intervention, and the most recent levels of each such commodity held in store, are deposited in the Library of the House each month.

Information on the percentage of each that is committed to use for emergency food aid cannot be provided within the time available, but I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as the information requested is available from the European Commission.

Agricultural Development Advisory Service

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library the written statement of the health and safety at work of those employed by Agricultural Development Advisory Service, as required by the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974.

Mr. Gummer: The written statement of the health and safety at work of those employed by MAFF, including ADAS, as required by the Health and Safety at Work, etc. Act 1974, is contained in section F8 of the MAFF staff manual handbook. I am arranging for copies of the relevant sections to be placed in the Library of the House.

Vitamins

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what figure he has for the value of (a) multi-vitamin preparations and (b) single vitamins sold over the counter in Britain each year.

Mr. Soames: The value of multi-vitamins and single vitamins sold in 1991, estimated, at retail selling price, was £60 million and £25 million respectively, according to the market research magazine, "Market Intelligence", June 1991.

Long Mynd

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publicise the results of his Department's study into moorland grazing pressure on the Long Mynd, Shropshire, "An Assessment of Heather Utilisation by Sheep on the Long Mynd, 1990"; and if he will make a statement on its findings.

Mr. Curry: This report was produced to aid discussions between the Department, English Nature and the National Trust—as landlords—on the measures to be taken for the conservation of the Long Mynd. All three parties have now received copies of the report which will be of particular value in formulating the proposals for the Shropshire hills environmentally sensitive area on which I shall be seeking views in 1993.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Agency

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list for the last 12 months, the fact-finding visits the chief executive of the Employment Agency has made; what were his findings; if she will place a copy of his findings in the Library; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what criteria will be used to establish which agencies can provide rehabilitation of a suitable quality for people with disabilities after April 1993; and if she will make a statement;

(2) how funding will be allocated to placing, assessment and counselling teams to enable them to purchase such assessment and rehabilitation services as are needed by people with severe disabilities requiring specialist provision;

(3) what steps she is taking to establish quality standards for providers of rehabilitation training to people with severe visual impairments; and what consultation she is having for this purpose;

(4) what was the average total cost per week for each client attending an employment rehabilitation course at a Government-run employment rehabilitation centre in (a) 1990-91 and (b) 1991-92.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred these questions for reply.

Green Minister

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will outline the priorities for future action of the green Minister in her Department (a) over the next year and (b) over this Parliament; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Over the next 12 months we shall continue to follow up commitments in the White Paper Cm 12000 "This Common Inheritance" and its successor Cm 1655 "The First Year Report". We shall also be contributing to a second anniversary White Paper in the autumn.

The Health and Safety Executive has already developed an environmental housekeeping strategy for the management of its accommodation and purchasing. The Employment Department and the Employment Service will have their strategies in place by the end of 1992.

Over the next year and beyond, we shall continue to monitor the impact of the Department's policies and activities on the environment; and to ensure that environmental concerns shape our policies and work wherever possible.

Rehabilitation

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will publish the list of external organisations providing counselling and rehabilitation services under contract to her Department with an indication of the amount of work carried out by each organisation.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Training

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if she will publish details, for the nine standard economic regions, of the total numbers of entrants, excluding community programme transfers, to employment training by sex, ethnic origin and disability, for each year since the start of the scheme;

(2) if she will publish the 100 per cent. youth training scheme leavers survey for each training and enterprise council in the north-west, showing the destinations of trainees by ethnic origin, sex and disability and by scheme type, for each year since the start of the scheme;

(3) if she will publish details for each training and enterprise council in the north-west region of the destinations of employment training trainees, by ethnic origin, sex and disability, for each year since the start of the scheme;

(4) if she will publish details of the numbers and percentages of youth training trainees in the north-west who have employed or trainee status, and the breakdown by sex, ethnic origin and disability, for each year in the period 1990-92 inclusive.

Mr. McLoughlin: As the information requested is contained within a number of tables I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what advice is given to young people for whom suitable youth training places are not available.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Careers Service gives vocational advice and guidance to young people. In addition to the training route, the service encourages young people to explore all the other options and their suitability for them; for example, further education and employment, to enable them to make informed careers decisions. For those young people they identify as having potential eligibility for benefits or allowances, general advice is given such as how and where to make a claim.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment she has made of whether there are enough suitable youth training places available in all parts of the United Kingdom.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department's contracts with TECs call for regular monitoring and review at local level of the numbers of young people covered by the YT guarantee who are seeking a place. This local monitoring is carried out by our officials, training and enterprise councils and other interested parties such as the Careers Service. Following discussion with representatives of TECs and the Careers Service we are putting into place new measures to establish a national system of monitoring in England. We believe that these arrangements safeguard the interests of young people seeking training.

Matters in the rest of the United Kingdom are for my right hon. Friends, the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list those areas in which the youth training guarantee is being delivered in full.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information on the extent of demand for YT from young people covered by the YT guarantee is available only in the form of estimates which are not sufficiently reliable for publication. The Government remain fully committed to ensuring that the YT guarantee will be met everywhere.

Wages Councils

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will estimate the number of workers covered by the wages councils in (a) Wales, (b) south Wales and the south-west and (c) north Wales and the north-west; and if she will sub-divide the figures for full-time, part-time and male and female workers.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information as requested is not readily available and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Wages Councils

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for each existing wages council (a) what is the current minimum rate of pay, (b) how many employees are covered, (c) what is the administrative cost, (d) how many establishments are covered, (e) how many inspectors are employed, (f) how many inspections have taken place and in each of the last five years, (g) how many establishments have been contacted other than by visit, (h) how many establishments have been found to be paying less than the minimum and (i) how many prosecutions have taken place.

Mr. McLoughlin: There is no record kept of the administrative cost for each individual wages council and wages inspectors are not employed for individual wages councils. Other information requested is set out in the following tables:

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 29 June, Official Report, columns 418-26, when she expects to be in a position to give the corresponding information for 1992-93.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 3 July 1992]: For the present, the 1992-93 information remains subject to commercial confidentiality. The information will be made available in due course.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 29 June, Official Report, columns 418-26, if she will indicate for which training and enterprise councils in England the 1992-93 information is available; and if she will now publish it for each of the relevant training and enterprise councils.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 6 July 1992]: For the present, the 1992-93 information remains subject to commercial confidentiality. The information will be made available in due course.

ENVIRONMENT

Toxic Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for South Down (Mr. McGrady) on 9 June, Official Report, column 146, he will set out the procedures by which the Government will judge whether developing countries are unable to deal safely with toxic wastes prior to giving permission for their import into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Maclean: Under the current draft of the waste shipments regulation, developing countries would have to present a duly motivated request on the basis that they did not have and could not acquire the technical capacity and the necessary facilities in order to dispose of the waste in an environmentally sound manner.

Countryside Employment Practice

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in which areas the pilot scheme for the countryside employment programme will take place.

Mr. Maclean: The countryside employment programme is being piloted in three areas. These are: Lincolnshire (east and west Lindsey districts), the Marches (south Herefordshire, Leominster and south Shropshire districts) and the Cotswold (Cotswold and west Oxfordshire districts).

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total amount of money paid out in management agreements relating to sites of special scientific interest in 1991; how many individual agreements are currently in force in England, Scotland and Wales; what is the average payment per agreement, and what are the top 10 highest individual payments.

Mr. Maclean: Management agreements within Wales and Scotland are a matter for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Scotland.

I am advised by English Nature that the amount they paid for management agreements under section 15 of the Countryside Act 1968 relating SSSIs in 1991-92 was £5,735,359; those still active at 31 March 1992 total 1,584 (including some awaiting renewal). The average payment is £875 lump sum plus an ongoing annual payment of £2,176.

Details of management agreement payments are confidential to the parties concerned. The 10 highest individual payments are as follows:

£322,983
£109,600
£108,000
£ 79,000
£ 69,134
£ 49,500
£ 48,194

Nature Reserves

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much his Department has paid in grants in total to United Kingdom conservation bodies to assist them to buy land for nature reserves in each year between 1989 and the present time; how many applications for grant aid were (a) received in 1991 and (b) accepted; and if he will give details of each grant over £10,000.

Mr. Maclean: The following is the information:

Land purchase grants

[1] England only.

English Nature received 42 land purchase grant applications in 1991-92, of these 19 were given grants towards the purchase of land.

Nuclear Contamination

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent decisions have been taken by the European Commission to support research into nuclear contamination in Russia, Belarus and the Ukraine.

Mr. Maclean: I am informed that the Commission of the European Communities entered on 23 June 1992 into an agreement at non-governmental level with institutions in the three republics of the Commonwealth of independent States most closely concerned with the accident six years ago at the Chernobyl nuclear plant: Russia, Byelorussia and Ukraine. The agreement is for collaboration in studying the nature of the radioactive contamination arising from the Chernobyl accident, to broaden the technical skills needed to control such accidents, and to improve emergency management procedures. The collaboration will be between institutes in European Community member states and in Russia, Byelorussia and Ukraine.

Desalination

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to investigate desalination in the United Kingdom on (a) a large scale or (b) a small scale.

Mr. Maclean: None. The recent discussion paper by the National Rivers Authority, which has a statutory responsibility for water resources, suggests that desalination is unlikely to offer a cost-effective general means of increasing United Kingdom water supplies. In specific limited circumstances water suppliers may find it worth pursuing: I understand that the Council of the Isles of Scilly has recently commissioned a desalination plant.

Landowners (Compensation)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how much in total was paid out in compensation to landowners under the provisions of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, in 1991; how many individual payments were made; and if he will give details of individual payments over £10,000;

(2) how much compensation to landowners under the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 has been paid in the current year; what is the number of applications still waiting a decision and their location; and what is the amount being asked for in compensation by the landowners concerned.

Mr. Maclean: No payments were made in 1991 by English Nature under the provisions of section 30 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Emissions

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, for each of the EC nations, the targets they have adopted for stabilising or reducing (a) carbon dioxide, (b) sulphur dioxide, (c) nitrogen oxide and (d) hydrocarbons/volatile organic compounds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: A number of EC countries have declared targets on different bases and at different times for carbon dioxide emissions. All EC member states have now signed the United Nations framework convention on climate change. This will commit all developed country parties to take measures aimed at returning emissions of each greenhouse gas, including carbon dioxide, to their 1990 levels by 2000.

The EC Large Combustion Plant Directive (88/609) requires member states to make specified reductions in their annual emissions of sulphur dioxide and oxides of nitrogen from existing plant. The targets vary country by country, but range from 29 per cent. to 70 per cent. reductions in sulphur dioxide emissions by 2003, and from 0 per cent. to 40 per cent. reductions in nitrogen oxides emissions by 1988—in all cases over 1980 emissions. The targets are listed in annex I to the directive, available in the Library of the House.

All EC member states are parties to the convention on long-range transboundary air pollution within the United Nations Economic Commission for Europe. Seven of the 12—Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Italy, Luxembourg and the Netherlands—are all parties to the sulphur protocol to the convention, which requires a reduction of at least 30 per cent. in national annual emissions of sulphur by 1993, from 1980 levels. All member states except Portugal have signed the nitrogen oxides protocol to the convention, which requires national annual emissions to be stabilised at 1987 levels by 1994. All member states except Ireland have also signed the latest protocol to the convention, requiring national emissions of volatile organic compounds, including hydrocarbons, to be reduced by at least 30 per cent. by 1999, in most cases from 1988 levels.

In 1984 the United Kingdom Government adopted the aim of reducing annual sulphur dioxide emissions from all existing sources by 30 per cent. on 1980 levels by the year 2000. We are on target to meet this objective, and more. In 1984 we also set ourselves the ambitious aim of achieving a 30 per cent. reduction from 1980 levels of nitrogen oxides emissions by the end of the 1990s. This has been made even more difficult by the recent growth in road traffic, but it remains an aim for which we strive.

Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library details of the recipients of any management or compensation payment under the terms of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Mr. Maclean: No, this information is confidential to the parties concerned.

Home Insulation

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the proportion of the existing United Kingdom stock of dwellings that lack (a) draught stripping to doors and windows, (b) insulation to hot water cylinder, (c) roof insulation, (d) cavity wall or solid wall insulation, (e) floor insulation and (f) double glazing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: Latest estimates for Great Britain are as follows:

Proportion of households lacking	Per cent.
(a) Draught stripping to doors and windows (includes only those households without double glazing)	35·0
(b) Insulation to hot water cylinder	6·0
(c) Roof insulation	11·0
(d) Cavity wall or solid wall insulation	75·0
(e) Floor insulation	n/a
(f) Double glazing	54·0

Recycled Materials

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for the last available year, the amount of (a) paper and cardboard, (b) ferrous metals, (c) glass and (d) non-ferrous metals, including aluminium recovered as a percentage of consumption in (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) each of the other EC nations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: In 1990 the use of recycled materials as a percentage of consumption in the United Kingdom was as follows:

	Percentage
Glass	21
Paper and board	31
Aluminium[1]	12
Copper	47
Lead[2]	62
Tin[3]	57
Zinc	22
Ferrous metal	46

[1] Excludes aluminium scrap which moves directly from the aluminium metal industry to other industries.
[2] Relates to the actual quantity recovered, not the recycled scrap used in manufacture.
[3] Includes in-house recycling of waste but excludes exports.

Comparable figures for other EC countries are not readily available.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy for the eco-labelling scheme to require a minimum requirement of recycled material content.

Mr. Maclean: Criteria for the award of a European eco-label will be decided by the EC Regulatory Committee, which comprises representatives of the Commission and member states, after consultation with interested groups. The proposal for criteria put to the committee will be based on a full cradle to grave analysis of all the environmental impacts of the product group and will, where appropriate, take account of the potential for requiring a proportion of recycled material.

Eco-Labels

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made on a system of bands of fees on the basis of the applicants revenues in order to encourage small companies to apply for the eco-label.

Mr. Maclean: The European Commission is drawing up proposals for indicative fee guidelines as they are required to do by the EC regulation. The draft proposals envisage an application fee, to meet the costs of processing the application, and an annual licence fee for the use of the label which would be related to the annual value of sales in the Community of the product awarded the eco-label.

Consumer Services (Environmental Impact)

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what environmental evaluation is being undertaken of consumer services with high environmental impact, with particular reference to dry cleaning.

Mr. Maclean: My Department is not aware of any environmental evaluation which is being undertaken of consumer services.

In the early stages of development the focus of the European eco-labelling scheme will be on consumer products. Consumer services, such as dry cleaning, may well be covered later once the scheme is established.

Grants, London

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps have been taken to assist projects whose grants from the London boroughs grants unit have been stopped; and whether he will consider extending Government financial support to the library at the Institute for Race Relations.

Mr. Robin Squire: The award of grants under the London borough grant scheme is a matter for decision by the London boroughs, all of whom participate in the operation of the scheme. The Government have no plans to provide alternative funding where this has been refused under the London boroughs grant scheme.

Planning Decisions

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what obligations he imposes on those to whom he has delegated responsibility for planning decisions to hear oral evidence.

Mr. Baldry: The procedures to be followed by inspectors holding inquiries are set out in the Town and Country Planning Appeals (Determination by Inspectors) (Inquiries Procedure) Rules 1988. The rules give certain parties, such as the local planning authority, the appellant and the owner of the appeal site, a statutory right to appear at the inquiry. Any other persons wishing to appear, for example local residents, may do so at the inspector's discretion.

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals against planning decisions by the Worthing borough council have been allowed by him or the planning inspectorate in each of the last five years.

Mr. Baldry: The information requested is as follows:

Planning appeals decided: Worthing borough council

Year	Appeals decided	Appeals allowed	Percentage allowed Worthing	Percentage allowed England
1987-88	34	14	41·2	37·6
1988-89	56	20	35·7	36·7
1989-90	64	19	29·7	33·4
1990-91	75	22	29·3	33·6
1991-92	50	13	26·0	33·7

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what criteria he delegates decisions on planning appeals to the planning inspectorate.

Mr. Baldry: All planning appeals, except for a few exceptions, are transferred to planning inspectors for decision. However I do have the power to "recover" jurisdiction. Normally this power is only exercised in cases involving large scale development and where issues of more than local importance are likely to be raised. The criteria for recovery are published in the 1986 White Paper "Planning: Appeals, Call-In and Major Public Inquiries" (Cm 43).

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why the planning inspector dealing with the appeal against the granting of planning permission for the Homebase store on land at Littlehampton and Yeomans road, Worthing, failed to take oral evidence from those opposed to the last-minute change of plans put forward by the applicants.

Mr. Baldry: The question of an alternative layout for the proposed development arose towards the end of the four-day public inquiry. As a result it was not possible for the inspector to hear further evidence from all those who had already appeared at the inquiry without an adjournment. This would have prolonged the time before the appeal was determined. However, to ensure that local objectors views about the alternative layout were taken into account, the inspector arranged for them to be given an opportunity to make written representations to him before he made his decision.

Travellers

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects that the consultation paper being compiled by his Department, concerning the problems caused by hippies and new age travellers, will be issued.

Mr. Baldry: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my right hon. Friend the Member for Woking (Mr. Onslow) on 19 June 1992 at column 693.

Research Animals

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to use the United Kingdom presidency of the EC to press for an end to the import of wild-caught and captive-bred primates throughout the EC for research purposes.

Mr. Maclean: The import of primates into the EC is already controlled under existing regulations governing the wildlife trade. These are conservation measures, intended primarily to ensure that wild populations are not seriously depleted. They are not concerned with the purposes of import, except for endangered species. During our presidency, we shall be giving priority to the negotiation of a new European Community regulation to tighten these controls significantly, but we have no plans to see a general ban on the import of animals for use in research, which is primarily a matter for my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next intends to meet representatives of the Governments of the Philippines and Indonesia to urge them to end their trade in primates for research.

Mr. Maclean: I have no plans to do so. The Government of Indonesia are already well aware of concern in the European Community about the effects of wildlife exports. This has led to a suspension of imports of Indonesian specimens of many species, including primates, into the EC. We are prepared to take similar action on conservation grounds whenever trade is judged likely to pose a threat to species. The use of primates in research is, however, primarily a matter for my right hon. Friend, the Home Secretary.

New Housing

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he proposes to determine the provision for new housing to be made in new regional planning guidance for London and the south-east.

Mr. Howard: I have today placed in the Library of the House a copy of a letter which I have sent to the chairman of SERPLAN—the London and south east regional planning conference. SERPLAN is invited to put forward proposals for the allocation of future provision for new housing between London and the counties of the south east. These proposals should be based on a regional total rate of 57,000 additional dwellings per year, over the period 1991 to 2011. I will take account of SERPLAN's proposals, together with any other views on these matters which are put to my Department, in deciding the regional housing provision to be included in draft new regional planning guidance for the south east. The draft will then be published for consultation in due course.

Coastal Zones

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Government will publish their response to the Environment Select Committee's second report of Session 1991-92, on coastal zone protection and planning; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The Government are today publishing their response to the Environment Select Committee's report on coastal zone protection and planning. We welcome the Committee's report as a valuable contribution to the debate on the effective management of our coast.

This country has a record of success in protecting the coast. Two thirds of the coastline of England and Wales is undeveloped arable land, woodland, scrub, pasture or natural habitat. The planning system provides a tried mechanism for the effective resolution of conflict on land which faces pressures from a variety of uses.

It is important that we build on these achievements, to tackle the new issues that are emerging on our coast and to ensure an effective response to the challenges of the next century including pressures of economic growth and increased recreation, the impact of global warming, and demands to respond to our growing knowledge and awareness of the value of the coastal environment.

We already have a substantial programme of work underway to achieve this including:

—planning guidance for the coast and a recent policy statement on Heritage coasts; —guidance on responding to sea level rise, and a commitment to develop a national flood and coastal defence strategy;

—requirements for environmental assessment of a wide range of coastal developments on land and at sea, and new procedures (under the Transport and Works Act 1992) to control many types of development in inshore waters;

—action to reduce coastal pollutants and develop Statutory Water Quality objectives for estuarine and coastal waters;

—a commitment to implement the EC Habitats Directive for marine as well as land-based habitats.

Our response to the Committee's report now proposes:

—support for multi-agency management plans for estuaries and inshore waters, aimed particularly at coastal recreation activities, and at nature conservation, and a review of local authority powers to control water sports and pleasure boats in inshore waters.

—a review of the effectiveness of present regulatory systems controlling construction and development below the low water mark;

The Government will bring forward a discussion paper examining both these issues more fully.

The Government response also includes commitments to maintaining national co-ordination arrangements for coastal policy; reviewing controls over marine aggregates dredging; promoting regional coastal defence strategies; furthering environmentally acceptable coastal defence solutions and developing policies for controlled retreat to create new habitats; and promoting clear agreement on responsibilities for pollution control.

Copies of the Government response are being laid before the House and will be available in the Library.

Social Housing

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing his Department's forecasts for all social housing completions, and the actual number of completions, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Baldry: The Department does not prepare forecasts of housebuilding completions. Estimates of actual new housebuilding completions by housing associations and by local authorities are published in "Housing and Construction Statistics". Figures for 1979 are in table 6.1 of the annual publication "Housing and Construction Statistics 1979-1989: Great Britain"; figures for each year from 1980 to 1990 are in the 1980-1990 edition. Provisional estimates for 1991 are shown in table 1.2 of the December quarter 1991 edition (Number 48) of the publication "Housing and Construction Statistics; Part 1". Copies of these publications are in the Library.

County Council Elections

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if it is his intention that the county council elections, in counties included in the first tranche of authorities for review by the Local Government Commission, will take place as scheduled in May 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Secretary of State may not use his powers under the Local Government Act 1992 to postpone elections or order fresh ones until the Commission has finished reviewing an area and he has decided on the changes to local government structure that he will recommend to Parliament. We therefore expect all county council elections to go ahead in May 1993.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current value of land held by each urban development corporation.

Mr. Robin Squire: The value at 31 March 1992 of land held by urban development corporations is set out in the table. Land held for roads and other public utilities has a nil disposal value.

Value of Land held by Urban Development Corporations

	£ million
Black Country	38·786
Bristol	11·492
Central Manchester	3·980
Leeds	12·284
London Docklands	54·392
Merseyside	26·846
Sheffield	15·340
Teesside	64·680
Trafford Park	22·293
Tyne and Wear	30·323

Jet Skis

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the dates on which his Department has received representations from Worthing borough council and the right hon. Member for Worthing regarding providing seaside councils with further byelaw powers to control the use of jet skis in designated areas of the sea; for what reasons he has decided not to take any action; and if he will now give these powers to local authorities.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have been asked to reply.

We received representations about the provision of additional byelaw-making powers to control jet skis from my right hon. Friend on behalf of Worthing borough council in February 1992. A reply was sent on 2 March 1992. This matter has now been considered further and I refer my right hon. Friend to the Government's response to the second report from the House of Commons Select Committee on the Environment on coastal zone protection and planning (CM 2011), which is published today. This states that the Government intend to issue a discussion paper which will include consideration of "the scope for improving local authority powers to control water sports and pleasure boats in inshore waters, making it easier to implement zoning in different activities which may be incompatible for safety, nature conservation or other reasons, and to control behaviour which causes a public or environmental nuisance" (paragraph 49).

Forests

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he intends to take during the United Kingdom presidency of the EC Council of Ministers to establish an international review process for the forest and desertification principles outlined at the Earth summit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have been asked to reply.

On forests I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 6 July at column 17. On desertification, we expect the UN General Assembly this autumn to establish an intergovernmental negotiating committee to elaborate an international convention on desertification. We will be co-ordinating the position of the EC during the General Assembly as part of our presidency responsibilities.

SCOTLAND

Approved Training Organisations

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the standards used to award the status of approved training organisations.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 3 July 1992]: There are seven functions for each of which aims must be met and a number of criteria satisfied for the award of approved training organisation status. These functions, which are common to both employment training and youth training, are set out:

identification of training needs;
training designed and delivered to national standards;
effective quality management;
recruitment, selection and competence of staff;
equal opportunities policy;
health, safety and suitability of premises and equipment;
financial viability.

The aims and criteria are detailed in a document entitled "Approved Training Organisation" published by the Training Agency, a copy of which is in the House Library.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many approved training organisations there have been in Scotland in each of the last three years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 3 July 1992]: As at 30 April 1990, 18 training agents and 157 training managers for employment training in Scotland had achieved approved training organisation stage 1. Corresponding information for youth training was not held centrally. In subsequent years, responsibility for monitoring the standards achieved by training providers has rested with local enterprise companies which maintain their own records on the training providers with which they contract.

Salmon

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether salmon imported into Britain from Ireland and Norway is subject to routine testing for ivermectin residues; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if testing for ivermectin residues in Scottish produced farmed salmon has been introduced on a routine basis; and what information he has on the residues detected.

Mr. Lang: Samples of farmed salmon will be obtained from retail outlets throughout the United Kingdom in 1992 under the retail animal products survey, as part of the Government's food surveillance programme. Samples will be as representative of the national food supply as possible, and some 10 per cent. of the salmon samples analysed will have been imported from Norway and the Republic of Ireland. These samples will be analysed for residues of ivermectin.

A 12-month programme of residue testing in farmed fish is also being conducted in the United Kingdom in response to a request for information from the EC Commission. This programme includes the analysis of 50 samples of farmed salmon, obtained either directly from fish farms or United Kingdom wholesalers, for ivermectin. These analyses have been completed and ivermectin was not detected in any samples.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what progress has been made in the case of the alleged use of ivermectin for the treatment of sea lice in farmed salmon by (a) Glencoe Salmon in June 1991 and (b) Wester Ross Salmon in January;

(2) how many cases of the use of ivermectin for the treatment of sea lice in farmed salmonids in Scotland have been reported.

Mr. Lang: A report on the alleged use of ivermectin at Glencoe Salmon Ltd. was made to the procurator fiscal at Fort William, who decided to take no criminal proceedings. A report concerning Wester Ross Salmon has been made to the procurator fiscal at Dornoch.

There is no requirement to report allegations about the use of ivermectin to my Department. Such reports should be made to the appropriate river purification authority or to the veterinary medicines directorate.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement concerning the decision to support continuing the minimum import price for Norwegian salmon after 30 May; what measures he plans to introduce to safeguard the future of the Scottish salmon farming industry; and if he will estimate the decrease in production since that decision came into effect.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 6 July 1992]: The minimum import price was introduced last November for a three-month period in response to a specific threat to the European Community market of a surge in supply arising from substantial quantities of frozen salmon stored in Norway. It was subsequently extended for a further three-month period until the end of May. In the light of Norwegian action to dispose of the frozen stocks, it was decided that yet a further extension of the minimum import price could not be justified.

The Government are considering proposals to help stabilise the salmon market in the longer term through the establishment of producer organisations. The production and growth cycle for salmon is such that production will not have changed since the end of May. Rates of harvesting are for individual commercial decision and will be based on many considerations.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made by the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department in developing analytical techniques for testing for residues of ivermectin in the flesh of farmed salmon.

Mr. Lang: An analytical method for detection of ivermectin residues in salmon muscle has been developed and validated at the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's Torry research station in Aberdeen.

Prisoners

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements are in place for the post-release supervision and support of discharged prisoners with mental illness; what further initiatives he plans to improve these services; what plans he has to ensure the proper co-ordination of service delivery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: Psychiatric and social work supervision may, where appropriate, be the subject of conditions in the licences on which life sentence prisoners and some determinate sentence prisoners are released. In addition, community-based psychiatric and social work services are available to all former prisoners as to any other person who requires such services.

"The National Objectives and Standards for Social Work Services in the Criminal Justice System", issued by the Scottish Office in February 1991, identified in paragraphs 108 and 109 the special needs of offenders who are mentally handicapped or disturbed and stressed that it is a vital part of the prison-based social work task to encourage and assist such prisoners to make contact with the relevant helping agencies prior to release. In such situations, the role of the community-based social worker is to facilitate the provision of necessary rehabilitation programmes or accommodation.

Disabled People

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his proposals to promote the development of arts for disabled people in Scotland.

Sir Hector Monro: My right hon. Friend's responsibilities for the arts exclude the live and performing arts which are the responsibility of the Secretary of State for National Heritage. In relation to museums and galleries, it is for the management of each organisation to consider how its buildings and its collections can be made accessible to disabled people. Such consideration is encouraged by the Scottish Museums Council whose grants to local museums are dependent to a large extent on the provision for disabled people made or planned by the applicants.

The Scottish Film Council has already successfully encouraged the seven regional film theatres which it part-funds to improve access for people with disabilities and is considering how access can be further enhanced.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what new initiatives he proposes to enhance the right of disabled people to have free and adequate access to (a) health services, (b) life-long education, (c) suitably adapted housing, (d) transport, (e) training and employment, (f) arts, leisure, recreation and cultural services and (g) care in the community.

Mr. Stewart: The Government's policy is to enable people with disabilities to live as independently as possible, in their own homes and in the community, and to be as mobile as possible, so that they can enjoy to the fullest extent all opportunities in education, employment, leisure and recreation. The following initiatives are currently in prospect:

(i) Amendments are being prepared to the Buildings Standards (Scotland) Regulations 1990 to extend the current requirement of access for disabled people to ground floors, to upper floors of all buildings except dwellings and warehouses.

(ii) Electrically powered wheelchairs, which can be used both indoors and outdoors, will begin to be issued in the autumn to disabled people for whom they are appropriate.

(iii) From 1 April 1993 the duty to secure adequate and efficient further education will transfer from education authorities to the Secretary of State. In exercising that duty he will have regard to the position of people over school age with learning difficulties. Boards of management of further education colleges will be given guidance on the exercise of their responsibilities for students with learning difficulties. Regard will also be had to this in funding the colleges.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which disability organisations he has met in the past 12 months to discuss the provision of services to disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has not met any of the disability organisations formally in the past year, but he did open the Margaret Blackwood housing association development at Uddingston which provides 38 houses and flats, mainly for disabled people. On 20 September, I had the pleasure of opening the Scottish mobility roadshow 1991, which was organised by Disability Scotland. It was the first of its kind in Scotland and the Government contributed £20,000 to its costs.

Scottish Office officials are in regular contact with many of the organisations representing people with disabilities.

Co-operatives

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to encourage the development of industrial and commercial co-operatives in (a) Scotland, (b) Strathclyde and (c) Renfrew district; what assistance he will make available for such initiatives; what criteria he will use to assess applications for assistance; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: About £200,000 is paid currently from the urban programme to five workers' co-operative development projects in deprived urban areas in Scotland. Four of these are located in Strathclyde, including the Renfrew district co-operative development project with annual running costs of £42,300. Under the new urban programme guidelines issued in February, applications for funding other such projects can still be made.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the Scottish Co-operative Development Company to discuss the promotion and development of workers' co-operatives in industry, commerce and public services; when he next plans to meet them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has not met representatives of the Scottish Co-operatives Development Company, but I have agreed to meet them on a mutually convenient date. The company already has close contact with officials in my Department.

Industry

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the impact that the recession has had on industry in Scotland during the past 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The table shows the index of production and construction—less oil and gas—for Scotland, by quarter, from the first quarter of 1990 to the fourth quarter of 1991. The table also shows, separately, the indices for production industries—standard industrial classification divisions 1 to 4—manufacturing—standard industrial classification divisions 2 to 4—and construction—standard industrial classification division 5.

Source: Scottish Office Industry Department.

The 1991Q4 figure is the latest available for Scotland; the 1992Q1 figure will be published on 12 August.

The best sources of more up-to-date information on Scottish industry are the business surveys. The April 1992 CBI industrial trends survey reported that, in manufacturing, output had continued to fall in the first four months of 1992, but that the rate of decline had been slower than at any time since the end of 1990. Business confidence had improved marginally over the previous four months. The CBI survey also found that export order books had strengthened considerably since the previous survey in January and that investment in innovation and training was expected to increase over the coming year.

Electricity

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if Scottish Power will be required to submit a full environmental impact assessment statement in support of its plans to create an interconnection of the Scottish and Irish electricity grids.

Mr. Stewart: Yes. Scottish Power is required to submit an environmental assessment for any proposals it may have to erect high-voltage overhead lines.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has had from conservation and environmental groups in regard to the announcement by Scottish Power of its plans to build an interconnector cable between the Scottish grid in Ayrshire and the Northern Ireland electricity grid in County Antrim; and if he has had any recent discussions with Scottish Power over the need to construct additional overground pylons to service the interconnector.

Mr. Stewart: No application has yet been made to the Secretary of State by Scottish Power in respect of an overhead power line as part of its plans for a link with Northern Ireland. Several representations expressing concern about these plans have been received from a number of groups and individuals. Some preliminary discussions have taken place between Scottish Power and Historic Scotland.

Johnstone West Sports Pavilion

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total estimated capital cost of the development formerly known as the Johnstone west sports pavilion; what was the amount financed by (a) urban funding and (b) local authority funding; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The total estimated capital cost is £396,117. The full cost will be met by the urban programme, involving contributions of 75 per cent. and 25 per cent. from the Scottish Office and Renfrew district council, respectively.

Further Education

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress of the new arrangements for the management of further education colleges; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Good progress is being made in preparing the colleges for incorporation on 1 April 1993. Colleges are responding positively and constructively to this process and we have allocated £2·3 million to assist them. An order was recently made listing the colleges to transfer and setting 1 September 1992 as the beginning of the transitional period. A recurrent funding discussion paper issued in June and a strategy for college management information systems is at an advanced stage. In addition, a wide range of activities, including a seminar programme and the preparation of training materials, is underway.

Housing

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will visit the Paisley, South constituency to evaluate the need for investment in public sector housing; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has no plans to visit Paisley, South. Renfrew district council's relative housing needs and its plans for tackling these needs were taken fully into account when making decisions about final housing capital allocations for 1992-93. Renfrew's gross final housing revenue account capital allocation for investment in its own housing stock in 1992-93 totals £18·439 million. It is for the council to decide how best to deploy these considerable resources to meet local housing needs. The council should include its plans for future housing investment in its housing capital programme when this is submitted to the Scottish Office Environment Department later this year.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will extend the consultation period on compulsory competitive tendering for housing management in Scotland until the end of the year; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 July 1992]: We have allowed over three months for the receipt of responses to the consultation paper on compulsory competitive tendering for housing management. I consider this to be a reasonable period in which interested parties can respond, although if particular bodies face difficulty in responding by the 18 September deadline they should contact the Scottish Office Environment Department at the address given in the consultation paper to discuss whether a short extension can be granted. Our proposals on CCT for housing management form an integral part of the programme of action set out in the tenants charter for Scotland, designed to improve the quality and efficiency of the housing service available to council tenants.

Deer

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has in relation to his consultation paper on deer legislation in Scotland dated December 1991; and what plans he has to deal with responses to this paper.

Mr. Lang: There were some 80 responses to the consultation on deer legislation in Scotland. These are now receiving careful consideration and follow-up meetings have been held, at official level, with a number of respondents. I shall reach a view on how best to take matters forward once I have completed a full assessment of the many wide-ranging views expressed.

Paisley Pattern Goods

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will commission a feasibility study into the commercial viability of manufacturing paisley pattern goods in the town of Paisley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: My right hon. Friend has no plans to commission a feasibility study into the commercial viability of manufacturing paisley pattern goods in Paisley.

Following earlier representations by the hon. Member on the same subject, I passed the suggestion of a feasibility study on to the local enterprise company. It is for the local enterprise company to decide how to pursue the issue.

Local Authority Members

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to review the payments made to elected members of local authorities; what criteria he will use to evaluate the adequacy of payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart: The new system of councillors' allowances which was introduced in April 1991 is currently under review. The review will not include travel and subsistence or other allowances payable outside the scheme. My right hon. Friend will continue to review the levels and limits within the scheme on a regular basis.

Town Twinning

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on town twinning between Scottish local authorities and their counterparts in Europe.

Mr. Stewart: It is for individual local authorities to determine what twinning arrangements, if any, they have with their European neighbours.

Ravenscraig

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what new assessments have been made of the social and economic impact of the closure of Ravenscraig on the economy of (a) Scotland, (b) Lanarkshire and (c) Motherwell district;

(2) what discussions he has had with (a) Scottish Enterprise and (b) other interested parties on the likely social and economic impact of the closure of Ravenscraig.

Mr. Stewart: We would not expect to be aware of all assessments of these matters, some of which could be carried out by a wide range of individuals and organisations with no direct connection with the Government. The economic needs of Lanarkshire were investigated in depth by the Lanarkshire working group last year; and the Scottish Office Industry Department, Scottish Enterprise and the Lanarkshire development agency, in collaboration, continue to keep under review the social and economic impact of the contraction of the steel industry in Lanarkshire. This work has informed the putting in place of a substantial package of measures to promote the economic development of Lanarkshire and continues to inform the process of developing and adding to that package. This process involves discussions with the local authorities in Lanarkshire and a range of other bodies. I and my right hon. Friend have discussed various aspects of this subject with the chairman of Scottish Enterprise and a wide range of other interested parties on various occasions.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what practical assistance he is providing to existing businesses in Lanarkshire which are directly and indirectly dependent on Ravenscraig for employment to assist them in diversifying their activities; and what level of expenditure is involved.

Mr. Stewart: The full range of Government programmes to assist industry in various ways is available to companies in Lanarkshire, which benefits from assisted area status. In addition, businesses in Lanarkshire which need to diversify will benefit from the assistance available from Lanarkshire development agency, which has received substantial additional resources in the current and past years as a result of the Government's commitment to fund additional activity to add impetus to the economic and physical development of Lanarkshire. The precise level of expenditure on assisting the general class of companies which the hon. Member describes will depend substantially on the level of demand for assistance from these companies.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest estimates he has made of the potential costs of reclamation of former steel sites at Ravenscraig; and what proportion of the cost is likely to be met by (a) British Steel and (b) public expenditure.

Mr. Stewart: Estimates of the potential costs of reclamation are a matter for consideration in the first instance by Scottish Enterprise and the Lanarkshire development agency. I am aware that additional information necessary to the production of any reliable estimate is being obtained in collaboration with British Steel. It is for British Steel to consider the level of expenditure relevant to reclamation which will fall to it. The size of any input from public expenditure will depend partly on that consideration and partly on the form which action in relation to the future use of the sites takes.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has had with (a) British Steel, (b) Scottish Enterprise and (c) other interested parties on the reclamation of former steel sites at Ravenscraig.

Mr. Stewart: This is a matter for consideration in the first instance by Scottish Enterprise and the Lanarkshire development agency, which are in discussion with British Steel. The Scottish Office is kept in touch with progress.

Hunterston

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress he has made in discussions with British Steel in relation to industrial development at Hunterston.

Mr. Stewart: The Government and Scottish Enterprise continue to investigate the possibility of industrial development at Hunterston in consultation with various interested parties.

Forestry

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state the amount of Forestry Commission land, in acres, held in 1980 and the amount sold off in each year since 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The Forestry Commission managed 1,263,400 hectares on 31 March 1980. The amount of land, in hectares, disposed by the Forestry Commission in each year since 1980 is shown below.

Year ending 31 March	Area disposed (hectares)
1981	2,240
1982	10,423
1983	12,108
1984	44,570
1985	28,857
1986	16,573
1987	10,956
1988	8,929
1989	7,675
1990	7,851
1991	7,428
[1]1992	6,684

[1] (provisional).
One hectare = 2·471 acres).

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he is taking against infestation by aphids attacking Scottish forests.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 7 July 1992]: The only species of aphid which is causing significant damage to forests in Scotland is the green spruce aphid—Elatobium abietinum—populations of which increase following mild winters and springs of the kind experienced in Scotland this year. This aphid feeds on the older needles of spruce trees causing discolouration and loss of needles. In severe infestations, the current year's foliage can also be affected. Although the aphid reduces the rate of growth of the trees it does not cause permanent damage or death.

There is no practical means of controlling the aphid over large areas, although Christmas trees are regularly sprayed against it. The Forestry Commission's research division is seeking to develop strains of spruce which will be more resistant to attack by the aphid.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what public consultation procedures were undertaken, prior to the granting of financial assistance in respect of afforestation in Strath Cuileannach, Sutherland; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 30 June 1992]: Before the Forestry Commission approved the woodland grant scheme application in this case, it consulted the then Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland, the Countryside Commission for Scotland, the Red Deer Commission, the Scottish Office Agriculture and Fisheries Department and Highland regional council. This involved consideration of an environmental statement provided by the applicants under the terms of the Environmental Assessment (Afforestation) Regulations 1988, which was also advertised in local newspapers for public comment. Planting has only just started and no grants have been paid to date.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to respond to the report from Dr. Tim Hunter on the investment of £2 million of public money in the Forest Farm afforestation scheme in Sutherland; how many long-term jobs he expects to be created as a result of this investment; how many long-term jobs are expected to be lost as a result of this scheme; and whether he will urgently review the criteria governing public investment in private forestry as a result of Dr. Hunter's report.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 30 June 1992]: I am studying Dr. Hunter's report, which I received last week, and a response will be sent to him soon.

The Forest Farm afforestation scheme is expected to create 10 jobs in the long term. The present owners acquired the land with vacant possession, so the scheme has not, in itself, resulted in any job losses; in the region of 1,500 hectares will continue to be used for sheep grazing which will provide continuing employment for at least one person.

The planting proposals were subject to environmental assessment and involved widespread consultation as described in the answer I have given today to a question from the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson). I am satisfied that the criteria governing the payment of forestry grant were properly followed in this case and I can see no need to review them.

Fisheries Protection

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment his office has made of the effectiveness of fisheries protection in Scottish waters; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency will shortly publish its first annual report. This will analyse performance and the effectiveness of fisheries enforcement in Scottish waters. A key indicator of the effectiveness of fisheries protection is the number of boardings achieved. The number of boardings of fishing vessels in Scottish waters has increased from 1,406 in 1985-86 to 2,513 in 1991-92.

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about performance targets for the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency for 1992-93.

Mr. Lang: For the financial year 1992-93 I have set the following targets:

	Target
Aerial surveillance—percentage of hours flown on task	85
Aerial surveillance—cost per aircraft sighting	£95
Marine surveillance—number of boardings at sea	2,500
Marine surveillance—cost per boarding	£2,600
Sea fisheries inspectorate—cost per log sheet check	£40·71
50 per cent. of cases for prosecution to be reported within six weeks of offence being detected and 90 per cent. within eight weeks.
Number of cases where court proceedings are taken as percentage of offences reported to prosecuting authorities	75

In order to ensure that the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency uses its resources efficiently, I have set it a target to achieve cash releasing efficiency gains of 6 per cent. over 1991-92.

The chief executive will be directly accountable to me for the achievement of these targets, which will be reported in the agency's annual report.

Ferry Statistics

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of foot passengers and vehicles carried by each of the ferry routes to the Scottish islands for the last five years in full.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is contained in table 10.9 of Scottish transport statistics, No. 12, 1990-91, published by the Government Statistical Service on 12 June, a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the ferry fares charged for island and non-island resident passengers and vehicles for those routes which receive deficit funding from his Department.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Deficit subsidy is paid in the case of services operated by Caledonian MacBrayne to eliminate the overall deficit incurred by the company in operating a network of approved services. The subsidy is not related to deficits incurred on specific routes. Information on fares is available from the company. The company does not discriminate between island and non-island residents in its fares structure.

Local Enterprise Companies

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list for each local enterprise company the budget made available by Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise for the provision of youth training places in 1991-92 and 1992-93 (a) at current prices and (b) at 1992-93 prices, indicating in both cases the percentage difference;

(2) if he will list for each local enterprise company the budget made available by Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise for 1991-92 and 1992-93 (a) at current prices and (b) at 1992-93 prices, indicating in both cases the percentage difference;

(3) if he will list for each local enterprise company the budget made available by Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise for the provision of employment training places for 1991-92 and 1992-93 (a) at current prices and (b) at 1992-93 prices, indicating in both cases the percentage difference.

Mr. Stewart: The allocation of resources to local enterprise companies is an operational matter for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. I have asked the chairmen of these bodies to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will list for each local enterprise company the number of training weeks contracted for under youth training (a) in 1991-92 and (b) in 1992-93 and if he will give the percentage difference;

(2) if he will list for each local enterprise company the number of training weeks contracted for under employment training (a) in 1991-92 and (b) in 1992-93; and if he will give the percentage difference.

Mr. Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 3 July, Official Report, column 751, and have asked the chairman of Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise to write to the hon. Member.

Health

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to seek to improve the health of the people of Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: We are today publishing "Scotland's Health —A Challenge To Us All". This new policy statement, which updates the policy statement "Health Education in Scotland" published a year ago, announces a range of measures which the Government propose to take in Scotland in relation to smoking and diet, to develop action on accidents, to promote health in schools and at the workplace and otherwise to seek to improve the health of the people of Scotland. I and all my ministerial colleagues in the Scottish Office will be actively involved in pushing these initiatives forward.

Last year, we set targets, and defined priority areas, for seeking to improve health in Scotland, and we also set up the Health Education Board for Scotland, with an increased budget, to lead the health education effort. This further statement builds on those developments.

The Government and the NHS have important roles to play in improving Scotland's health record, and that objective is high on our agenda. But others also have important parts to play, including the local authorities, the voluntary sector, employers, the food industry and the media. Above all, individual members of the public can help to safeguard their own health by adopting healthy lifestyles. This new policy statement, of which a copy is being placed in the Library, provides a framework within which we can all work to ensure that the Scottish people live longer and healthier lives.

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to make an announcement about the future of the water and sewerage services in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I have not yet decided on the future structure of these services. The consultation paper on local government reform last year indicated that water and sewerage services might best be handled by bodies separate from the proposed new unitary authorities.

The Government have set high standards for the quality of water supply and the reduction of water pollution. To achieve these, very substantial sums will have to be invested to improve the water and sewerage infrastructure.

I have now decided to appoint consultants to advise me on alternative forms of organisation for water and sewerage services in Scotland, including ways in which the private sector might contribute enterprise and investment to this vital public service.

The consultancy will help to assess these issues.

I shall ask the consultants to report quickly. I then intend to consult on proposals for the future of these services in the autumn in parallel with consultations on the reform of local government.

Historic Scotland

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the key performance targets he has set for Historic Scotland for 1992-93.

Sir Hector Monro: The table shows the key performance targets for 1992-93 which I have set for Historic Scotland, with the 1991-92 outturn figures given for comparison.

	1991-92 outturn	1992-93 target
Protecting the built heritage
i. Number of ancient monuments of national importance to be scheduled	307	300
ii. Number of listed building resurvey units to be completed	153	160
iii. Number of historic building repair grants accepted	122	120
iv Conservation of monuments in care	contain maintenance backlog
Promoting and presenting the built heritage
i. Number of visitors to monuments in care	2·37m	2·49m
ii Total income	£6·1m	£7·1m

	1991-92 outturn	1992-93 target
Management
i. Value for money savings on maintenance of monuments in care	—	1·5 per cent.
ii. Exchequer contribution for net current expenditure	below inflation	at or below inflation

Registers of Scotland

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what targets have been set for the Registers of Scotland executive agency for 1992-93.

Mr. Lang: When the agency was launched in April 1990, my predecessor set its performance targets for its first three years. These were announced in a written answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Eastwood (Mr. Stewart) on 5 April 1990, Official Report, column 829.

The targets are revised annually, and the annual targets for 1992-93, which I have recently approved, are to reduce average turnround times on the agency's four main categories of work as follows:

(i) for recording writs on the sasine register, a reduction to 10 weeks;

(ii) for registration of dealings in the land register, a reduction to 16 weeks;

(iii) for first registrations in the land register, a reduction to 37 weeks; and

(iv) for registration in the land register of transfers of parts of previously registered interests, a reduction to 68 weeks.

The agency was also set a target of achieving a reduction in unit costs of at least 5 per cent. in real terms for each of its main categories of work during 1992-93. In addition, the agency will continue to ensure that its expenditure is covered by fees and other income.

The agency's chief executive, the keeper of the registers, is accountable to me for the achievement of these targets, and the agency's record of performance against its targets is reported in the keeper's annual report.

Scottish National Heritage

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names and emoluments of the members of the north-western regional board of Scottish Natural Heritage.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 26 June 1992]: It is for Scottish Natural Heritage to appoint the members of its committees. I have asked SNH to write to the hon. Member with the information requested.

Regional Assistance

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a table of expenditure on regional financial assistance since the 1984 revision of the assisted areas at (a) current prices and (b) 1984 prices in the travel-to-work areas of Arbroath, Bathgate, Cumnock and Sanquhar, Dumbarton, Dundee, Glasgow, Greenock, Irvine, Kilmarnock, Lanarkshire, Alloa, Ayr, Campbeltown, Dunfermline, Dunoon and Bute, Falkirk, Forres, Girvan, Invergordon/Dingwall, Kirkcaldy, Lochaber and Newton Stewart.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 29 June 1992]: The available information, which relates to regional selective assistance, regional enterprise grants and revised regional development grant, is given in the tables. Corresponding information on original regional development grant could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

European Community Bathing Standards

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to assist financially the local authorities adjacent to the River Clyde to clean up the foreshore and meet EC bathing standards.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 3 July 1992]: The aggregate external finance settlement takes full account of district councils' responsibility for clearing litter, including that from areas of foreshore to which the public have access.

Bathing water improvement depends on investment in effluent treatment by sewerage authorities and others. For 1992-93 Strathclyde regional council's capital allocation of £83 million for its water and sewerage programme fully meets its planned expenditure and is more than double the level for 1988-89. In addition, over £17 million has already been offered to the council under the Government's sewerage improvement grant scheme which provides assistance towards approved programmes of works to reduce pollution and improve environmental standards.

Mortgage Defaults

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many former Scottish Special Housing Association tenants, now Scottish Homes tenants, have had their homes repossessed because of mortgage default.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 July 1992]: This information is not held by the Scottish Office.

Free Tuition (Vocational Courses)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what rights a 16 or 17-year-old school leaver has to free tuition on a vocational course in a college of further education.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 July 1992]: The Convention of Scottish Local Authorities recommends fee levels for courses in further education colleges. No fees are charged for under-18s on full-time non-advanced courses. After 1 April 1993, when the colleges are incorporated, it will be a condition of funding that this policy shall continue for courses falling within the Secretary of State's duty for further edcuation.

Woodlands

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what publicity has been given to the community woodland supplement which he introduced in April; and what take-up there has been.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 6 July 1992]: "The Community Woodland Supplement" was launched by my right hon. Friend in September 1991 and a press release was issued at the same time. Baroness Trumpington, the then Minister of State, Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, also publicised the supplement in January at the launch of the Forestry Commission's "Community Woodland Design Guidelines". Further publicity was given at the forestry expansion conference organised by the Forestry Commission in March, and in speeches by Ministers and by Forestry Commissioners on several other occasions. The supplement has been promoted in the technical press and Forestry Commission staff have publicised it at seminars with local authorities, farmers and landowners. Information about the supplement is included in the applicant's pack for the woodland grant scheme.

The Forestry Commission has received 63 applications for the supplement, of which 10 have so far been approved.

Badgers

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans he has to discuss the problem of badger baiting with the law enforcement authorities;

(2) what plans he has to improve surveillance of cross-border activity in badger baiting;

(3) what evidence he has of badger baiting being practised in the borders; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what powers are currently available in Scotland to prosecute and sentence those convicted of badger baiting; and what plans he has to review the sentences available;

(5) what current resources are devoted to the prevention of badger baiting; and what plans he has to increase the amount of money available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 July 1992]: Badgers receive a level of protection in law which is unique for an unendangered animal. The baiting of any animal, including badgers, is prohibited in Scotland under the Protection of Animals (Scotland) Act 1912. The maximum penalty for an offence is six months' imprisonment and/or a level 4 fine—currently £1,000, but to be increased to £2,500 on 1 October 1992. It is proposed to increase the maximum fine at the next suitable legislative opportunity to level 5 on the standard scale—currently £2,000, but set to rise to £5,000 on 1 October 1992.

Badgers are also protected under the Badgers Act 1973, as amended by the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, which makes it an offence to ill-treat, kill, injure, or take—or attempt to kill, injure or take—or to dig for any badger except in certain specified circumstances. The Badgers Act 1991, which amends the 1973 Act and came into force on 25 October 1991, also makes it an offence intentionally or recklessly to damage, destroy or obstruct access to or any entrance of a badger sett; to cause a dog to enter a sett; or to disturb a badger which is in a sett. Such offences apply in Scotland and attract a maximum penalty of a level 5 fine—£5,000 with effect from 1 October 1992. A maximum custodial sentence of six months' imprisonment was introduced for offences under section 1 or 2 of the Badgers Act 1973 by the Criminal Justice Act 1991 on 9 December 1991.

The Badgers (Further Protection) Act 1991, which came into force on 25 September 1991, provides courts with new powers in dealing with the above offences. The courts may order the destruction of other disposal of a dog used in the commission of such offences and disqualify an offender from keeping a dog for such time as it considers fit. A Bill to consolidate badgers legislation is currently before the House of Commons.

Detailed information on the incidence of offences involving cruelty to badgers in Scotland is not separately identifiable within the Scottish Office Home and Health Department's classification of crimes and offences, but I am not aware of any evidence to suggest that badger baiting is widespread in the borders or that cross-border activity has developed. The allocation of police resources for animal protection purposes is a matter for the chief constable to decide in the light of local priorities.

Tree Preservation

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the statutes and regulations governing tree presevation orders in Scotland and when they took effect.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 6 July 1992]: The principal provisions are contained in part IV of the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act 1972—C. 52—sections 57 to 60, and in part V, sections 98 and 99. These provisions have been amended in minor detail. This Act came into force on 27 August 1972, but sections 58(5) and 59(1) to (3) came into force on 17 July 1975. The powers of enforcement are extended and amended by section 54 of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991, which came into force on 26 March 1992.

The relevant regulations are:

The Town and Country Planning (Tree Preservation Order and Trees in Conservation Areas) (Scotland) Regulations 1975,
SI 1975 No. 1,204 (S.183), which came into operation on 1 September 1975.

The Town and Country Planning (Tree Preservation Order and Trees in Conservation Areas) (Scotland) Amendment Regulations 1981,
SI 1981 No. 1,385 (S.134), which came into operation on 27 October 1981.

The Town and Country Planning (Tree Preservation Order and Trees in Conservation Areas) (Scotland) Amendment Regulations 1984,
SI 1984 No. 329 (S.36), which came into operation on 11 April 1984.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the rights available to members of the public who seek to protect trees by means of a tree preservation order.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 6 July 1992]: Under sections 57 to 60 of the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act 1972, it is the duty of planning authorities, in the interests of amenity, to make such provision as may to them appear expedient, for the preservation of trees or woodlands in their district.

These powers have been used effectively by local authorities but if the hon. Member has any particular case in mind, I should be happy for him to write to me.

Pupils (Expenditure)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the actual capital expenditure per pupil and per capita for every Scottish region since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 July 1992]: The tables provide information about capital expenditure (a) per pupil, and (b) per head of population on local authority schools. They have been derived from local authority capital expenditure returns, the annual school census of pupil numbers and annual estimates of population.

Capital expenditure per pupil on local authority schools

The figures in both tables relate to expenditure on nursery, primary, secondary and special schools.

Schools (Noise)

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what sums he has made available, to which regional councils and for which schools, for noise insulation in the last 10 years for which information is available;

(2) if he will request Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools to make an assessment of the current effects on education in the primary schools at Balmullo, Guardbridge and Leuchars of noise nuisance from aircraft operating from RAF Leuchars;

(3) what steps he intends to take to see that Fife regional council complies with the School Premises (General Requirements and Standards) (Scotland) Regulations 1967 to 1979 in relation to accoustic conditions and insulation in the primary schools at Balmullo, Guardbridge and Leuchars respectively;

(4) what sanctions are available to him in the event that a regional authority declines to comply with the School Premises (General Requirements and Standards) (Scotland) Regulations 1967 to 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 July 1992]: Substantial resources are available to local authorities for capital expenditure on their educational building stock. Authorities are free to determine their own spending priorities within the total resources available to them.

As regards the schools in question, I understand that monitoring of the situation is taking place and I have asked my officials to keep in touch with developments.

My right hon. Friend has powers, after consultation with the authority, to issue a direction under section 19(3) of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980 requiring that premises be brought into conformity with the appropriate standards or requirements of the regulations.

Community Enterprises

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the contracts of local enterprise companies require them to show that they have developed community enterprises.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 6 July 1992]: Local enterprise companies' contracts are with Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise and the detailed contents of these contracts, and their interpretation, are operational matters for these two bodies. I have asked the chairmen of the two bodies to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what evidence he has that Scottish Enterprise and local enterprise companies are fulfilling their responsibility to develop community enterprises.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 6 July 1992]: Scottish Enterprise has no specific statutory responsibility for developing community enterprise; and it is an operational matter for Scottish Enterprise whether it chooses to impose any specific contractual responsibilities in relation to community enterprise on local enterprise companies. I do not seek information from Scottish Enterprise, which distinguishes its support for community enterprise from its activities to encourage enterprise in general.

Quarrying

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what measures are taken to assess the likely environmental impact of quarrying operations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 6 July 1992]: For individual quarrying applications, planning authorities should take account of the likely environmental impact of a particular operation. To assist in this process, we will shortly be issuing for consultation additional guidance covering the assessment and control of quarrying's environmental effects. Regulations already provide that, in coming to their decisions on planning applications, planning authorities should seek from the applicant a formal environmental assessment if there are likely to be significant environmental effects. The results of the environmental assessment will be an important consideration in the determination of an application. Where an application is granted permission, planning authorities have a statutory duty to review periodically the operation of mining sites, including quarrying. We are currently consulting on possible options for strengthening this review procedure.

More generally, research into the environmental impact of quarrying operations has been commissioned by the Government. A research report entitled "Environmental Effects of Surface Mineral Workings" was published earlier this year and will inform the guidance to be issued.

Civil Servants

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many civil servants in his Department are paid at a rate exceeding that of a Cabinet Minister.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 July 1992]: The total annual salary—including reduced parliamentary salary—of most Cabinet Ministers is £63,047. The number of civil servants in the Scottish Office whose pay currently exceeds this figure is two.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has prepared a timetable for the introduction and establishment of a register of potentially contaminated land in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 7 July 1992]: It was originally proposed that the duty for local authorities to compile registers of land which is, or has been, subject to contaminative use would commence in April 1992. The registers would have been available to the public in April 1993. Regulations together with guidance on various aspects of the registers were to have been published in early 1992. In the light of representations received from local authorities, further consideration will be given to the detail of the proposals and further consultation to be undertaken. An announcement on the revised timetable will be made in due course.

Employers and Careers Service Partnerships

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library the response from each local education authority in Scotland to the invitation of his Department to them to consider how they might promote partnerships in their areas between employers and the local education authority careers service; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 7 July 1992]: Seven bids have been received for financial assistance towards the establishment of careers service partnerships. These are currently being evaluated and decisions will be announced shortly. Disclosure of information about bids is a matter for those who submitted them and it would not be appropriate to place copies in the Library.

Water Disconnections

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of water disconnections in Scotland in each year since 1979.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 7 July 1992]: Water supplies to domestic consumers in Scotland may be disconnected only for short-term operational reasons—for example, to undertake repairs, make connections or plumbing alterations. Supplies to non-domestic consumers may also be disconnected for other reasons, including those arising from non-payment of water charges. Information on the number of disconnections is not held centrally.

Cockle Surveys

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will publish the 1991 Solway cockle survey by the Marine Laboratory, Aberdeen, referred to in the consultation paper on Inshore Fishing (Scotland) Act 1984, "Proposals for the Amendment of the Existing Prohibitions on Fishing in Scottish Inshore Waters"; and if he will indicate how a member of the public can obtain a copy of the cockle survey report.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 7 July 1992]: A copy of the conclusions of the 1991 Solway cockle survey has been placed in the House of Commons Library. Copies are also available on request from my Department.

A fuller report of the survey will be published later in the year.

Written Answers to Questions

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Obscene Publications

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Attorney-General if he will take action under section 3 of the Obscene Publications Act 1959 to confiscate copies of the book published by Arrow Books of which the hon. Member for Shoreham has given him details.

The Attorney-General: It is the police rather than the Crown prosecution service who initiate proceedings under section 3 of the Obscene Publications Act 1959 by the obtaining and execution of a search warrant. The Crown prosecution service would, however, expect to be consulted in advance of such action and would not endorse any such application in respect of the book in question in view of its decision not to institute proceedings under section 2 of the Obscene Publications Act 1959.

Mr. David Irving

Ms. Glenda Jackson: To ask the Attorney-General what consideration the Director of Public Prosecutions has given to prosecuting Mr. David Irving under the Race Relations Act 1976 over the organisation of revisionist seminars describing the holocaust as a liberal myth.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions is not currently giving consideration to any proceedings against David Irving. Anyone who has evidence giving reasonable grounds to believe that an offence has been committed should report it to the police.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Indonesian Military Personnel

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Indonesian military personnel have recently been awarded Foreign and Commonwealth Office scholarships awards schemes to study at the Royal College of Military Science at Shrivenham, Swindon.

Mr. Goodlad: Two Indonesian military officers are currently at the Royal College of Military Science at Shrivenham on the Foreign and Commonwealth Office scholarships award scheme. One student was at the college last year on the same basis; a further student is expected to attend the college in the next academic year.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will cancel the invitations issued to Mr. Kustanto Widiatmoko, Mr. Akmad Buldan and Mr. Minulyo Suprato to attend the Royal College of Military Science at Shrivenham under his Department's scholarships and awards scheme, in view of Indonesia's human rights record.

Mr. Goodlad: Only one of the three Indonesians named —Mr. Widiatmoko—is to attend a course at the Royal College of Military Science, Shrivenham. The other two are to undertake studies at Nottingham university and at the Cranfield Institute of Technology, Bedford. There are no plans to cancel these scholarships awards. We do not believe that the cancellation of this form of educational assistance would help the human rights situation in Indonesia.

Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the first meeting of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe in Budapest, between 3 and 6 July.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I welcome the addition of a parliamentary dimension to the CSCE process, and in particular the adoption by the parliamentary assembly of declarations in favour of strengthening CSCE institutions. I agree with the assembly that respect for CSCE values, including parliamentary democracy and human rights, should be translated into every day practice, and that CSCE should seek to prevent and resolve conflicts both within and between states.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the names of each of the organisations and individuals who have sent responses to the White Paper on a national lottery; and if he will make a statement on the timetable for completing his consultation process.

Mr. Mellor: A total of 224 respondents were listed on 6 July, Official Report, columns 23-26, most of whom submitted their comments to the Home Office before 1 June. In addition, the Department of National Heritage has now received seven further communications from organisations and individuals. These are from the Continental On-Line Lottery and Totalisator Advisors; Nairn district council; Northern Arts; the Sports Council for Northern Ireland; the United Kingdom Lottery Company Limited; the Victoria and Albert museum; and the hon. Member. This brings the total to 231. Over the next few months we will continue discussions with key respondents. Legislation will be brought forward in due course.

Press (Self-regulation)

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has for reviewing press self-regulation.

Mr. Mellor: When the report of the Committee on Privacy and Related Matters was published in June 1990, the then Home Secretary said that the Government would review the effectiveness of press self-regulation once the new Press Complaints Commission which the committee recommended be established had been in operation for 18 months.

Now that the 18 month period is over, I have decided to ask Sir David Calcutt QC, the Master of Magdalene college Cambridge, who chaired the earlier committee, to undertake an assessment of how self-regulation has worked in practice since his committee reported. His remit will be to assess the effectiveness of non-statutory self regulation by the press since the establishment of the Press Complaints Commission and to give his views on whether the present arrangements for self-regulation should now be modified or put on a statutory basis. I have also asked him to consider whether any further measures may be needed to deal with intrusions into personal privacy by the press, and to make recommendations.

I believe that a further independent analysis based on recent experience of self-regulation will be of great assistance in determining the way forward in this difficult and sensitive area. In view of his chairmanship of the earlier committee, Sir David is uniquely qualified to carry out this task, and I am very grateful to him for agreeing to take it on.

Green Minister

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will outline the priorities for future action of the green Minister in his Department (a) over the next year and (b) over this Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Over the next 12 months, I shall continue to follow up commitments in the White Paper Cm 1200 "This Common Inheritance" and its successor Cm 1655 "The First Year Report". I shall also be contributing to the second anniversary White Paper in the autumn. By the end of 1992 my Department will have developed an environmental housekeeping strategy for the management of its accommodation and purchasing, and over the next year and beyond I shall continue to ensure that environmental concerns shape the policy and work of my Department whenever appropriate.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Marine Theft

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total value of marine theft of United Kingdom vessels stolen in United Kingdom territorial waters for the last five years; and if he will tabulate.

Mr. Jack: The requested information is not collected centrally.

AIDS

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation so that charges of (a) indecent assault, (b) assault occasioning actual bodily harm and (c) procurement of sex with a woman by false pretences, may be brought against a person who is an HIV/AIDS carrier who wilfully infects others; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: We have no current plans to introduce such legislation. There are difficulties both of principle and of practice in bringing this type of behaviour within the scope of the criminal law. The issue is, however, being kept under review and we will be taking into account the precedents in other countries before reaching a final view.

Mr. Martin Foran

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will refer to the Court of Appeal the conviction of Martin Foran, presently at Her Majesty's prison, Millers Park, following the receipt of the letter from the Crown prosecution service of 28 May, 11NN 158212 Foran, relating to non-disclosure of evidence during his application for leave to appeal.

Mr. Jack: We are considering, in the light of further representations from solicitors for Mr. Foran, including the letter to them of 28 May from the Crown prosecution service, whether there are any grounds to justify intervention in the case. I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as consideration of the representations is complete.

Police, Wales

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of police officers in Wales relieved of duty because of criminal misconduct in (a) 1991, (b) 1990 and (c) 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The table gives total numbers of officers suspended from duty pending investigation of a criminal allegation, in respect of each of the four Welsh constabularies in the years in question. The figures in brackets denote the number of officers who were convicted of a criminal offence in those years. Any conviction of an officer who has been suspended from duty may take place in a year subsequent to that of his suspension.

Immigration

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current backlog in dealing with referral cases at each of the immigration centres.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information requested is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total number of passengers detained overnight under Immigration Act powers during 1991 by nationality.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 3 July 1992]: The information requested is given in the table.

Derek Bentley

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply of 18 May, Official Report, column 10, when he expects to make an announcement or decision on his study of the report submitted to his predecessor, the right hon. Member for Mole Valley (Mr. Baker), by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the case of Derek Bentley.

Mr. Jack: This report is receiving careful consideration together with other material which has been submitted more recently, including a letter and dossier received on 1 June from solicitors acting for Miss Iris Bentley. My right hon. and learned Friend will decide as soon as possible whether any action on his part would be appropriate.

Victim Support

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much public money has been made available to victim support organisations in the mid-Essex area in each of the last three available years.

Mr. Jack: Home Office funding of local victim support schemes is channelled through the National Association of Victim Support Schemes, and is allocated by the Victim Support local funding panel on which the Home Office has observer status. There is one local victim support scheme in the mid-Essex area, the Chelmsford and Braintree scheme. Home Office funding allocated to that scheme amounted to £14,484 in 1990-91, £15,788 in 1991-92, and is planned to amount to £26,208 in the current financial year.

Deportation Orders

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deportation orders he has signed in each month in 1992.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is as follows:

	Number
January	62
February	49
March	74
April	109
May	77
June	85

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on deporting foreign nationals whose families reside in this country and who have no means of support in their own country.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Deportation will normally be the proper course where a person subject to immigration control overstays a permitted leave, breaches a condition attached to it or engages in serious criminal or other activity against the public interest. Each case is considered on its merits having full regard to all known compassionate circumstances including age, character, domestic circumstances, length of residence in and strength of ties with the United Kingdom. The effect of deportation on a person's family in the United Kingdom and the situation he or she will face on return are factors to be taken into account.

Prison Service

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if he will publish a statement of the annual objectives of the prison service and of the resources provided for it.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am placing in the Library a copy of the "Statement of Objectives and Resources for HM Prison Service, 1992-93", which is being issued today.

The statement forms the "compact" between Ministers and the Director General of the prison service recommended by Lord Justice Woolf. It sets out the prison service's purpose and goals, the planning assumptions and resources for 1992-93 and the service's objectives, targets and performance indicators.

It was announced in March 1992 that it was intended that the prison service should become an executive agency on 1 April 1993. The framework document and corporate and business plans for the agency will succeed the present statement from 1993-94 onwards.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Select Committee Reports

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list the substantive reports from the departmental Select Committees in the 1987 Parliament which have not been debated, or referred to on the Order Paper as relevant to a debate.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Office Costs Allowance

Mr. Page: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he intends to publish the Top Salaries Review Body's report on the office costs allowance and the Government's response to it.

Mr. Newton: I have today placed copies of the TSRB's report in the Vote Office.

The TSRB's proposals

The TSRB's wide-ranging report recommends fundamental changes to the level and structure of the OCA. The main recommendations are:

(a) to disaggregate the OCA into separate allowances covering expenditure for different purposes (eg staff, equipment etc) in order to improve accountability;

(b) a separate staff allowance of £33,360 (includng the 4·25 per cent. uprating from 1 April) to enable MPs to employ up to 2 full-time staff rather than 1½ as at present;

(c) a separate allowance of £4,000 for general office expenses;

(d) central procurement of IT equipment, to be introduced as soon as possible;

(e) as an interim measure, a separate one-off initial acquisition grant for IT equipment of £5,000. available to all MPs, but with the general office expenses allowance halved in the year in which the grant is taken;

(f) a separate additional allowance of £2,000 a year for MPs basing their activities in their constituency, provided they occupy only "the basic minimum accommodation at Westminster as defined by the House";

(g) the creation of a Personnel Office, separate from the Fees Office, to advise MPs and their staff on matters including rates of pay and job specifications;

(h) (in the expectation that their Report would not have been implemented in advance of the general election this year) only one quarter of the allowance for 1992-93 should be available to Members between 1 April 1992 and the election.

If implemented in full these recommendations would increase the maximum of the OCA from the 1991-92 figure of £28,986 to between £37,360 for a Member not entitled to the constituency office allowance and not claiming the one-off initial acquisition grant and £42,360 in 1992-93 for a Member claiming both, which would cost up to an additional £8 million in the first year. In percentage terms the increases would range between 23·6 and 40·2 per cent. in addition to a 4·25 per cent. increase due from 1 April 1992 in line with the existing uprating formula.

The Government's Views The TSBR's proposals raise three fundamental issues: compartmentalisation of the OCA; central procurement of IT equipment; creation of a separate Personnel Office.

The key argument for compartmentalisation of the OCA is that it would improve accountability. But almost all MP's expenditure on office, secretarial and research support is disbursed directly by the Fees Office or reimbursed on the basis of invoices submitted. The Government do not consider therefore that disaggregation would significantly improve accountability, but it would reduce MP's flexibility to make most effective use of the OCA. The Government do not therefore support this proposal. It follows that we oppose the creation of a separate constituency office allowance. It would be exceedingly difficult to define an acceptable criterion based on a Member occupying "minimum accommodation at Westminster". It would also be difficult in some areas—for example, portable office equipment—to distinguish between general office expenses and constituency office expenses.

Turning to the provision of IT equipment, we believe that the case for central procurement needs further consideration. It should be possible to negotiate discount arrangements without the need for bulk purchase of equipment by a central procurement authority which would inevitably base its specification on a generalised requirement rather than specific needs. The Government therefore have strong reservations about this proposal. In of these concerns we also do not favour the introduction of a separate initial acquisition grant pending the introduction of central procurement. We consider that MPs should continue to lease or purchase equipment which best meets their particular requirements from the aggregate OCA. Subject to the views of the House, however, the Government would be content for an invitation to be extended to the Information Committee of the House to consider the TSRB's proposals on equipment provision in the light of planned progress on the study of networking in the House.

The final fundamental issue is the proposal to create a separate Personnel Office. The Government appreciate the reasons underlying the recommendation, but are conscious of the concern of many Members about possible external intervention in the relationships between themselves and their staff. Subject to the views of the House, therefore, the Government do not propose to pursue this proposal.

Against this background, the Government consider that the most sensible course is to retain the OCA as a single sum but increase the maximum level. We accept that there is a case for increasing provision for support staff but taking account of both the TSRB's findings and the public expenditure implications and wider economic considerations we do not believe an increase as high as the TSRB recommends would be appropriate. The Government propose, therefore, that the OCA should be increased to provide for a maximum additional one quarter of a staff member, or equivalent expenditure, per Member. We also accept the TSRB's proposal that provision of £4,000 should be provided for general office expenses, but as part of the aggregate OCA rather than as a separate allowance as the TSRB suggests.

Taken together the Government's proposals would increase the maximum OCA from £28,986 in 1991-92 to £33,190 in 1992-93. This represents a 9·8 per cent. increase, to provide for additional support from members, in addition to a 4·25 per cent. increase from 1 April in line with the existing uprating formula.

Finally, the Government note that at present an MP who joins or leaves the House part way through a year is entitled to claim against the full year's OCA. The TSRB addressed this point in the run-up to the election, but made no longer-term recommendation. The Government propose that from 1 April 1993 eligibility to the OCA will be calculated on a quarterly basis.

Overall, the Government believe this new higher level of OCA, while less than the TSRB recommended, provides a substantial increase which represents a fair balance between the taxpayers' interests and the needs of MPs for sufficient support to enable them to carry out adequately their duties to their constituents. It also provides MPs with continued flexibility in the ways they organise staff and equipment support to meet best their individual requirements.

ACCOMMODATION AND WORKS COMMITTEE

7 Millbank

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what percentage of the floor space of 7 Millbank is to be used for House of Commons purposes; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for not leasing the whole building.

Mr. Ray Powell: In response to the recommendation of the Services Committee that alternative accommodation should be provided for the occupants of St. Stephen's house, which has to be demolished as part of the works for the Jubilee line extension, the Secretary of State for the Environment took a lease on the basement, ground, first and second floors. Based on the figures provided by the landlord's agents, these floors represent some 50 per cent. of the total space available. Following the Parliamentary Corporate Bodies Act 1992, the lease has been transferred to the House authorities. The accommodation will become available during the summer recess.

I understand that, in addition, the Department leased the third floor of 7 Millbank for use by the House of Lords.

It is a matter for the Accommodation and Works Committee to consider against progress on the next phase of the new parliamentary building, whether further space should be taken in 7 Millbank or any of the other available buildings in the area.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Finance Bill

Mr. William Powell: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what extra costs were incurred as a result of the Standing Committee considering the Finance Bill sitting after the House adjourned on 16 June, 23 June and 30 June.

Mr. Beith: The calculation of detailed and meaningful statistics in relation to extra costs incurred as a result of any specific late night sitting is complex and cannot begin until all claims for extra payment are received. However, the Finance Office will write to the hon. Member as soon as it is able to provide this information.

1 Parliament Street

Mr. Renton: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, whether he will make arrangements for a fax machine to be installed at 1 Parliament street for the use of hon. Members with rooms in that building.

Mr. Beith: The provision of facsimile machines for Members was examined by the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee to the Services Committee in May 1988. It was resolved that centralised facsimile machine facilities in the House would be inappropriate and that the provision of these machines should be the responsibility of hon. Members. I understand that some 332 hon. Members now have individual facsimile machines. Any proposal to review these arrangements would have to be considered by the Administration Committee.

Transport Office (Bank Notes)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission if the Commission will make it a requirement of the continuation of Thomas Cook Ltd.'s operation of the Transport Office that the company will exchange Scottish and Northern Ireland notes on the same basis as it exchanges Bank of England notes.

Mr. Beith: It has never been the policy of the Transport Office in the House to impose a charge for the exchange of Scottish or Northern Ireland bank notes, or to charge for transactions settled in those notes.

I am advised that within the United Kingdom no charge has been made by Thomas Cook for transactions made in these notes, except at Heathrow and Glasgow airports where, until recently, a commission was charged. That practice was terminated on 1 July.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Guyana

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the environmental projects currently funded by the Overseas Development Administration in Guyana.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The ODA is currently funding two projects in this field. These are:

(a) Research project on the major problems of the regeneration of Greenheart timber. Funded through Imperial College. Cost to the ODA: £200,000 over three years.

(b) Support for the Commonwealth Programme for Sustainable Tropical Forestry. ODA commitment approximately £180,000, to meet the costs of the Phase 1 preparatory work programme, carried out by the Natural Resources Institute.

Malawi

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's position on the loan by the World bank to Malawi for construction of the Malawi V project; and what human rights considerations were taken into account when reaching this decision.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Malawi power V project was approved by the World Bank's executive board on 17 June. The United Kingdom judges all world bank loans on their economic and technical merits, in line with the provision of the bank's article of agreement. The proceedings of the World bank board on individual projects are confidential.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Correspondence

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to reply to the letter dated 21 June from a constituent of the hon. Member for Brent, East, the name and address of whom have been supplied to him; and what is the Government's commitment in the citizens charter about the length of time members of the public should expect to wait for a reply from the Government.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Secretary of State for the Environment is responsible for the matter on which the hon. Member's constituent wrote to me. The hon. Member's constituent will therefore receive a reply from officials at the Department of the Environment. That is normal practice where a correspondent raises matters with a Minister which do not relate to that Minister's responsibilities.

I understand that my right hon. and learned Friend's officials will reply to the hon. Member's constituent by Friday, 10 July.

The citizens charter calls for all public services to set standards for response times to correspondence. These should be appropriate both to local circumstances and to the needs of their clients.

PRIME MINISTER

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 9 July.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is on his way to Helsinki to attend the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe.

Top Salaries Review Body

Mr. King: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the Top Salaries Review Body report.

The Prime Minister: The Review Body on Top Salaries —TSRB—has submitted to me the report of its fundamental review of the pay of the posts within their remit groups. These comprise about 1,290 members of the judiciary, 660 senior civil servants, and 190 senior officers in the armed forces. The TSRB last carried out a fundamental review in 1985. I am grateful for the work which it has done on this further review.

The recommendations would add 19·7 per cent. to the pay bill for the remit groups, at a cost of £27·6 million. The Government understand the reasons which underlie these recommendations, which relate to senior people whose work it relies upon and greatly values, but believe that on this occasion there are also wider considerations which they must take into account. The rate of increase in average earnings is now at the lowest level for 25 years, and pay settlements in the private sector are running at around 4 per cent. The economy is moving to a low rate of inflation as the essential basis for resumed and sustained growth. Against this background the Government have decided to moderate the proposed increases.

The increase from 1 April this year will therefore be limited to 4 per cent. The main new rates of pay for 1992-93 are set out in the table. A further 3 per cent. will be paid from 1 April 1993 and a final stage of 2·8 per cent. from 1 April 1994, in addition to whatever annual increase may be decided for those years. The total increase will, therefore, be about half of the recommended level.

For those groups which are covered by performance pay arrangements, individual increases will vary within the overall increases in the pay bill. The Government attach importance to strengthening links between pay and performance, in line with the principles of the citizens charter; I have therefore asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer to discuss with the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and other Ministers the possibility of extending the performance pay system.

The TSRB has also made a number of additional recommendations affecting the judiciary and senior civil servants. The Government are considering the recommendations on regrouping for the judiciary, but have decided to reject the other recommendations affecting the judiciary and the increase in London pay for grade 3 civil servants.

TSRB remit groups: existing and recommended salaries

NATIONAL FINANCE

Employment Statistics

13. Mr. Watson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the position of the United Kingdom in the league table of growth of employment among the Group of Seven countries in 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Portillo: The Government do not publish forecasts of employment growth.

VAT (Charities)

14. Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to require Oxfam and other charity shops to introduce VAT on their operations.

Mr. Nelson: We have no such proposals. Agreement has been reached with other member states that the United Kingdom's existing social VAT zero rates, including those specifically designed to benefit charities and charity shops, can be maintained at least until the end of 1996 without prejudice to their future thereafter.

EC Budget

16. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with his EC counterparts on the EC budget proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: My right hon. Friend has regular discussions with his EC counterparts on the future financing of the Community, most recently at the ECOFIN Council on 9 June, at which a majority of member states indicated that they found the Commission's proposals excessive.

Housing

18. Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the prospects for recovery in the housing market.

Mr. Dorrell: As was said in this year's Financial Statement and Budget Report, any recovery in the housing market during 1992 is likely to be slow.

Unemployment

19. Ms. Coffey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment the Government have made of the impact on Government revenues of any increase in unemployment.

Mr. Portillo: The projections of revenues in the Financial Statement and Budget Report take account of all relevant factors.

Stamp Duty

20. Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning stamp duty.

Mr. Nelson: We have received a number of representations that the temporary increase in the threshold for stamp duty should run for a longer period. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend) earlier today.

European Central Bank

21. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the location of the proposed European central bank.

Mr. Lamont: I have nothing to add to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister's report on the discussions at Lisbon on 29 June, Official Report, column 588.

Manufacturing Output

22. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the level of manufacturing output over the last three years.

Mr. Lamont: Manufacturing output fell by about 6¾ per cent. between 1989 and the first quarter of 1992, following a rise of over 30 per cent. between 1981 and 1989.

Public Sector Borrowing Requirement

23. Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans to bring the calculation of the public sector borrowing requirement into line with European practice.

Mr. Portillo: There is no standard European practice nor any internationally-agreed guidelines for the definition of the public sector borrowing requirement.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the public sector borrowing requirement as a percentage of gross domestic product for each EC country since 1989.

Mr. Nelson: Comparable data for the public sector borrowing requirement in each Community country are not available. The following data are for general Government net borrowing as a percentage of GDP.

General government net borrowing as a percentage of GDP

	1989	1990	1991
Belgium	6·5	5·3	6·2
Denmark	0·5	1·4	2·0
Germany (West)	−0·2	1·9	3·1
Greece	18·3	19·6	16·5
Spain	2·8	4·0	4·4
France	1·2	1·6	1·7
Ireland	2·2	2·6	2·3
Italy	9·9	11·0	10·2
Luxembourg	−5·5	−5·6	−2·5
Netherlands	5·2	5·3	3·9
Portugal	3·4	5·8	6·4
United Kingdom	−1·2	0·8	2·0

VAT (Second-hand Goods)

24. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to apply VAT to second-hand goods.

Sir John Cope: The sixth VAT directive requires tax to be charged on the full selling price of all goods and services unless otherwise relieved. Although there is no general relief for second-hand goods, there are special schemes for certain of these goods and works of art, antiques and collectors' items under which tax is charged only on the seller's margin.

The draft EC seventh VAT directive, which requires unanimity for its adoption, proposes a harmonised scheme which will in general extend this relief to other second-hand goods. The Government have taken the representations that they have received fully into account in establishing their negotiating position.

Economic Recovery

25. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the assumptions underlying his oral statement of 22 January 1992, Official Report, column 323, that there remain good grounds for believing that the recovery will become fairly established in the course of 1992.

Mr. Lamont: I spelt out the reasons underlying my statement of 22 January 1992 at the time—Official Report, column 323. The forces making for recovery are still in place. These include low inflation, reduced interest rates, rising real earnings, improved personal and corporate financial positions, higher consumer and business confidence, and renewed productivity growth. So I continue to believe that growth will become firmly established in the course of 1992.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

26. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has for a realignment of currencies within the exchange rate mechanism.

Mr. Dorrell: None.

Balance of Payments

27. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the balance of payments.

Mr. Nelson: United Kingdom exports are at record levels.

Taxation, West Midlands

Mr. Burden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the proportion of income currently paid in tax by average income families in the west midlands.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is not available.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many applications the Bank of England as now received for compensation under the deposit protection scheme from former depositors of Bank of Credit and Commerce International; if he will list the amount claimed in monetary bands; how many claims are still with the liquidators of BCCI; and what is the current backlog at (a) the Bank of England, and (b) the liquidators.

Mr. Nelson: By 1 July 1992 the Deposit Protection Board had received some 15,600 claims for compensation under the deposit protection scheme from former depositors of BCCI. The board does not maintain an analysis of these claims by monetary bands. On that date approximately 2,900 of these claims had been settled; another 1,800 were in the process of being settled and further clarification was being sought from depositors on another 500 claims. The remaining claim forms are currently awaiting clearance by the liquidators, once proof of debt forms have been received.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received concerning the Bank of Credit and Commerce International from (a) hon. Members and (b) members of the public.

Mr. Nelson: My Treasury colleagues and I have received some 17 letters on BCCI from hon. Members this year and some further 50 from members of the public.

Public Sector Undertakings

Mr. Conway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for the Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) on 5 June, Official Report, column 652, if he will list all those other concerns or undertakings which operate under public sector management.

Mr. Nelson: Sections four and six of the "Statistical Supplement to the 1991 Autumn Statement"—Cm 1920—give details of the nationalised industries and other public corporations.

VAT (Hoteliers)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has during the EC presidency to call for a study of the avoidance of VAT luxury rates by hoteliers in the EC member states.

Sir John Cope: I have no such plans. It would be for the Commission to propose such a study if it is required.

VAT (Local Government)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those EC member states where local government, or its equivalent, can recoup VAT.

Sir John Cope: Article 4(5) of the EC sixth VAT directive allows member states not to treat local authorities as taxable persons in respect of those activities in which they engage as public authorities.

There are special provisions in United Kingdom law that permit local authorities to reclaim VAT on activities which they perform as public authorities.

I have no information on how other member states implement this provision.

Hospital Volunteer Drivers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will reconsider his decision to tax hospital car service volunteer drivers' mileage allowances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The position in law is that motor mileage allowances paid to individuals, whether employees or volunteer drivers, who use a car on health service business are liable to income tax if, and only if, the allowances exceed the costs of running and maintaining the car for health service driving and so result in a profit.

While I am very much aware of the important and valuable service provided by volunteer drivers, I am not persuaded that there is a case for amending the law to exempt them from tax on any profits on their mileage allowances. But, as the hon. Member may be aware, it has been decided to phase in the arrangements which were introduced last year for collecting tax on these allowances. For the period from 6 October 1991 to 5 April 1993 only one quarter of the profit element will be taxed; for the tax year 1993-94, one half of the profit will be taxed; and for the tax year 1994-95 three quarters of the profit will be taxed. Tax will not be payable on the full amount of the profit element until 1995-96.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the exchange rate.

Mr. Nelson: The Government remain firmly committed to sterling's membership of the ERM and to its moving in due course to the narrow band at the current central rate of DM2·95.

Interest Rates

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a further statement on his policy regarding interest rates.

Mr. Nelson: Interest rates will continue to be set to keep sterling within its ERM band and to bear down on inflation.

Investment Management Regulatory Organisation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the Prime Minister's oral answer to the right hon. Member for Islwyn (Mr. Kinnock) of 30 June, Official Report, column 709, if he will make it his policy that so much of the content of the IMRO report as is to be published under Her Majesty's Government's auspices is published before 16 July.

Mr. Lamont: The Securities and Investment Board—SIB—has today published the summary of conclusions and findings of IMRO's review of its regulation of Maxwell companies—including Bishopsgate Investment Management Ltd.—BIM—and London and Bishopsgate

International Investment Management plc—LBI. The SIB is also publishing its assessment of its own and IMRO's performance in this affair and the action both the SIB and IMRO are taking to rectify the shortcomings identified. The SIB's assessment concludes that there were serious deficiencies in the supervision by IMRO of BIM and LBI. I am placing a copy of the SIB's statement in the Library of the House.

The Maxwell affair was wholly exceptional—the vast majority of pension funds have served their members well. Moreover, the IMRO review covers a relatively limited part of the Maxwell story. Under the Financial Services Act, IMRO's role in supervising pension funds was to regulate and authorise pension fund managers. IMRO was not, and is not, responsible for ensuring that pension fund trustees respect their wider obligations under trust law. Moreover, effective regulation must in the final analysis involve the active co-operation of the private sector, including professional advisers, financial institutions and others, all of whom have their own responsibilities.

None the less, in the Government's view the shortcomings identified in the SIB's assessment are of very serious concern. The SIB and IMRO are undertaking a number of actions, detailed in the SIB's assessment, to ensure more effective regulation in future.

IMRO's performance also raises questions about the SIB's monitoring of IMRO and its general oversight of the self-regulatory organisations under the Financial Services Act. I have, therefore, asked Andrew Large, the SIB's new chairman, to conduct his own review of how the SIB carries out its regulatory responsibilities.

I have also discussed with the chairman of the SIB the need to strengthen the implementation in practice of regulatory standards. I am confident that he fully appreciates the urgency and importance of his task and I have asked him to keep me closely in touch with progress on the further work, reviews and improvements that are now in hand.

I have also looked into the recent allegations that IMRO warned the Government that it could not do its job properly because of problems over the relationship between the Financial Services Act regime and trust law. Neither the SIB nor I have found any evidence to substantiate these allegations. IMRO and the SIB made representations to the DTI over a number of years about the legal uncertainty they believed was created by the interaction of the Financial Services Act and trust law. However, there was no suggestion that this uncertainty posed a threat to investor protection. And the SIB's conclusion is that neither legal uncertainties created by the relationship between the Financial Services Act and trust law nor the existence of IMRO's special occupational pensions scheme regime made any material difference to IMRO's regulation of the Maxwell pension fund companies.

No regulator and no system of regulation can guarantee that all fraud will be prevented or identified. But the Government are determined that all the lessons of the Maxwell affair, in its many aspects, must be learned and implemented. I will be assessing in detail over the coming months the effectiveness of the steps already taken by the SIB and IMRO, the additional action now proposed, and the outcome of the SIB's further reviews. I shall then report back to the House.

Pensions

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those EC member states who pay their local government employees, or the equivalent, index linked inflation-proofed pensions.

Mr. Robin Squire: I have been asked to reply.

In the United Kingdom, index linked pensions are available to former local government employees who have contributed to public service pensions schemes. Information is not available on a comparable basis for other EC member states.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

County Courts, Northern Ireland

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether he has any proposal to increase judicial and other county court manpower and improve equipment and county court premises following the increase in the limit of the county court jurisdiction in Northern Ireland.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor has announced his intention to increase the current financial limits on the general civil jurisdiction of the county courts in Northern Ireland. This will initially be achieved by an increase to £10,000—from £5,000—in November 1992, with a further increase to £15,000 in September 1993. In determining the new jurisdictional levels, the Lord Chancellor has given careful consideration to the ability of the county courts to cope with any increased workload resulting from the increase and is satisfied that the county courts have sufficient capacity and resources to cope with the increased volume of business. At the same time, the Lord Chancellor recognises the need to continue to keep the position under review to ensure that the county court system in Northern Ireland is adequately resourced and equipped.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals he has for a general reform of county court rules in Northern Ireland; and when he expects such a review to be completed.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The regulation of the procedures in the county courts in Northern Ireland is a matter for the County Court Rules Committee established under article 46 of the County Courts (Northern Ireland) Order 1980. The Lord Chancellor is aware, however, that the rules committee intends to carry out a wide ranging review of county court procedure to determine ways in which the current arrangements might be improved.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether he proposes to replace the present periodic county court sittings in Northern Ireland with a system of continuous sitting along the lines current in the Northern Ireland High Court.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The present arrangements for periodic sittings of the county court in Northern Ireland have generally worked in a satisfactory manner. The Lord Chancellor is conscious, however, that a system of continuous sittings may have some advantages and will wish to explore alternative methods of entry and listing of county court actions. Accordingly the Lord Chancellor's officials in Northern Ireland will be examining, in consultation with the County Court Rules Committee and interested parties in Northern Ireland, the possibility of introducing a continuous listings system.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) whether he will introduce automatic discovery and disclosure of medical reports in personal injury actions in the county court in Northern Ireland;

(2) whether he intends to introduce into the county court in Northern Ireland a procedure for summary judgment analogous to order 14 procedure in the High Court in Northern Ireland.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The revision of county court procedures in Northern Ireland is primarily the responsibility of the rules committee established under article 46 of the County Courts (Northern Ireland) Order 1980. It is understood that further consideration of the present procedures on discovery of documents, exchange of medical and other expert evidence, and procedures for obtaining summary judgment will form part of the rules committee's review referred to in my earlier answer.

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many different types of originating process exist in the county court in Northern Ireland; and what proposals there are to reduce the number thereof.

Mr. John M.Taylor: There are currently three basic means of initiating proceedings in the county courts in Northern Ireland; by civil bill, by petition and by notice of application. There are, however, five types of civil bill—ordinary, equity, ejectment, default and summary civil bills. As explained in previous answers, the forms of originating process to be employed in the county courts are determined by the County Court Rules Committee. It may be that some reduction in the number of types of originating process will be effected by the rules committee as a result of the wider review of county court procedures mentioned in the answer to an earlier question.

Appeal Hearings (Compensation)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will introduce a scheme of compensation for legal costs incurred in abortive appeal hearings where the court service or Government Departments are responsible for delays.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Department is prepared to consider claims for compensation where loss is sustained through maladministration by court officers in matters for which the Lord Chancellor is responsible.

Where loss is sustained as a result of the actions of one of the parties or of another Government Department it is open to the party who has sustained the loss to apply for an order for costs in cases where it is appropriate to do so.

Mr. Mohammed Khan

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what steps he is taking to provide compensation to Mr. Mohammed Khan in respect of abortive costs incurred in an immigration appeal hearing on 20 December 1991.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I regret that I cannot consider payment of compensation in this case as there was no mistake or failing by the immigration appellate authorities.

Public Record Office

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will set out those matters in regard to the Public Record Office for which he will in future answer parliamentary questions by referring the matter to the Keeper, following the establishment of the Public Record Office as an executive agency.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Government's policy on answering questions on agency matters was most recently set out in the Government's reply to the Treasury and Civil Service Committee's 1991 report on the next steps initiative—Cm 1761—which said:

"In normal circumstances the source of the reply should follow the allocation of responsibilities as between the Secretary of State and the Chief Executive in the Agency's framework document; but in all cases the decision on who will respond rests with the Minister."

The Lord Chancellor will be following this policy with regard to the Public Record Office. Copies of the Public Record Office's framework document have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Expert Witnesses

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much notice is given to expert witnesses attending cases at the Crown court.

Mr. John M. Taylor: It is the responsibility of the prosecution and defence, and not the court, to notify witnesses of the date their attendance is required. The period of notice differs from case to case according to the circumstances of the case. However, those responsible for listing in the Crown court are aware of the difficulties faced by expert witnesses and, wherever possible, seek to give the parties as much notice of trial dates as they are able. Fixed dates for trial are often requested in cases involving expert witnesses, and such requests are acceded to wherever practicable.

ENVIRONMENT

Building Temperatures

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 10 June, Official Report, columns 187-88 what publicity there has been for S.I. No. 1013 (1980) to the heating and ventilation industry, owners of non-residential buildings and trades unions; what inspections are carried out to ensure compliance with statutory instrument; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Reference to the statutory maximum legal heating limit of 19 C is included in the EEO's publication "Energy Efficiency in Buildings (Offices)." No inspections are carried out to ensure compliance with SI No. 1013. The Energy Efficiency Office encourages consumers to take cost-effective energy efficiency measures by providing independent and authoritative advice through a range of initiatives and programmes.

Departmental Contracts

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all contracts to advise his Department within the last two years let by single tender action; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The following contracts are recorded as having been let to consultants by single tender action in the last two financial years:

Consultant(s)	Subject of consultancy
Financial year 1990-91
Action Resource Centre	Private sector secondments to City Action Teams
Almondhall Computer Staff	Business model: Planning Inspectorate
BDO Binder Hamlyn	Grant Redemption Fund

The Department's policy is to appoint consultants by single tender where they have unique experience or expertise relevant to the subject matter, or—exceptionally—where there is overriding urgency to let a contract without a tender process.

Tree Preservation Orders

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of reported breaches of tree preservation orders for each year since 1982; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: It is a criminal offence under section 102 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 to contravene a tree preservation order. The number of prosecutions for each year since 1982 are as follows:

	Number
1982	42
1983	54
1984	71
1985	20
1986	56
1987	44
1988	57

	Number
1989	72
1990	55

Statistics are not yet available for the situation post-1990 where similar provisions are contained in section 210 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990.

Local Authorities (Operating Companies)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the operating companies for services provided by each county and district authority, together with the number of directors appointed by each authority, their percentage voting power and the amount of equity retained by each authority in each company.

Mr. Robin Squire: Such information is not held centrally.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households in the United Kingdom qualify for grant aid under the home energy efficiency scheme; how many houses have been improved under the scheme since its inception; and if he will give a breakdown for Scotland, England, Wales and Northern Ireland.

Mr. Maclean: In order to be eligible for a grant under the Home Energy Efficiency Scheme (HEES), an applicant or his or her spouse must be in receipt of one of five passportable benefits: housing benefit, income support, family credit, community charge benefit and disability working allowance. In addition, his or her property must meet certain criteria concerning existing levels of insulation and receipt of a grant for similar work under previous schemes. Data on numbers of households eligible are not available.

Since the inception of the scheme on 1 January 1991, 208,055 homes have benefited from HEES grant; of these 155,776 were in England, 39,949 in Scotland and 12,330 in Wales. The scheme does not operate in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses in the network installer area which contains the constituency of Banff and Buchan have been improved under the home energy efficiency scheme since the scheme's inception.

Mr. Maclean: Within the network installer area which contains the hon. Member's constituency, 2,950 homes have benefited from HEES grant since 1 January 1991.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by local authority area the proportions of local authority finance derived from revenue support grant, specific grant, non-domestic rate income and poll tax for 1992-93.

Mr. Redwood: I am arranging for the available information to be placed in the Library of the House, together with the amount of revenue support grant, special grants, and redistributed non-domestic rate income paid per adult to each authority.

Share Lending

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he has received any advice from the Bank of England on the practice of share lending by local authority superannuation funds;

(2) if he will amend the superannuation regulations relating to the pension funds of local authorities in order to clarify the vires of share lending.

Mr. Robin Squire: Share lending is among the issues relating to investments under the local government superannuation scheme which are the subject of regular discussions between my Department, the local authority associations and other interested parties, including the Bank of England.

Public Analyst Laboratories

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to make available additional resources to public analyst laboratories to support their accreditation under the national measurement accreditation service—NAMAS—quality control scheme and to assist in the implementation of the in-service training required under NAMAS.

Mr. Maclean: All analytical laboratories should have systems for ensuring the quality of their results. The Government have recognised this by encouraging the setting up of NAMAS. It is not for the Government to subside any additional costs to laboratories of NAMAS accreditation. Such costs should be recovered in charges to their customers who benefit in terms of the quality and the reliability of the analyses carried out for them.

Aggregates

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to revise the structure of the regional aggregates working parties to include representation by elected members of mineral planning authorities and third-party interests.

Mr. Baldry: I will consider membership of the regional aggregates working parties when the present review of mineral planning guidance note 6 is complete.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a summary of the views expressed to his Department on the national aggregates demand forecasts by the regional aggregates working parties in the regional commentaries.

Mr. Baldry: A summary of the views expressed by the regional aggregates working parties will be made available when the revised draft guidelines are published for public consultation.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new national forecasts of aggregates demand have been prepared for his Department since the publication of the document "Guidelines for Aggregates Provision in England and Wales Review of MPG6"; whether they will be circulated to the regional aggregates working parties for comment; whether they will be published for public comment; and whether they will be used in the preparation of a revised mineral planning guidance note 6.

Mr. Baldry: New forecasts of aggregates demand have not yet been finalised by the independent consultants. I shall consider whether they should be circulated when they are available.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations were made to him by the regional aggregates working parties on the environmental implications of the national aggregates demand forecast published by his Department.

Mr. Baldry: The views of the regional aggregates working parties on the environmental implications of the demand forecast were published earlier this year in their regional commentaries. These views will be taken into account by the Department in the preparation of the revised draft guidelines.

Mineral Planning Guidance

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects drafts of mineral planning guidance note 1 and mineral planning guidance note 6 to be published for public comment.

Mr. Baldry: It is hoped that drafts of the revised mineral planning guidance notes 1 and 6 will be published for public consultation by the end of this year.

Council Housing Investment

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has reached conclusions following his recent consultation exercise on the development of the local authority housing investment programme process.

Mr. Howard: On 21 May, my Department launched a major consultation exercise on the further development of the local authority housing investment programme—HIP—process. The proposals which we have put forward build on the measures begun last year by seeking to achieve better value for the money spent through housing capital programmes.

The consultation paper made proposals in four broad areas: on the preparation of housing strategies by local authorities, and the co-ordination at area level of decisions on the initial allocation of Housing Corporation funding with local authorities' housing strategies; on the further development of recent trends in our approach to the allocation of all-purpose housing annual capital guideline—ACG—resources within the HIP process; on the development of the system of forward indications of housing ACGs; and on the further development of recent trends in the approach we have taken to the advance allocation of specified capital grant—SCG—resources for private sector renewal.

During the consultation period, we agreed to a request from the local authority associations that discussions should continue after the formal close of the consultation exercise on the longer-term proposals. We have therefore taken decisions at this stage only on matters relevant to the arrangements for the 1993-94 HIP round.

We have received a total of 211 responses, including material from the four relevant local authority associations, the Institute of Housing, the National Federation of Housing Associations, 161 local authorities and 29 housing associations. Discussions have also taken place with the Housing Corporation.

After considering and taking in to account the representations which have been made, I have decided to invite authorities to prepare comprehensive housing strategies for the 1993-94 HIP round as described in the consultation paper. This will involve authorities in preparing strategies which cover the housing needs and resources of their areas over a three-year period, set in the context of a realistic assessment of priorities and proposals. My Department will issue guidelines to authorities very shortly which will provide further details.

We will carry forward the new arrangements made last year to place emphasis on the efficiency and effectiveness of authorities in our decisions on the allocation of HIP resources. This will help ensure that best value for money is obtained from capital resources for social housing and that there are incentives for authorities to improve their performance as landlords and enablers.

I have also decided to proceed with our proposals to draw together, on to the same timetable for decision making, both the HIP process, which applies to local authorities, and the approved development programme—ADP—process which is used for the allocation of funds through the Housing Corporation to housing associations. The principle of co-ordinating these two funding streams, in the context of a single housing strategy, met with almost universal support; discussions will continue with interested parties on the practical details of implementation.

Last year, Housing Ministers attended a number of successful presentations from local authorities, based on their housing strategies and HIP proposals. These occasions heightened the awareness and involvement of tenants and other local people in the HIP round, and pointed to the scope for partnership between local authorities, the private sector, and the Housing Corporation and housing associations in the provision of social housing. I have decided to continue this initiative during the coming year, and the Minister for Housing and Planning has written today to the leaders of 33 authorities inviting their authorities to give presentations to Housing Ministers during the autumn. A list of the authorities concerned has been placed in the Library and letters have been sent to local Members.

A copy of a commentary paper on the responses to the consultation exercise has been placed in the Libraries of the House. I intend to report back to the House once the remaining decisions have been taken later this year.

Livestock

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to support (a) a world watch system on indigenous livestock breeds, (b) the strengthening of the animal genetic resources data bank and (c) the completion of the system of regional animal gene banks.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I have been asked to reply.

As members of the UN Food and Agricultural Organisation and contributors to its regular programme budget, the United Kingdom already supports these three initiatives. Under the budget for 1992-93 which was agreed at the last meeting of the FAO conference in 1991, over $1 million was allocated to the sub-programme on animal genetic resources from which these programmes are funded.

Urban Development Areas

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will listt for each local authority which contains an urban development area the level of (a) urban programmes, (b) housing investment programmes and (c) derelict land grant for each year from 1987-88 at current prices and at 1987-88 prices.

Mr. Robin Squire [holding answer 6 July 1992]: Details of expenditure at outturn prices by local authority and financial year from 1987-88 onwards are listed in the table. To convert into 1987-88 constant prices, the 1988-89 figures should be multiplied by 0·93261, the 1989-90 ones by 0·87501, 1990-91 by 0·80877 and 1991-92 by 0·75586.

Stray Dogs

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the measures taken by the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals in Leeds to control stray dogs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 30 June 1992]: None.

Housing

Sir Paul Beresford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he proposes to determine the provision for new housing to be made in the new regional planning guidance for London and the south east.

Mr. Howard: I have today placed in the Library of the House a copy of a letter which I have sent to the chairman of SERPLAN, the London and South East regional planning conference. SERPLAN is invited to put forward proposals for the allocation of future provision for new housing between London and the counties of the south east. These proposals should be based on a regional total rate of 57,000 additional dwellings per year, over the period 1991 to 2011. I will take account of SERPLAN's proposals, together with any other views on these matters which are put to my Department, in deciding the regional housing provision to be included in the draft new regional planning guidance for the south east. The draft will then be published for consultation in due course.

Botanical Gardens

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will state in (a) cash terms and (b) at 1991 prices the funding provided from Her Majesty's Government to (i) Kew and (ii) Edinburgh botanic gardens; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply.

The planned grant in aid provision for The Royal Botanic gardens, Kew for 1992-93 is £14·3 million. At 1991-92 prices this is equivalent to £13·6 million.

Responsibility for the Royal Botanic gardens at Edinburgh rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland but I am advised that the planned 1992-93 grant in aid provision for the Edinburgh Garden is £5·4 million. At 1991-92 prices this is equivalent to £5·1 million.

Lead Water Pipes

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for assisting households on low incomes with the costs of replacing lead water supply pipes.

Sir George Young: Further to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo) to my then hon. Friend the Member for Hyndburn (Mr. Hargreaves) on 19 February 1992, Official Report, column 201, following consultation with interested bodies, my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales and I have today announced the extension of minor works assistance, under the provisions of part VIII of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. Local housing authorities are to be given wider scope in providing discretionary assistance to meet the cost of replacing lead pipes used to supply drinking or cooking water to all resident owner-occupiers or tenants on income-related benefits. The new measures which come into force on 1 September 1992 will enable authorities to respond speedily and effectively with discretionary help while targeting resources on those least able to meet the cost of replacement.

SCOTLAND

Fisheries Protection

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what resources in terms of (a) personnel, (b) expenditure and (c) numbers of vessels, have been deployed in the fisheries protection service of Scottish waters for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 8 July 1992]: The information requested for those fisheries protection vessels directly operated by the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency for the years 1985-86 to 1991-92 is set out in the table. Information for previous years is not readily available in this form.

EDUCATION

London School of Economics

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the average cost of tuition per year for a student from outside the European Community to attend the London School of Economics; what is the number of such students who attended the LSE last year; and what are the comparable figures for the previous two years.

Mr. Forman: Information about the average cost of tuition fees for overseas students from outside the European Community is not held centrally. The numbers of overseas students from outside the EC who attended the LSE in the last three available years, are as follows:

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement concerning the possible relocation of the London School of Economics to the county hall building.

Mr. Forman: The disposal of county hall is primarily a matter for the London Residuary Body and for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. I have nothing to add to what my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment said on the matter during the Adjournment debate on 26 June, Official Report, columns 555-62.

Full-time Education

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of children are in full-time education in the United Kingdom and each of the other EC states.

Mr. Forth: The available data are shown in tables AA and BB of the Department's publication "Education Statistics for the United Kingdom 1991 edition", copies of which are in the Library.

Green Minister

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will outline the priorities for future action of the green Minister in his Department (a) over the next year and (b) over this Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I have this responsibility in the Department: we will continue to pursue a number of initiatives relevant to environmental matters both during this year and for the rest of the parliamentary Session.

These will include the development of environmental education as a cross-curricular theme in schools, which will be reflected in in-service training.

Professor Toyne's expert committee on environmental education within further and higher education will report in the autumn, and we shall be considering how best its recommendations might be followed up. We shall also foster the development of energy efficiency initiatives in schools and colleges.

The Department's own accommodation and purchasing policies reflect its concern for green issues. A strategy is being prepared and will be in place at the end of the year. The Department continues to monitor the scope for recycling glass, paper and plastics and the reuse of cartridges for machinery replenishment.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Foxes

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department has carried out on the impact of predation of farm stock by foxes.

Mr. Curry: None.

Bananas

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to give effect to the Lomé convention provisions requiring bananas from the African, Caribbean and Pacific states to gain access to United Kingdom and EC markets without being severely disadvantaged by banana imports from Latin American producers.

Mr. Curry: The United Kingdom's current banana market arrangements are designed to ensure preferential access for our traditional suppliers in African, Caribbean and Pacific states. Formal Commission proposals are expected shortly for harmonised EC arrangements to complete the single market, to replace these and other national schemes. The Government are determined to ensure that these new arrangements will fully meet our Lomé convention obligations, while being compatible with a successful conclusion to the GATT Uruguay round negotiations.

Seafish Industry

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the total number of fishermen involved in the United Kingdom seafish industry.

Mr. Curry: In 1990 there were some 17,000 fishermen regularly employed and some 5,000 partially employed.

Fish Licences

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many British fish licences are issued directly to owners in Spain and Holland by his Department.

Mr. Curry: None.

Green Minister

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will outline the priorities for future action of the green Minister in his Department (a) over the next year and (b) over this Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: As the Department's green Minister, I will ensure that environmental considerations are taken into account in all its policies and spending programmes and that the relevant commitments in the Government's White Paper "This Common Inheritance" and subsequent anniversary report are followed up.

Slaughterers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the number of licensed slaughterers' or knackers' yards in each year since 1987.

Mr. Soames: All abattoirs and knackers' yards currently operate under licences granted by local authorities. With the exception of abattoirs approved for intra-Community trade, records are not maintained centrally on the status of individual premises. However, annual statistics derived from state veterinary service visits produce the following approximate figures for abattoirs in England and Wales:

Year	Number
1987	905
1988	855
1989	780
1990	700
1991	640

In the case of knackers' yards, it is estimated that in 1990 there were approximately 120 operating in England and Wales, and that currently there are 107.

Plant Health and Pesticides HQ

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to announce a decision on the choice of site in York for the plant health and pesticides headquarters before 16 July; and what is the scheduled operational date of the new headquarters.

Mr. Gummer: I have nothing to add to the reply given on this matter on 8 June 1992, Official Report, column 13.

Banned Farm Produce

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list by location, the number of farms that have been banned by his Department from supplying farm produce from their premises to the public because of the possibility of toxic chemicals entering the food chain; what review he is currently carrying out to safeguard the farmers' livelihood; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: One farm, near Bolsover in Derbyshire, is subject to an order, under part I of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 because it is contaminated with dioxins to an unacceptable degree. Following the placing of restrictions the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service has given free advice to the farmer on his future farming options. The Government policy with regard to compensation which applies in cases of this nature is that it is the polluter who must pay.

Cockles

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his letter to the hon. Member for Gower on 24 June, Ref. 55919, regarding the treatment processes for cockles, if he will publish the date when he submitted for approval the Torry process to the EC's standing veterinary committee.

Mr. Curry: We have not at present submitted an application to the Standing Veterinary Committee for the approval of any specific heat treatment. We are formulating for early submission an application covering the use of processes which embody the principle of a minimum temperature of 90 deg C maintained for at least 90 seconds, the essential feature of the Torry process.

Mink

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he intends to allow the Mink Keeping Order 1987 to lapse; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The Mink (Keeping) Order 1987 expires on 31 December 1992. A consultation exercise will take place this summer to seek the views of interested organisations on future arrangements for the secure keeping of mink. Following this, the Government will decide whether to make a new order.

Set-aside

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much money was paid in set-aside payments in 1991 and 1992; how many individual payments were made; what was the average size of the payment and the largest payment made; and what were the numbers of payments in each British county.

Mr. Curry: The set-aside scheme year runs from 1 October to 30 September. Payments are normally made in arrears in the last quarter of the calendar year, although for various reasons a small number of payments cannot be made until early in the following year.

Total set-aside payments in respect of England in the set-aside scheme years 1989-90 and 1990-91 are set out in the tables.

Sensitive Area Payments

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much money in total was paid in environmentally sensitive area payments in 1991 and 1992; what was the average payment to recipients; how many recipients there were; and what was the largest payment to a recipient.

Mr. Curry: The total cost of payments under the ESA scheme in England for the financial years 1990-91 and 1991-92 was £7,459,000 and £8,005,000 respectively. There were 2,926 agreements in 1990-91 and 3,105 agreements in 1991-92 giving an average payment of £2,549 and £2,578 in each year. The largest single payment was £185,139·82.

EMPLOYMENT

Disabled Workers

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what plans there are for improving the training of non-specialist staff in her Department, with particular reference to training involving the disability organisations;

(2) what quality standards have been developed for monitoring the use of outside agencies for the assessment, counselling and rehabilitation of disabled workers; which interested organisations have been consulted on this matter; and will such standards be made available to the House.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the percentage unemployed for the United Kingdom, and for each standard region, on the broad and narrow definitions for April 1984, November 1984, April 1990, April 1992 and May 1992.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Economic Activity Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the travel-to-work areas, or smallest area available, concerning the 35 per cent. of United Kingdom population with the lowest economic activity rates according to 1981 census data and for June 1984, June 1990 and the latest available date with the areas with the lowest economic activity rates listed first; and if she will distinguish between the 15 per cent. of population in areas with the lowest economic activity rate and the 20 per cent. of population with the next lowest activity rates.

Mr. McLoughlin: The latest available data on economic activity rates for travel-to-work areas are from the 1981 census of population. These can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Emergency Standby Vessels

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the answer from the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Transport of 30 June, Official Report, column 451, what contingency plans she has developed or is considering for the provision of adequate safeguards for offshore installations should be a substantial proportion of the emergency standby vessels currently under assessment be taken out of service by their owners; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Health and Safety Executive has made it clear to the industry that it is the responsibility of each individual operator to ensure that there is adequate standby vessel cover available at all times to provide the necessary safeguards. The code of practice on standby vessels which was published last July and the deadlines set out in it were prepared in full consultation with the owners and operators of standby vessels; and the HSE considers that the final deadline for necessary improvements is achievable. The HSE is continuing to monitor the situation.

Employment Training

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in each year since employment training started, what has been the cost of ET; what contribution has been made by the European social fund; and what would have been the cost of trainees' entitlement to social security benefits.

Mr. McLoughlin: The table shows the expenditure on ET since it began and estimated expenditure on that part of the trainee allowances equivalent to previous entitlement to social security benefit. The contribution made to employment training by the European social fund in 1989 was £72 million, in 1990 £126 million and in 1991 £157 million.

Employment training

£ million

	Total expenditure	Estimated benefit equivalent element of trainee allowances
1988-89[1]	425	117
1989-90	1,107	425
1990-91	1,076	425
1991-92[2]	844	337
1992-93[3]	807	318

[1] ET began in September 1988. Transitional arrangements applied to participants previously on wages on the community programme.
[2] Provisional outturn expenditure.
[3] Planned expenditure.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how European social fund money has been distributed in each year since employment training started to (a) ET, (b) youth training, (c) voluntary organisations, (d) local authorities and (e) other purposes.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Until the end of 1989, individual applications for European social fund support were submitted by a range of organisations which included Government, local authorities and voluntary organisations, for approval in Brussels.

Since 1990, when new regulations took effect, applications have been made to the Department of Employment for approval. The money is paid out to applicants in three tranches. Advance payments of 50 per cent. and a further 30 per cent. are normally available during the life of a project and a final claim of up to the last 20 per cent. is payable after accounts have been scrutinised.

Youth Training

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment by how much an employer would have to supplement the minimum youth training allowance to compensate for its loss of value through inflation; and what evidence she has as to the proportion of employers who are paying supplements of these amounts.

Mr. McLoughlin [holding answer 8 July 1992]: Supplements of £8·54 and £16·02 per week respectively would be needed to restore in real terms the value of the current YT minimum allowances of £29·50 for 16-year-olds and £35·00 for 17-year-olds and over to the levels when they were last changed.

The level of the YT allowance is a minimum level and employers, providers and training and enterprise councils are free to arrange higher levels.

TRANSPORT

Antares

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will outline the circumstances of the loss of the fishing vessel Antares; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The marine accident investigation branch report on the loss of the fishing vessel Antares with the loss of four lives has been published today. The report deals with the collision between the trawler and the Trafalgar class submarine HMS Trenchant in Bute sound, north east of the Isle of Arran, in the early hours of 22 November 1990. The report finds that Antares foundered as a direct result of its net being snagged by Trenchant and that that was caused by a partial breakdown in both the structure and standards of watch keeping on board Trenchant following the completion of a command course exercise. The Ministry of Defence has admitted full liability for the accident.

The report makes eight recommendations which substantially reflect the findings of the Royal Navy's own board of inquiry, and the determination made by the sheriff principal following the fatal accident inquiry. The majority of the report recommendations have already, as a result of similar recommendations from the earlier inquiries, been accepted and implemented either in full or in part. Major changes have been made in submarine operating policy and procedures in order to improve the safety of fishing vessels, in particular the mandatory minimum separation between dived submarines and fishing vessels has been extended to 4,000 yards. Further changes are under consideration by MoD, in consultation with my Department and with the sub-group of its fishing industry safety group which was established specifically to consider submarine and fishing vessel safety issues. As part of this continuing work, the Government will consider any remaining actions which may need to be taken in the light of the MAIB report.

Aeroplane Crashes

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the number of aeroplane crashes in Wales last year; what were the comparable figures for the previous two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The safety data and analysis unit of the Civil Aviation Authority advises me that there were 15 reportable aircarft accidents in Wales in 1991. The comparable figures for 1990 and 1989 were nine and eight respectively.

Low Flying

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to require low-flying aircraft in rural areas to be equipped with silencers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: No.

Speed Traps

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of whether speed measuring cameras would have a greater effect on reducing driving speeds (a) if they are covertly placed or (b) if they are preceded by warning signs.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Studies are currently being carried out to assess whether the use of area-wide signs to indicate the use of enforcement cameras increases driver compliance with speed limits.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will place warning signs in the areas where new speed measuring cameras are to be placed.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: This is a matter which my right hon. Friend will consider in the light of the current studies to assess the effectiveness of such signs in increasing driver compliance with speed limits.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what increase in fine income he expects as a result of the new speed measuring cameras.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The income from fines and fixed penalties will depend on factors such as the number of cameras deployed, their effectiveness in reducing speed, the number of suspected offenders and the proportion of them who are tried before a court rather than paying the fixed penalty. It is therefore not possible to give an estimate with any degree of accuracy.

Waterway Safety

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date he published the report by the Maritime Accident Investigation Branch into the Marchioness disaster; on what date he appointed the Hayes inquiry into safety on inland waterways; and on what date he expects to publish the report of the Hayes inquiry.

Mr. Norris: The marine accident investigation branch's final report into the collision between the passenger launch Marchioness and MV Bowbelle was published on 15 August 1991. The report's safety recommendations had previously been published separately on 24 July 1990.

On 20 December 1991, the Secretary of State for Transport appointed Mr. John W. Hayes, LLB, to head an inquiry into river safety. Mr. Hayes' report was published on 7 July 1992.

Road Accidents, Chelmsford

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many motor vehicle accidents there were in the Chelmsford local authority area in each of the last three available years; and how many deaths and how many personal injuries occurred.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The figures for the years 1989 to 1991 are as follows:

	1989	1990	1991
(1) Total accidents	832	716	615
(2) Casualties
(i) Fatal	16	16	18
(ii) Serious	208	166	106
(iii) Slight	947	829	726

M11

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to reject the proposed private sector plans for an extension of the M11 motorway; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I have decided after careful consideration that the Government cannot support the project by providing the very large sums of public money, of the order of £750 million, which the promoters are seeking.

I am determined to improve the road system on the eastern side of the country to promote the economic prosperity of all the areas which it serves. But I believe that our policy of upgrading the A1 to motorway standard and improving the roads linked to it will achieve this objective more effectively, give better value for money and will be more environmentally acceptable.

The roads programme now includes schemes for upgrading all those sections of A1 which are not already motorway at a cost of almost £1·5 billion. This programme also includes a number of other schemes to improve road links in the east, at a cost of almost a further £1 billion. The northern section of M11 is to be widened and the A604, which connects it to the A1, will also be upgraded to motorway. A45 and A47 are also due to be improved. We have given 100 per cent. grant towards the cost of building the A15 in Humberside, much of it as dual carriageway, most of the A15 between Lincoln and the Humber bridge has been trunked and we are dualling the A46, in recognition of the importance of this regional route. The programme also includes 12 schemes for improving A16 and A17, important routes through Lincolnshire. Hull and the Humber ports are already well served by M62/A63 and M180/M18 respectively: a new route from the Humber bridge to the A1079 trunk road has been built with Government grant aid, and six other improvements are planned for the existing A1079, A1237 and A19 trunk roads north from the Humber Bridge towards the north east.

I recognise the very considerable efforts which the promoters have devoted to this project. They are of course still free to pursue it if they wish as a privately financed one.

M25

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the estimated cost of his plans to widen the M25 Motorway at 1992 prices in respect of (a) the new six lanes between the M3 and M4 intersections and (b) an additional lane on the rest of its surface sections.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The proposals announced on 25 June for link roads between Junctions 12 and 15 are estimated to cost £144 million. Those announced last September for rapid widening to duel four lanes between junctions 5 and 28 will cost an estimated £625 million.

Rail Infrastructure Projects

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to ensure the use of cost-benefit analysis assessment in the evaluation of rail infrastructure projects.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to an answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Finchley (Mr. Booth) on 3 July 1992, Official Report, columns 733-34.

Green Minister

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will outline the priorities for future action of the green Minister in his Department (a) over the next year and (b) over this Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: Over the next year and beyond, I have many environmental priorities. For a start, I am devoting part of the Informal Transport Council on 16 and 17 July to a discussion on the Commission's Green Paper on Transport and the Environment. I shall continue the policy of giving strong emphasis to environmental aspects in the road programme. I shall work towards more environmentally acceptable standards for road vehicles. This I intend to do in collaboration with the European Community. I also want to see more traffic—both passengers and freight—transferred from road to rail. Our policy for involving the private sector in providing railway services will encourage this. And I shall support action to deal with traffic congestion and pollution in urban areas such as parking controls and other traffic restraint measures as well as encouraging the use of buses and safer cycling.

Air-sea Rescue

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he proposes any changes to the current arrangements for air-sea rescue in Kent, Sussex and Hampshire.

Mr. Norris: There are no current plans for the movement of the Coastguard helicopter from the Solent area. The MoD is responsible for the positioning of military aircraft having regard to agreed DTp/MoD criteria for helicopter civil search and rescue cover around the United Kingdom.

To date, my Department has not been informed by MOD of any proposed changes which would affect such criteria.

British Rail

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what firms are advising him on the privatisation of British Rail.

Mr. Freeman: Samuel Montagu provides merchant bank advice; Coopers and Lybrand advises on the liberalisation of access to the railway network; and Debenham Tewson Chinnocks advises on stations.

Radioactive Substances

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representation the United Kingdom has on the special permanent working party for the transport of radioactive substances set up by the European Commission this year; and what plans he has to review the arrangements for the transport of radioactive materials within, into and from the European Community during his presidency of the European Transport Council.

Mr. Norris: The United Kingdom is represented on the special working group on the safe transport of radioactive material, which has been meeting since 1982, by officials from the Department's radioactive materials transport division.

During the United Kingdom Presidency the main work of my Department on the transport of radioactive material worldwide will be continued participation in the work of the International Atomic Energy Agency, with which the Community has close links.

WALES

Countryside Stewardship Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his proposals for Tir Cymen.

Sir Wyn Roberts: A countryside stewardship scheme in Wales, to be called Tir Cymen, has been developed by the Countryside Council for Wales and an announcement regarding its introduction will be made shortly.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications he has received for participation in the countryside stewardship programme from farmers in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The countryside stewardship scheme run by the Countryside Commission in England is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. A countryside stewardship scheme in Wales, to be called Tir Cymen, has been developed by the Countryside Council for Wales and an announcement regarding its introduction will be made shortly.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were in employment in each county in (a) 1978 and (b) 1989; and how many were in employment in Cardiff, Swansea, Camarthen, Llanelli, Newport, Bangor and Wrexham (i) in 1978 and (ii) in 1989.

Mr. David Hunt: Numbers of employees in employment are shown in the following tables:

County	[1] 1978	1989

Household Waste

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of household waste is currently recycled by each district council in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally although work is in hand nationally to establish better data. Data on recycling will also be available from the plans district councils are preparing under section 49 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Road Accident Victims

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish an estimated figure for the total number of working years lost in Wales as a result of road accident fatalities in each of last five years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Information allowing such an estimate to be made is not collected centrally.

Toxic Shock Syndrome

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy concerning toxic shock syndrome; and what initiatives he proposes concerning toxic shock syndrome.

Mr. David Hunt: Toxic shock syndrome (TSS) is a rare but very unpleasant condition which is believed to be caused by toxin-producing strains of the bacterium Staphylococcus Aureus. About 50 per cent. of all cases occur in women during menstruation, but non-menstrual cases occur in association with abscesses, osteomyelitis, wound infections and pneumonia—i.e. any severe infections. It can therefore also affect men, children and non-menstruating women. Management of the condition is a matter for clinical judgment.

Information received from the public health laboratory service suggests that in recent years there have been, on average, one or two deaths a year from TSS associated with tampon use in the United Kingdom. Government action has been focused on cases relating to tampon usage as the prime identifiable cause of TSS.

In 1984 the Department of Trade and Industry and the sanitary protection industry set up a voluntary prior notification scheme for menstrual tampons. This scheme applies to the entire manufactured product, including the instructions for use. Under the scheme, manufacturers submit to the Government any new tampon to which there have been significant changes in the design or materials, and toxicologists from the Department of Health scrutinise them to decide whether they pose a health hazard. The manufacturers' own code of practice also covers manufacturing standard quality assurance.

For the past decade, the instruction leaflet—included in every pack by tampon manufacturers—has contained information on TSS, advice on using the lowest level of absorbency required and on changing tampons frequently. It is likely that these simple precautions minimise the risk of TSS.

At the end of 1990 the industry, in agreement with the Department of Trade and Industry and the Department of Health, made some improvements to the labelling of tampon packages and the instruction leaflets. The principal modifications to pack statements were to add instructions to users to read and retain the leaflet, and clearer advice on absorbency selection. Fuller information on TSS, including what to do if symptoms occur, was also put into the leaflet.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if it is his intention to choose a boundary for the new unitary authority based on Cardiff which to the west and north west follows or falls within the current South Glamorgan boundary.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave him on 6 July 1992.

Flood Damage

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give an estimate of the total cost of damage to agriculture in Wales due to flooding since 1 March; if he has any plans to improve facilities to prevent similar flooding in future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The information requested is not held centrally. Measures to improve flood protection in Wales are continually being undertaken where it is economic and technically appropriate to do so.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hectares in Wales are designated as environmentally sensitive areas; what is the number of farmers under this scheme and the total expenditure in 1991 under the scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is as follows:

ESA	Designated area (ha)	Number of current management agreements	Expenditure 1991-92 (£)
Lleyn peninsula	39,700	411	351,907
Cambrian mountains (including extension)	153,000	422	1,106,936
Total	192,700	833	1,458,843

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to extend further the environmentally sensitive areas scheme in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement I made on 22 June 1992 and decisions about any further expansion of the ESA scheme in Wales will be taken in the light of available resources.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of sites in Wales designated as sites of special scientific interest currently and for the previous two years; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is as follows:

Number of sites of special scientific interest

1990—769 (as at 31 March)
1991—816 (as at 31 March)
1992—841 (as at 31 May)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hectares in Wales are designated as sites of special scientific interest; what is that figure as a percentage of (a) farm land in Wales and (b) Wales as a whole; what is the percentage change in the number of sites of special scientific interest in hectares from 1982; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The information requested is as follows:

	1982	1992
Area of Wales covered by SSSI's (hectares)	167,518	200,896
Area of Wales coverd by SSSI's as a percentage of farm land	9·9	11·8
Area of Wales coverd by SSSI's as a percentage of total area	7·9	9·5

The increase in the number of hectares of Wales notified as sites of special scientific interest from 1982 to 1992 is therefore 19·9 per cent.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to increase the number of sites in Wales designated as sites of special scientific interest.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The responsibility for notifying sites of special scientific interest in the Principality rests with the Countryside Council for Wales. However, I understand that it has plans to designate more sites.

Miscarriages

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many miscarriages occurred in 1991 in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Wales attributable to smoking during pregnancies; what were the comparable figures for the previous two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not held centrally.

Power Failures

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what contingency plans exist to deal with the provision of electricity in Wales following power failures during violent storms; what plans he has to revise these; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The National Grid Company has contingency plans to restore supplies as quickly as practicable in the event of their loss during violent storms. these plans are regularly tested and reviewed.

In addition, both South Wales Electricity and Manweb are party to a national code of practice which provides for mutual assistance from other regional electricity companies during network problems caused by storms and other emergencies. The code is reviewed on an ongoing basis.

Hospital Treatment

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the estimated impact of the separate classification of tertiary referrals in hospitals as episodes of treatment on the total number of hospital in-patient treatments enumerated in national health service statistics in Wales; on what date tertiary referrals were first separately counted for statistical purposes; and what public announcement was made of the change.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Aggregate information on in-patient treatments in NHS hospitals in Wales continues to be collected as deaths and discharges from hospitals as in previous years.

A letter to district general managers DGM(90)123, announced that from 1 April 1991, data relating to individual patient episodes would record tertiary referrals and cross-specialty referrals separately. These data will be used to supply detailed disaggregated analyses of patients' episodes of care in hospitals relating to specific types of treatment, characteristics of patients, and categories of illness.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with fund-holding general practitioners concerning the introduction of separate accounting for tertiary referrals during hospital treatment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Guidance was issued in January 1991 on the handling of tertiary referrals. No indications have been received that further guidance is necessary. Fundholding general practitioners should specify in their contracts the arrangements for tertiary referrals to ensure that these are only made with their agreement. Where a referral is made without this agreement they are not liable for payment.

Health Authorities (Public Relations)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the South Glamorgan health authority concerning its public relations contract with Harrison Cowley; what level of expenditure is planned under this contract; which other health authorities in Wales have such contracts, with which public relations agencies and for what value; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I have discussed the public relations arrangements in place in South Glamorgan health authority with its chairman, though he has been congratulated on the professionalism with which his authority presented its waiting times policy to local people.

Responsibility for locally based public relations in the NHS rests firmly with individual district health authorities and family health services authorities. Details of the kind sought are therefore best obtained directly from the authorities themselves.

Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the discretionary limit for capital expenditure by the Cardiff Bay development corporation without reference to his Department; if he will list each of the projects above that limit submitted for evaluation to his Department in each year since 1987; and if he will give a summary of each evaluation.

Mr. David Hunt: Details of the various financial delegation thresholds for Cardiff Bay development corporation are set out in the following table. I will write to the hon. Gentleman, shortly, with a list of projects that exceed those thresholds. Details of the evaluation given to each project cannot be summarised without incurring disproportionate cost. A copy of my reply to the hon. Gentleman will be placed in the Library of the House.

Schedule of delegations to Cardiff Bay Development Corporation

Projects (including land acquisition)
Full delegation threshold	250,000
Partial delegation threshold	3,000,000
Consultancies
De minimis level (competitive tender not required)	3,000
Single tender level for urgent studies	15,000
Full consultancy delegation threshold	100,000
Administrative expenditure ("Project" items)
Delegation levels for administrative 'projects' before full project levels are introduced:
Initial administrative delegation level (prior to approval of full budget)	20,000
Interim administrative delegation level (after approval of full budget)	50,000
Computing or information technology expenditure
(i) Purchase of computer hardware (capital cost)	50,000
(ii) Bureau services (per annum)	10,000
(iii) Consultancies (per annum)	10,000
Proposals to incur computing expenditure above these levels have to be referred to the Department with full supporting information, including an appraisal of the strategic consideration.
Works contracts
De minimis level (competitive tender not required)	3,000
Single tender level for specialist of fixed price purchase	15,000
Value above which contracts must be advertised in the Official Journal (1 million ecu)	710,000
Write-offs and gifts
Following may be written off/given without prior reference to the Department
All cash losses, other than overpayments
Other losses not exceeding	1,000
Gifts not exceeding	500
—up to a total value in any one year of	10,000
Land disposal
Disposal on terms set out in the Notes for Guidance may be effected without prior reference to the Department providing the area involved does not exceed	5 ha

Employment Action

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to reduce the waiting time for the unemployed interested in applying for employment action programmes; and what special priority schemes approved for employment action he will allocate where length of unemployment qualification periods are shorter than the standard six months.

Mr. David Hunt: There are no proposals to change the general requirement that applicants for employment action should have been unemployed and in receipt of benefit for 26 weeks or more.

School Maintenance

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what statistics he has on the total school maintenance backlog for all the counties in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Responsibility for the repair and maintenance of school buildings rests with local education authorities and statistics on the maintenance backlog are not collected centrally.

Cadw

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what targets he has set for Cadw, Welsh Historic Monuments executive agency.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Cadw has been set the following key targets for 1992-93:

(i) To complete 90 per cent. of the approved conservation maintenance programme.

(ii) To promote the preservation of historic buildings and ancient monuments by completing 12 re-survey lists and 60 scheduling entries.

(iii) To resolve 75 per cent. of statutory cases within the target periods (28 days for listed building consent cases, 90 days for scheduled monument consent cases and 120 days for ad hoc listings).

(iv) To resolve 80 per cent. of grant applications within the target periods (18 weeks for Historic Buildings Council cases, six weeks for ancient monument cases and 12 weeks for civic initiatives (heritage) grant scheme cases); and to pay 90 per cent. of certified claims within six weeks of receipt.

(v) To raise Cadw's market share of the number of visitors to the top twenty heritage sites in Wales from 63·7 per cent. in 1991 to 65 per cent. in 1992.

(vi) To increase the average spend per visitor from 163 pence in 1991-92 to 175 pence in 1992-93.

(vii) To operate within allocated programme and running cost budgets.

(viii) To achieve an efficiency saving of 1·5 per cent. on gross running costs.

Full details of Cadw's performance against its targets for 1991-92 are contained in the agency's annual report, which will be published shortly.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Multiple Births

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the total numbers of (a) sets of (i) twins, (ii) triplets, (iii) guadruplets, (iv) quintuplets and (v) sextuplets born in Northern Ireland in each year from 1980 to 1991, (b) maternities in Northern Ireland in each year and (c) multiple births of each type in each year which were conceived as a result of (1) in vitro fertilisation, (2) gamete intra-fallopian transfer and (3) other forms of assisted conception.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is as follows:

Type	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991[1]

Ards Hospital

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the total expenditure at Ards hospital in each of the past five years; and how much in each year was for capital projects.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Capital works £	Total £
1986-87	118,753	7,521,157
1987-88	619,148	8,712,289
1988-89	359,464	9,155,789
1989-90	399,852	9,894,402
1990-91	665,474	11,044,410

Hospital Services

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated population within each of the district councils in the areas for which the Eastern Health and Social Services area board provides hospital services; and what were the corresponding figures five years ago.

Mr. Hanley: The most recent information, contained in the mid-year estimates of population, relates to 1990 and is as follows:

District council area	1987	1990
Ards	63,600	65,400
Belfast	303,800	295,100
Castlereagh	57,900	58,100
Down	56,400	57,700
Lisburn	92,900	98,700
North Down	70,700	72,600

Figures for 1991 will be based on data obtained from the 1991 census and will not be available until after publication of the census summary report in the autumn. I shall write to the right hon. Member when the figures are available and place a copy of the letter in the Library.

Terrorist Funding

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of the amount of money raised by terrorist sympathisers in north America and received in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mates: Although for obvious reasons I cannot be precise, we understand that somewhere between $$\frac{1}{2}$ million and $1 million is sent to Northern Ireland each year.

Airport Police

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what statutory protection exists for constables of the Northern Ireland Airports Authority from unfair dismissal; what statutory police federation exists to represent them; and what statutory restrictions exist on their entitlement to join a trade union.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 30 June 1992]: Persons employed in police service, or in any other capacity by virtue of which they have the powers or privileges of a constable are excluded from the unfair dismissal legislation. Accordingly, constables of the Northern Ireland Airports Authority have no statutory protection from unfair dismissal. There are no statutory restrictions on their entitlement to join a trade union and they are represented by the Belfast Airport Police Association rather than a statutory police federation.

HEALTH

Hospitals (Infections)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many patients are known to have contracted post-operative infections in (a) national health service hospitals and (b) private hospitals in each of the last five years; and if she will express those cases as a percentage of the total of patients treated;

(2) what estimates she has of the cost of treating people who have contracted post-operative infections in (a) national health service hospitals and (b) private hospitals.

Mr. Sackville: The available information on numbers of patients contracting post-operative infections is based on hospital discharge summaries. The 1989-90 estimates show 17,600 patients in national health service hospitals diagnosed as suffering from post-operative infection. The corresponding number in 1985 was 15,540. In both years, this number represented 0·2 per cent. of patients treated in hospital, but information from research studies indicates that this is an underestimate of the total incidence. Data for the intervening years are not available and corresponding information is not held in respect of private hospitals.

Information is not held centrally about the cost of treating patients with post-operative infection.

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many people are known to have died in each of the past five years due to infections contracted while in hospital;

(2) what measures she intends to take to reduce the number of people who contract infections during their stay in hospital;

(3) if she will list the types of infections which are most frequently contracted during a patient's stay in hospital.

Mr. Sackville: Information is not held centrally on the prevalence and type of hospital-acquired infections. A study in 1980 indicated that urinary infections, wound infections, lower respiratory infections and skin infections were those most frequently acquired.

The information available on deaths relates to those known to be due to post operative infection and is given in the table.

We are very much aware of the importance of preventing hospital-acquired infection to the fullest extent possible. In 1988 we issued to health authorities the guidance produced by the joint Department of Health/ Public Health Laboratory Service hospital infection working group. Authorities were asked to ensure that the recommended arrangements for infection control were in place in all acute hospitals. The Department is updating and expanding this advice. The guidance assists both purchasing authorities and provider units in carrying out their respective responsibilities of ensuring that the proper preventive measures are in place and of determining the quality measures to be specified in contracts. Part of the role of the newly appointed consultants in communicable disease control is to advise their health authorities on these quality measures.

Adequate surveillance is an important aspect of the control of hospital-acquired infection and guidance on methods of surveillance has recently been issued to the national health service.

The Department also welcomes the development by the professions of clinical standards in hospital infection control. The clinical standards advisory group has been undertaking preliminary work with a view to proposing further studies in this area. We are also considering a proposal for research in to the financial costs and other burdens resulting from hospital acquired infection.

Pay Bargaining

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list her Department's discussion documents on the subject of pay bargaining in the private health sector; and if she will make a statement on the Government's policy on pay bargaining in the private health sector.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is for the independent sector to set its own pay bargaining procedures.

National Health Service Staff (Transfers)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when she proposes to make regulations under section 49 of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 for transfer of staff from health service to local authority employment;

(2) what discussions she has had with staff and staff representatives facing transfer from national health service employment to local government employment in accordance with section 49 of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is proposed to make regulations under section 49 of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 at the same time as the commencement order bringing part III of the 1990 Act into force is made. Staff representatives will be consulted about the regulations in the normal way.

Dentistry

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate the Government have made of the effect of introducing a prior approval limit on treatment of £200; what percentage of dental treatment would require prior approval at 1992 prices with an immediate introduction of the £200 limit; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: It is good management to put cost monitoring mechanisms in place for the most expensive treatments. Prior approval does not limit the range of treatments available. At £200, it will only apply to rather less than 3 per cent. of all courses of treatment.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate the Government have made of the loss in net income to dentists from a 7 per cent. reduction in dental treatment fees.

Dr. Mawhinney: Overall, we anticipate that these changes will not only deliver the 8·5 per cent. increase in dentists' target average net income which the review body recommended, but that dentists will on average receive some £5,000 more than this target.

London Ambulance Service

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what complaints in each of the last three years she has received about the London ambulance service allegedly being inadequate or at fault in individual cases where it has been called out; and in how many of those cases loss of life was involved.

Mr. Sackville: The London ambulance service—LAS—is responsible for dealing with complaints about the service. It has a formal complaints procedure that ensures that complaints are dealt with in line with the patients charter. A number of complaints have been made about the LAS both to Ministers and direct to the LAS. I can assure the hon. Member that each complaint has been thoroughly investigated. Information on the number of cases that involve loss of life is not collected centrally.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she will review the level of emergency ambulance cover for (a) Leyton and (b) London; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The London ambulance service is managed as a pan-London service. Resources available in individual geographic regions of the service are shared with other regions, as necessary. The LAS is currently reviewing manning levels and shift rosters covering the whole of London. Management information derived from the recently introduced computer-aided dispatch will further improve the ability of managers to match available resources to demands on the service.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for what reason a ceiling budget has been placed on the accident and emergency service of the London ambulance service; and if she will make this particular service demand led.

Mr. Sackville: Like all other ambulance services, the London ambulance service contracts to provide a full 24-hour accident and emergency service. All such services are expected to match income to expenditure, taking account of the demands placed upon them. The level of expenditure for 1992-93 has been agreed, and this includes real growth of £1 million.

Regional Health Authority Chairmen

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will announce the appointment of regional health authority chairmen.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I am pleased to announce that I have made two new appointments to chair regional health authorities, as follows:

South West Thames RHA, Professor Marian Hicks
South Western RHA, Ms. Rennie Fritchie

In addition, the chairmen of the following three regional health authorities have been reappointed from 1 August 1992:

North East Thames RHA, Mr. Tim Chessells
Northern RHA, Mr. Peter Carr
Oxford RHA, Dr. Stuart Burgess

I would like to express my appreciation of the contribution to the national health service made by Mr. Charles Stuart at South Western RHA. For personal reasons, Mr. Stuart is relinquishing the regional chairmanship, and I have invited him to become the chairman-designate of the proposed Plymouth hospitals unit which has made a formal application to become an NHS trust operational from 1 April 1993.

Hospices

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much public money has been made available (a) nationally in respect of hospice support and (b) to the Chelmsford hospice in each of the last three available years.

Mr. Sackville: In each of the last three years the Government have allocated funds to regional health authorities to enable them to increase the support they give to hospices and similar organisations providing care and support for dying people and their families. In each of the last two years, funds have also been allocated to enable hospices to obtain supplies of drugs free of charge. The allocations are shown in the table:

	Hospices (£ million)	Drugs (£ million)
1990-91	8·00	—
1991-92	16·96	3·20
1992-93	31·70	5·50

The allocation of funds to individual projects is a matter for local discussion and agreement. The Chelmsford hospice received £54,000 in 1990-91 and £108,000 in 1991-92 from North East Thames regional health authority. The allocation for 1992-93 has yet to be approved by the RHA.

Disabled People

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average number of days' wait for disabled people needing (a) artificial limbs and (b) wheelchairs from the national health service; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not collected centrally.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people had been on hospital waiting lists in England in total, and in each specialty, on 1 April 1991 and on 1 April 1992 for (a) three months or less, (b) six months or less, (c) 12 months or less, (d) 24 months or less and (e) over 24 months.

Mr. Sackville: The information as at 31 March 1991 is given in the table. Figures for 31 March 1992 by specialty are not yet available centrally. For the provisional overall picture at 31 March 1992, I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Uxbridge (Mr. Shersby) on 12 May at columns 489-92. These show that between 31 March 1991 and 31 March 1992 the number waiting over two years fell by 97 per cent. and the total number waiting dropped by 3·5 per cent. or 33,131.

Dentists' Pay

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the fundamental review of the dental remuneration system will be carried forward.

Dr. Mawhinney: I am pleased to announce that Sir Kenneth Bloomfield has accepted an invitation from the United Kingdom Health Ministers to review the system of dental remuneration.

The text of my invitation to Sir Kenneth is set out as follows:

"I am writing on behalf of the UK Health Ministers to confirm my invitation to you to review the system of dental remuneration, and if possible to report before the end of the year.

The terms of reference are:

""To conduct a fundamental review of the existing system of remuneration of general dental practitioners and to identify options for change""

There are a number of important points which you will need to bear in mind.

First, the review should consider the system of remuneration. The level of remuneration for general dental practitioners are a matter for recommendation by the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' remuneration.

Second, the aim of the review should be to identify options for remunerating general dental practitioners which would provide a proper framework of financial control; would be fair to dentists and the public and as simple as practicable; and would therefore contribute positively to the development of the NHS dental service.

Third, I am looking to you to identify a number of options for change, rather than a single recommendation, though I would be happy for you to weigh up the advantages and disadvantages of each of them.

You will of course need to consult a number of interests in the course of the review. To assist you in this, I suggest that we establish a panel of advisers, drawn from the Government departments concerned, the NHS and the dental profession.

The Government attaches great importance to your review and looks forward to receiving your advice in due course."

NHS Statistics

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health from what date tertiary and cross-specialty referrals in hospitals were recorded as separate episodes of treatment in national health service statistics on out-patient and in-patient hospital activity; what the estimated impact of such a change has been on time-series comparisons of hospital activity prior to and since the change in recording methods; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Hospital activity has been measured in terms of finished consultant episodes since April 1987. The move to this sytem from the previous system, which recorded discharges and deaths, was designed to monitor more accurately the volume of work carried out by each consultant in each specialty. Data continued to be collected on the old basis of discharges and deaths until 1988-89. Comparisons of in-patient cases over time should not be affected as figures for 1988-89 are available on both basis. The change had no effect on the number of out-patient consultations.

HIV

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the reasons for the divergences between her Department's forecasts of the numbers estimated to be infected by the HIV-1 virus and the actual numbers so infected; and for what reasons she has decided to allocate financial resources on the basis of estimated rather than actual numbers.

Mr. Sackville: Overall the forecasts contained in the 1990 Day report "Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome in England and Wales to end 1993" have not proved significantly different from the actual numbers diagnosed to date, after these have been adjusted for reporting delays.

Financial allocations made each year to the national health service for the treatment and care of people with HIV/AIDS are based on the numbers actually reported to the communicable disease surveillance centre for each regional health authority and not on the basis of estimates. Other non-treatment allocations including funds for prevention initiatives are made on a population basis, using Office of Population Censuses and Surveys data.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the different degrees of threat from the HIV virus to (a) heterosexuals and (b) homosexuals.

Mr. Sackville: HIV, the virus which causes AIDS, is primarily a sexually transmitted disease. In the United Kingdom, homosexual and bisexual men still account for the greatest number of reports of both HIV and AIDS. The number of reports of those infected heterosexually is much smaller, but reported cases are growing faster in this group than in any other.

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will show from her departmental statistics, the incidence of HIV-1 virus among (a) homosexuals and (b) heterosexuals.

Mr. Sackville: Up to March 1992, 16,013 HIV infected adults, whose sexual orientation is known, had been reported to the Public Health Laboratory Service's communicable disease surveillance centre and the communicable disease (Scotland) unit. Of these, 10,569 —66 per cent.—are recorded as homosexual or bisexual men and 5,444—34 per cent.—as heterosexual men and women.

Care Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy in respect of weighting the transfer of social security funding to local authorities with effect from next April, to take account of the concentration of private care and nursing homes in certain geographical areas.

Mr. Yeo: We are currently discussing with the local authority associations a number of options for the distribution of community care finance from next April.

OPCS, Birkdale

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will enter into negotiations to rent car parking space from Birkdale cricket club for the staff of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys at Birkdale, Southport.

Mr. Sackville: Officials of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys at Southport have already met representatives of Birkdale cricket club and members of Sefton council and are in correspondence with the council. They are currently considering whether renting 50 car parking spaces from the club would be a cost-effective way of alleviating the problem of on-street parking.

Consultants

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will now make it her policy to publish the names of national health consultants who receive distinction awards.

Dr. Mawhinney: The names of award holders remain confidential and there are no plans for national publication. Since 1980 any consultant eligible for an award has had access to the regional list of current award holders which is held by the regional director of public health, and since 1990 this list has also been held by district directors of public health.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Multi-fibre Arrangement

Mr. Madden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he proposes to announce an extension of the multi-fibre arrangment on its existing terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The terms of the interim agreement to bridge the gap between the expiry of the multi-fibre arrangment on 31 December 1992 and the implementation of a replacement GATT agreement are due to be negotiated between importing and exporting countries later this year.

Recycling

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish the report by his Department's business and environmental group about creating markets for recycled products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh: Under commission from the environment unit in my Department, Warren Spring Laboratory undertook a study "Market Barriers to Materials Reclamation and Recycling". Warren Spring Laboratory published this report in September 1991.

Timeshare

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what response he has made to the representations of the hon. Member for Macclesfield about the activities and operations of Club Riviera Sales Ltd., Club Riviera Management (U.K.) Ltd., and Club Riviera plc., companies involved in timeshare properties.

Mr. Leigh: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Consumer Affairs and Small Firms has recently responded. Moreover, the Director General of Fair Trading has stated that he is minded to revoke the consumer credit licences of Club Riviera Sales Ltd.

Insolvency

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the level of insolvencies and liquidations in the first quarter of 1992.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Information on insolvencies is regularly published by the Association of British Chambers of Commerce, on behalf of the Department of Trade and Industry, in "Business Briefing". Insolvency figures for the first quarter of 1992 were published on 8 May 1992.

EC Industry Council

Mrs. Angela Knight: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the discussions which took place in the EC Industry Council on 17 June.

Mr. Sainsbury: I attended the Industry Council meeting on 17 June. The Council reached political agreement on aid to be provided by Germany to the east German shipbuilding industry. The Council also adopted resolutions on the textiles and clothing and vehicles industries and on small and medium sized enterprises and agreed conclusions on the aircraft industry. The Commission gave presentations on industry and the environment, maritime industries, the mining industry and future financing of the European Coal and Steel Community. The Council held a first discussion on a Commission proposal to allow a derogation for the Dutch and Danish steel industries from national carbon taxes.

Privatisation

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what rules have been laid down for current employees of British Coal and British Rail to engage in discussions with third parties with a view to management buy-outs in the course of the privatisations of British Coal and British Rail.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for British Coal and British Rail.

Abu Dhabi

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the amount by value of imports and exports to and from Abu Dhabi for each year since 1980.

Mr. Needham: Details of trade with Abu Dhabi are regularly published in "Overseas Trade Statistics of the United Kingdom", which is available in the Library of the House.

Libya

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the financial consequences to the British economy of United Nations sanctions against Libya.

Mr. Needham: The adoption of the UN arms embargo under Security Council resolution 748 had no financial consequences for exports of military goods to Libya as trade in military goods to Libya has been subject to an EC embargo since 1986.

It is too early to put a figure on the losses that have arisen due to the embargo on the export of aircraft and aircraft components to Libya. The United Kingdom's total exports to Libya were worth £255·7 million in 1991 —10·7 per cent. of total Libyan imports. Only a small proportion—£16·3 million, or approximately 6 per cent. —fall within the scope of current sanctions.

Credit Facilities

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will take steps to ensure that customers for credit facilities are no longer blacklisted solely because they share the same address as someone else, unconnected with them, who has a bad debt record.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 29 June 1992]: No, this was a matter recently considered by the Data Protection Tribunal. The tribunal ruled that from 31 July 1993, credit reference agencies, which provide details of individuals' credit status to lenders, should no longer provide information on people other than the credit applicant except people who are reasonably believed to have been living as members of the same family as the applicant in a single household. Where agencies are aware that individuals sharing the same address have no financial connection with the applicant, they may not provide information about those individuals.

Pyramid Selling

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to introduce legislation (a) to make it a requirement that the promoter of a pyramid scheme is clearly stated in any advertisement for the scheme and (b) to ensure that estimates of earnings from legal pyramid schemes are verified independently; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 8 July 1992]: The Pyramid Selling Schemes Regulations 1989 already ensure that potential participants are given full information about a scheme before they make any commitment. The required information includes the name and address of the promoter.

The regulations also require a promoter to have evidence if he refers to a specified financial benefit or a financial benefit being greater than or not less than a specified sum. It would be for the courts to decide whether the evidence was acceptable.

I have no plans for further legislation.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what regulations exist whereby participants in companies licensed as legal pyramid selling schemes have their incomes restricted by the number of people recruited; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 8 July 1992]: No such regulations exist. Pyramid selling and similar trading schemes are not licensed.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what are the criteria whereby firms are licensed under the term "legal pyramid selling scheme"; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the number of companies in the United Kingdom licensed under the term "legal pyramid selling schemes"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 8 July 1992]: There are no licensing arrangements for pyramid selling or similar trading schemes.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to introduce legislation that would require promoters of legal pyramid selling schemes not to take payment from participants in such a scheme unless they hold an appropriate insurance policy indemnifying them against the possibility that members or participants in the scheme choose to exercise their rights of resignation or refund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 8 July 1992]: I have no such plans.

Ms. Joan Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of companies failing to comply with current legislation relating to pyramid selling regulations under the Fair Trading Act 1973.

Mr. Leigh: Each case receives individual consideration. There have, as yet, been no prosecutions under the Pyramid Selling Schemes Regulations (1989), but in view of public concern the effectiveness and appropriateness of the regulations are kept under review.

"No Credit?"

Mr. Barnes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many copies of the booklet "No Credit?" have been published since March 1991 and at what cost; how many copies have been distributed and through which avenues; and what contributions towards the costs of publication and distribution have been obtained from the four credit agencies listed on its centre pages.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 8 July 1992]: A total of 550,000 copies of the booklet "No Credit?" have been printed at a cost of £21,708. A total of 397,000 copies have been distributed through local authority trading standards offices, main libraries and citizens advice bureaux. A total of 20,000 and 3,500 copies respectively have been distributed free of charge by the credit reference agencies CCN Systems Ltd. and Credit Data and Marketing Services. There has been no contribution to costs of publication by the four main credit reference agencies.

Civil Servants

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many civil servants in his Department are paid at a rate exceeding that of a Cabinet Minister.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 7 July 1992]: As at 30 June 1992 there were eight civil servants in the Department of Trade and Industry paid at a rate exceeding that of a Cabinet Minister.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pension Rights

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for what reasons it was decided not to allow females who retired prior to 1988 to confer pension rights on their spouses in the event of their death; and if he will now introduce provisions to provide pension rights for widows whose sponses retired pre-1988.

Miss Widdecombe: There is no statutory prohibition on occupational pension schemes providing in their rules for survivor's benefits to widows or widowers irrespective of their date of death or age at date of death. On 6 April 1988 it became a condition for a scheme to be used for contracting out of the state earnings-related pension scheme that it provided guaranteed minimum pensions to widowers in circumstances analogous to those required for widow's pensions.

Leeds Benefit Offices

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he has yet received a report from the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, into his fact-finding tour of Leeds benefit offices; if a copy of the report will be placed in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: We do not receive formal reports of the field visits made by Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. Mr. Bichard will write to the hon. Member about his recent visit to Leeds and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) on what dates and in which parts of Banff and Buchan the cold weather payments section was triggered during the winter of 1991-92; and how many households received payment on each occasion;

(2) on what dates cold weather payments were made in Banff and Buchan; and what was the period taken for payments to be made once the system had been triggered.

Mr. Scott: Information is not collected in the form requested. Such information as is available is in the Library.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many households in Banff and Buchan have qualified, or do qualify, for payments under the cold weather payments scheme since its inception in 1991.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Income Support

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the extra cost in 1992-93 of extending payments to working income support claimants by way of mortgage interest outgoings to those working between 16 and 24 qualifying hours.

Mr. Burt: The cost of continuing to pay income support to people working between 16 and 24 hours a week when the remunerative work rule changed from April 1992 has been estimated to be £30 million in the first year. It is not possible to estimate with any degree of confidence how much income support in respect of mortgage interest is included in that figure.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 2 June, Official Report, column 483, how many single people aged 18 to 24 years were receiving income support at the 18 to 24 years rate in May 1990; and what is the estimated number who were then living away from home, as defined in his answer.

Mr. Burt: In May 1990 the number of single people aged 18 to 24 receiving income support at the 18 to 24-year-old rate was 423,000[1]. There is no comparable figure for the number of these who were living away from home. However, as I stated in my reply of 2 June at column 483, it is estimated that in 1992-93 180,000[2] 18 to 24-year-olds, who receive the 18 to 24 income support personal allowance, are living away from home.

Note: "Living away from home" includes people classified by the FES as the head of the household, plus all those living in the household of a person who is a non-relative.

Occupational Pension Schemes

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will introduce legislation to require the trustee boards of occupational pension schemes to contain at least 50 per cent. employee and pensioner representatives chosen by the employees and pensioners themselves.

Miss Widecombe: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 8 June that he had set up an independent committee to review the framework of law and regulation within which occupational pension schemes operate under the chairmansip of Professor Goode of Oxford university. As the terms of reference include a consideration of the accountability and roles of trustees, it would be premature for the Government to consider any changes until the recommendations of the review committee have been assessed.

Patients' Benefits

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will introduce legislation to simplify the method by which patients are able to claim benefits whilst receiving respite and rotational care; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: We have no plans to do so. People receiving respite care are entitled to claim the higher income support limit appropriate to those in residential care or nursing homes.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in each regional and islands authority area in Scotland are in receipt of payments from the independent living fund; and what is the total amount paid from the fund in each of the said areas.

Mr. Scott: The information as at 8 May 1992, the last date for which it is available, is in the table.

Area	Number of clients	Total amount of weekly payments £
Highland	37	3,092
Grampian	73	8,281
Tayside	56	4,288
Fife	93	7,946

Social Fund

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many grants and awards have been refused to applicants as a result of the £4,000 underpayment of social fund moneys to the North Tees district social fund which was a product of a computer error; and if he will instruct social fund officers to reconsider these refusals in the light of these budget errors.

Mr. Scott: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mortgage Payments

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the interest on accrued mortage interest arrears over the first 16 weeks of an income support claim will continue to be met by his Department after 25 May.

Mr. Burt: Yes. Help with the interest on arrears of interest accrued as a result of the 50 per cent. restriction on income support mortgage interest payments during the first 16 weeks of claims from people under age 60 has been available since the restriction was introduced. We have no plans to change this.

Mr. Mandelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the transaction costs payable by building societies to his Department as a consequence of the new regulations introduced to allow direct payment of income support mortgage interest costs from his Department to the building mortgage interest costs from his Department to the building societies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Central (Mr. Watson) on 8 July.

Household Incomes

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he plans to publish the results of the households below average income analysis for 1989 before 16 July.

Mr. Burt: Yes.

EDUCATION

Access Funds

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the total amount of access funds available to (a) universities, polytechnics and institutions of higher education and (b) institutions of further education, for each academic year since the inception of the scheme; and what will be available for the 1992-93 academic year.

Mr. Patten: Details of the access funds made available for higher and further education institutions in England since the inception of the scheme in 1990-91 are as follows:

	Academic year 1990-91 £ million	Academic year 1991-92 £ million
(a) Universities, polytechnics and colleges of higher education	18·1	18·7
(b) Colleges of further education	4·2	4·31
TOTAL	22·3	23·01

Details for 1992-93 will be announced shortly.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the access funds made available to institutions of further and higher education.

Mr. Patten: The present access funds will meet their purpose if properly targeted to genuinely needy students.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many students have applied for assistance from access funds during academic years 1990-91 and 1991-92; how many were successful; what was the average amount of assistance per individual given as (a) grant and (b) repayable loan; and what were the main criteria used.

Mr. Patten: The information is not available in the form requested. For the academic year 1991-92, the information will not be available until later in the year.

Information so far available in respect of academic year 1990-91 is that approximately 70,000 higher education students, or 12 per cent. of all eligible students, received a payment from either the HE or postgraduate access funds; more than 15,500 students, or 18 per cent. of all eligible students, received a payment from the FE access funds; payments averaged just under £200 for undergraduates and about £600 for postgraduates; the average payment for FE students was just over £225.

The purpose of the funds is to provide financial help to students who face real financial difficulties, for whatever reason. Institutions are free to devise their own criteria provided they are consistent with these requirements and are in line with the general guidance and conditions by the funding councils and, in the case of FE funds, the Department.

Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which non-departmental public bodies are sponsored by his Department; which of these are audited by the National Audit Office; which firms of private accountants audits each of the others; by what method of tendering contracts to such firms are awarded; and for what duration.

Mr. Forman: The information is as follows:

Non-departmental public body	Audit arrangements	Method of tendering contract	Duration

EMPLOYMENT

Wages Councils

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will list the numbers of people employed in each industry covered by a wages council in (a) 1970, (b) 1979 and (c) 1992.

Mr. McLoughlin: Statistical returns of the number of workers in establishments within the scope of the wages councils are not collected but periodic estimates are made. The results of exercises conducted for the years closest to those specified are shown in the tables. The figures for 1987 exclude young people under 21 years of age for whom the councils are not empowered to fix minimum rates.

Youth Training

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will increase youth training allowances; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are no plans to increase minimum YT allowances. I believe that the current minimum allowances are sufficient to meet the normal requirements of trainees living in the parental home. Trainees who live independently may apply for income support if they consider their income is insufficient to meet their needs. Employers benefit considerably from Government expenditure on YT and are strongly encouraged to supplement trainee incomes wherever possible.

Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which non-departmental public bodies are sponsored by her Department; which of these are audited by the National Audit Office; which firms of private accountants audits each of the others; by what method of tendering contracts to such firms are awarded; and for what duration.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The non-departmental bodies currently sponsored by the Department of Employment are set out in the tables, with the information requested on their audit arrangements.

Executive Bodies

The following executive bodies are audited by the National Audit Office:

Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service.
Commissioner for the Rights of Trade Union Members.
Equal Opportunities Commission.
Wages councils.
Health and Safety Commission.
Health and Safety Executive.

The following executive bodies are audited by private accountants:

National Council for Vocational Qualifications.
Currently audited by Coopers and Lybrand, Deloitte. The appointment is made by the NCVQ Council which reviews the contract annually. Renewal is not subject to formal competitive tendering.

Remploy Limited.
Currently audited by KPMG Peat, Marwick McLintock. Competitive tendering is used to appoint the auditors and the contract is normally for a duration of five years.

Industry Training Boards.
The Engineering Construction Industry Training Board and the Road Transport Industry Training Board are both currently audited by Touche Ross and Co. The Construction Industry Training Board is currently audited by BDO Binder Hamlyn. These are long-standing arrangements, not subject to competitive tendering.

Advisory Bodies and Tribunals etc.

Any costs incurred by the following non-executive bodies are included in departmental expenditure which is audited by the National Audit Office.

Civil Service Arbitration Tribunal.
National Advisory Council on Employment of People with Disabilities.
National Training Task Force.
Race Relations Employment Advisory Group.
Women's National Commission.
Committees for the Employment of People with Disabilities.
Employment and Training Advisory Committee for the Resettlement of Ex-Regulars (ETAC).
Sheltered Employment Consultative Group.
Central Arbitration Committee.
Employment Appeal Tribunal.
Industrial tribunals.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Green Minister

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will outline the priorities for future action of the green Minister in his Department (a) over the next year and (b) over this Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: As the green Minister, with a close personal interest in environmental matters, my priorities both for this year and for the duration of this Parliament are that the Department shall continue and intensify its efforts to improve energy efficiency; that the work already begun to maintain and, where appropriate, upgrade the historic buildings on our estate shall be sustained; that the design of new court buildings shall take full account of environmental concerns; and, in the procurement of goods and services, all reasonable steps shall be taken to use recycled and renewable resources.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Eastern and Central Europe

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of the Secretary of State for Education of 3 July, Official Report, column 714, if some of the know-how funds could be made available to the scouting movement in those countries of eastern and central Europe, and any other comparable youth organisation, which were proscribed, or prevented from participating in the international organisation during the period of communist rule and which now wish to rebuild or establish their domestic organisation and rebuild international links.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Limited funds are available to help rebuild the capacity of voluntary organisations in eastern and central Europe through the charity know-how scheme. A number of grants have already been made to help the development of youth organisations in the region, including scouting groups in Hungary and Slovakia. Applications for youth exchanges can only be considered in so far as they are directly linked to the development of specific voluntary organisations based in central and eastern Europe.

Guyana

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will provide details of Her Majesty's Government's bilateral and multilateral support for development in Guyana.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 9 July 1992]:] We have made it clear to the Guyana Government that no new pledges of capital aid or technical co-operation commitments will be made until free and fair elections have been held and a government with sound economic policies is in place. Bilateral aid commitments already made in support of Guyana's economic reform programme have been fulfilled. The main contributions have been:

£13·7 million of programme aid in support of the balance of payments.

a $10·5 million (£6·135 million) short-term loan to assist payment of arrears to the international financial institutions.

technical co-operation running at about £1·5 million a year.

a grant of about £3·4 million to meet payments due to British companies for development projects.

In addition, we have waived about £6 million and deferred about £3 million of aid debt payments, and rescheduled official commercial debts on concessional terms.

We have supported Guyana's economic reform programme in the relevant multilateral fora. Britain contributes resources to the main multilateral agencies assisting Guyana, but there are no internationally agreed data on multilateral aid received by individual countries and attributable to donor countries.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Secretary of State (Salary)

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the gross salary of the Secretary of State in his Department or its predecessor for each of the years from 1979 to 1989, inclusive, at 1989 prices.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table.

Year	Secretary of State salary £	Parliamentary salary £	Total gross salary £	Total gross salaries in 1989 prices
1979	19,650	5,265	24,915	55,614
1980	23,500	6,930	30,430	59,902
1981	27,825	8,130	35,955	59,925
1982	28,950	8,460	37,410	55,753
1983	29,367	9,543	38,910	53,374

Turner Village Hospital

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that income support payments made towards the cost of residential care provided by the Ling Trust in Essex for former residents of Turner Village mental handicap hospital were made in accordance with regulations allowing such payments to be made only in circumstances where the care provider is independent of a health authority.

Mr. Burt: The administration of income support is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Household Incomes

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will be publishing the latest households-below-average-income figures.

Mr. Burt: The next edition of "Households Below Average Income", covering the period 1979 to 1988-89, will be published on 15 July.

Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which non-departmental public bodies are sponsored by his Department; which of these are audited by the National Audit Office; which firms of private accountants audits each of the others; by what method of tendering contracts to such firms are awarded; and for what duration.

Miss Widdecombe: The Department sponsors the following non-departmental public bodies:

Independent Tribunal Service
Central Adjudication Services
Occupational Pensions Board
Attendance Allowance Board
Central Advisory Committee on War Pensions
Industrial Injuries Advisory Council
Social Security Advisory Council
War Pensions Committees

None of these produces separate accounts. Their expenditure is recorded in the Department's administrative vote and audited by the National Audit Office.

PRIME MINISTER

International Agreements

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list all the international agreements, other than the United Nations target for overseas aid, which Her Majesty's Government agreed to in 1974 but have not yet met; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

It is the practice of the Government to comply with all legally binding obligations under international agreements. There is no international agreement which we concluded in 1974 which we are not implementing, or have not implemented.

G7 Summit

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what proportion of the discussion time at the Group of Seven summit in Munich was devoted to environmental matters.

Mr. Newton: I have been asked to reply.

The environment was one of a number of issues discussed at the G7 summit.

Food Aid

Mr. Michael: To ask the Prime Minister what fresh initiatives he intends to promote during the period of the British Presidency of the EC in regard to the use of grain and other foodstuffs stored by the EC as emergency food aid for third world countries.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 9 July 1992]: The primary aim of emergency food aid must be to reach those who need it as quickly and effectively as possible. European food surpluses, being for the most part perishable, or otherwise not well suited to the purpose, are used only on a modest scale for famine relief. Emergency food aid is generally purchased from open market surpluses or from regions closer to areas in need. Third country purchases also help to encourage regional trade, ensure that food purchased is closely in line with local needs and avoid distortion of local markets. The Government will encourage the Commission to continue to provide food aid in the most efficient way possible, taking full account of local needs.

Subsidiarity

Mr. Michael: To ask the Prime Minister if he plans to convene any meetings in Wales to discuss the principle of subsidiarity during his presidency of the European Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 9 July 1992]: The conclusions of the meeting of the European Council held at Lisbon on 26 and 27 June invited the Commission and the Council "to undertake urgent work on the procedural and practical steps" to implement the principle of subsidiarity. Both institutions will report to the European Council in Edinburgh. The British presidency will take forward this work.

Wales will host an informal meeting of the Council of Employment and Social Affairs Ministers on 12 and 13 October. No agenda has been set for that meeting.

NATIONAL FINANCE

North Sea Oil and Gas

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many companies involved in oil and gas production in the North sea have sought relief for reimbursement expenditure under abandonment guarantees as provided for under section 106 of part III of the Finance Act 1991.

Mr. Dorrell: None.

Inheritance Tax (Exemptions)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each county of or region in England, Scotland and Wales the number of landowners and estates, where there are five or more such cases, that have benefited under the tax procedures by which tax liability is reduced on condition that there is an undertaking to manage and protect the land from development and allow reasonable public access.

Mr. Dorrell: As I explained in my reply to the hon. Member on 30 June, at columns 469-70, a detailed breakdown by county or region for conditional exemptions from inheritance tax of land and buildings is not readily available.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 7 July, if he will now take steps to collect figures for Scotland and Wales on the area of land where there is exemption from inheritance tax for access purposes.

Mr. Dorrell: Yes. I will write to the hon. Member with this information when it is available and place a copy in the Library.

Civil List

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes have taken place in the frequency of reports to the House on the civil list and the requirement for the House to approve the civil list with the cessation of annual voted supplements under the Civil List Act 1975.

Mr. Lamont: The Civil List Act 1972 enables the royal trustees to report from time to time on relevant matters. In their October 1990 report—HC 629—the royal trustees indicated that they accepted the logic of the views of the 1971 Select Committee on the Civil List that 10 years was an appropriate period over which to operate. For the record, reports were made by the royal trustees in January 1975, December 1983 and October 1990.

Judge Margaret Jackson

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the treatment at Heathrow airport of Judge Margaret Jackson by customs officials.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 9 July 1992]: Ms. Margaret Jackson was questioned and searched by customs at Heathrow Airport on Thursday 11 June. She had arrived at around 10.15 am on a flight which is considered by Customs to be in the high-risk category for drug smuggling. After initial questioning, Customs officers decided to carry out a search. Ms. Jackson was offered the opportunity to see a senior officer and her rights under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 were explained. The search was authorised by the senior officer and carried out by a female officer in accordance with the standard procedures. This search, and a subsequent urine test, proved negative. Ms. Jackson was released at 12.02 pm. Throughout her detention Ms. Jackson was made aware of her legal rights and she was offered access to an on-call duty solicitor.

WALES

Cardiff Bay Barrage

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his financial memorandum on the updating of the costs of the proposed Cardiff bay barrage, if he will specify which sewer diversion works have already been paid for by Welsh Water and in the course of construction of the Butetown link section of the South Glamorgan county council's peripheral distributor road.

Mr. David Hunt: The sewers removed from the table of related expenditure in the note on the comparison of costs provided for the members of Standing Committee F on the Cardiff Bay Barrage Bill are as follows:

i. The Cogan outfall proposals

These are now within the programme of Welsh Water Plc for diversion by 1994.

ii. Pierhead combined sewers north of James street

The main diversion works, including the Harrowby Street Pumping Station, have been constructed by South Glamorgan County Council as part of the Peripheral Distributor Road scheme. The diversion of flows south of the Peripheral Distributor Road remains within the estimate.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the most up-to-date estimate available to him of the cost of (a) the remedial drainage works and (b) basement waterproofing works to compensate for the effects of the Cardiff bay barrage arising from paragraph 7 of the Roy Stoner report published in January and costed on an outturn basis, using the same hypothesis on the timing of start and finish of construction as in his answer of 26 June, Official Report, column 340.

Mr. David Hunt: The £440,000 for remedial drainage works mentioned in Mr. Stoner's report would have an outturn cost of £496,000. As Mr. Stoner observed, it can be argued that since the areas involved are inadequately drained at the moment, the whole charge concerned with land drainage should not fall upon the barrage project.

The cost of remedial works to property based on Hydrotechnica's most likely scenario would be £14·43 million at 1991-92 prices, which would become £17·47 million on an outturn basis. This figure was included in the £167·4 million given in my answer of 26 June. The outturn figure would be increased by a further £11·18 million if Hydrotechnica's "extreme case" of groundwater levels were to arise. However, as Mr. Stoner commented in his report,

"generally one would expect that the levels experienced in practice would be lower".

Speed Limits

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will introduce provisions to enable local highway authorities to provide speed limits in areas where they deem these to be necessary on county roads irrespective of the volume of traffic or number of pedestrians crossing the road; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Following consultation, a review is being conducted into the criteria used for setting speed limits. The new criteria will be more flexible and will allow greater weight to be given to local factors. Revised guidelines will be issued to local highway authorities.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was (a) allocated and (b) spent by each district council in Wales for the collection of the poll tax, for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information available is given in the table:

Road Accident Victims

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many road accident victims suffering from (a) fractures to the upper limbs, (b) head injuries, (c) fractures to the lower limbs and (d) whiplash injuries in Wales were still reporting problems one year after the accident: and if he will give a breakdown according to age category.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information is not available centrally.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish figures showing the average length of hospital stay for patients suffering (a) fractures to the upper limbs, (b) fractures to the lower limbs and (c) whiplash injuries resulting from road accidents in Wales; and if he will give a break-down of the figures according to age category.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information given in the table is taken from hospital activity analysis, relating to patients treated in Welsh NHS hospitals during 1990.

The information is based on cases recorded as road traffic accident victims. These may be understated as not all hospitals provide full details relating to discharges and deaths.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were admitted to casualty departments in hospitals in Wales in each health authority area last year; and how many of such admissions had resulted from road accidents in each instance.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The available information is given in the table:

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish an estimated figure for the economic cost of injury accidents on Welsh roads during each of the last five years.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Economic costs of injury road accidents are not calculated separately for Wales.

Estimates derived from Department of Transport average costs applied to Welsh accident figures are given in the table:

Estimated cost of injury road accidents[1]

	£ million
1987	230
1988	240
1989	240
1990	250
1991	220

[1] At June 1990 prices.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many hospital beds are allocated per day on average in each health authority area, for victims of road accidents.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Hospital beds are not allocated specifically for victims of road accidents. Such patients are treated in beds allocated to the specialty appropriate to each case.

Pembrokeshire Health Authority (Salaries)

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the annual salary range of the general manager of Pembrokeshire health authority for 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92, the personnel director of Pembrokeshire health authority for 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92, the finance director of Pembrokeshire health authority for 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92; and whether those salaries and fringe benefit packages included a car purchase or lease scheme.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: From 1 January 1990 salaries for district general managers have been set within three band ranges. The appropriate band range for the Pembrokeshire general manager post has been:

Inclusive of Performance Pay

	Minimum—Maximum
1 January 1990—31 August 1990	£35,000	£50,750
1 September 1990—31 August 1991	£37,980	£55,060
1 September 1991—to date	£40,260	£58,370

The two senior managers referred to have received flat rate salaries on a point on the senior managers pay spine. The spine ranges have been:

	Minimum—Maximum
1 January 1989—31 August 1990	£12,560	£39,170
1 September 1990—31 August 1991	£13,560	£42,290
1 September 1991—to date	£14,380	£44,850

Senior managers may also receive performance pay up to a maximum of 20 per cent. of salary.

These salaries do not include other non-pay elements. Entitlements to a Crown car or car purchase loan would be a matter for the employing authority having regard to the application of general Whitley council rules.

Unitary Authority, Vale of Glamorgan

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to preserve the present Vale of Glamorgan district authority as a unitary authority, including Penarth, and to expand the vale to the west by adding Wick, Southerndown, Ogmore and Porthcawl.

Mr. David Hunt: The statement I made to the House of Commons on 3 March 1992 included a proposal for an authority for the Vale of Glamorgan. I am at present consulting on that and other proposals and am well aware of my hon. Friend's strong representations on this issue; those consultations include further consideration of boundaries for the new authorities.

Cataract Treatment Centres

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of patients treated at (a) the cataract treatment centre at Ysbyty Gwynedd, Bangor and (b) the cataract treatment centre at Bridgend general hospital his Department requires to be resident in Gwynedd and Mid-Glamorgan respectively.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: For 1992-93 it is proposed that 50 per cent. of patients treated at the ophthalmic treatment centre, Ysbyty Gwynedd and just over 9 per cent. of patients at the eye treatment centre, Bridgend general hospital will be from the centres' host district.

A494

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the widening of the A494 at Aston Hill, Queensferry, Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department is currently undertaking a public consultation exercise in respect of an improvement for the section of the A494 between the River Dee and Ewloe which traverses Aston hill; 331 representations have been received to date.

Queensferry Bypass

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what grounds he bases his proposals for widening the Queensferry bypass; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Based on current and projected traffic flow data additional carriageway capacity is needed along the section of the A494 from the River Dee to Ewloe which includes the section known as the Queensferry bypass, to avoid serious congestion and a deterioration in road safety. The proposal to improve the section of road is currently the subject of a public consultation exercise.

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he expects to arrange for the publication of the annual report and account of the Welsh Development Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Later this year.

Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which non-departmental public bodies are sponsored by his Department; which of these are audited by the National Audit Office; which firms of private accountants audits each of the others; by what method of tendering contracts to such firms are awarded; and for what duration.

Mr. David Hunt: The non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Welsh Office are set out in "Public Bodies 1991", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

The Comptroller and Auditor General audits the accounts of all but two of the executive non-departmental public bodies on that list.

The Cardiff Bay development corporation's accounts are audited by Ernst and Young whose appointment is for up to five years. Housing for Wales auditors are KPMG Peat Marwick whose appointment is for up to three years. Both appointments followed open competition.

DEFENCE

Liquid Crystal Display

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's current policy on liquid crystal display; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The Ministry of Defence funds a research programme by the Defence Research Agency into liquid crystal displays to ensure that the DRA remains at the forefront of this fast developing technology and, consequently, is able to provide expert advice to the MOD on the development and procurement of relevant equipment.

Electro-magnetic Propulsion

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's current policy on electro-magnetic propulsion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: The Ministry of Defence funds a research programme by the Defence Research Agency into aspects of electro-magnetic propulsion with the aim of assessing the applicability of this technology to military requirements.

Defence Research Agency

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list for the last 12 months, the fact-finding visits the chief executive of the Defence Research Agency has made; what were his findings; if he will place a copy of his findings in the Library; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will list by grade his Department's current staffing levels at the Defence Research Agency.

Mr. Aitken: These are matters for the Defence Research Agency under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive of the DRA to write to the hon. Member.

Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list for the last 12 months, the titles of scientific papers published by the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment;

(2) if he will list for the last 12 months, the fact-finding visits the chief executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment has made; what were his findings; if he will place a copy of his findings in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Aitken: These are matters for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment under its framework document. I have asked the chief executive of the CBDE to write to the hon. Member.

Green Minister

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline the priorities for future action of the green Minister in his Department (a) over the next year and (b) over this Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: During the next year my noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence, will oversee actions arising from the Department's environmental review and the work necessary to meet the requirements of the Montreal protocol and EC regulation 594/91 on ozone-depleting substances. Over the next year and beyond, work will continue to ensure defence activities are undertaken in a manner consistent with the Government's overall environmental policy as outlined in "This Common Inheritance", Cm 1200, that they comply with United Kingdom environmental legislation and that environmental considerations are fully integrated into defence activities, policies and forward planning. I also refer the hon. Member to paragraphs 342 to 348 inclusive of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1992".

Menwith Hill

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 26 June, Official Report, column 360, what British Telecom service has replaced the cables laid between Menwith Hill and the British Telecom relay station at Hunterstones tower.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The service previously carried on cables between Menwith Hill station and Hunterstones tower is provided by communications leased exclusively for defence purposes. None of these involves a direct link, on cable or otherwise, between Menwith Hill station and Hunterstones tower.

Russian Aircraft Technology

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has from within NATO on whether Germany has engaged in negotiations with Russia for the purchase of Russian aircraft fighter technology by way of direct financial payment, debt reduction or otherwise.

Mr. Aitken: None.

Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which non-departmental public bodies are sponsored by his Department; which of these are audited by the National Audit Office; which firms of private accountants audits each of the others; by what method of tendering contracts to such firms are awarded; and for what duration.

Mr. Aitken: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member shortly.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Renewable Energy

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what encouragement is being given to small Northern Ireland based non-fossil fuel generators of electricity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: A study is currently being undertaken into the potential for the development of renewable energy resources in Northern Ireland. The study's findings are due to be published later this year, following which the Department of Economic Development plans to introduce measures to encourage such generation.

Fair Employment

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made during the past 12 months to correct the under employment of Protestants within the staff of the Fair Employment Commission.

Mr. Atkins: In the 12 months to 1 January 1992 the commission received 1,389 job applications, of which 57 per cent. were from members of the Protestant community; and appointed 17 staff, of whom nine were Protestant.

In the 12 months to 1 January 1991 the commission received 492 job applications, of which 47 per cent. were from members of the Protestant community; and appointed nine staff, of whom four were Protestant.

The commission's equal opportunity policy provides for outreach measures including positive encouragement to Protestants to apply in job advertisements.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made to correct the under-employment of Protestants in the Bank of Ireland since it was first investigated by the Fair Employment Agency; when the Fair Employment Commission updated the position in this company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: At the time of the investigation by the Fair Employment Agency in 1985, 222 employees—42·1 per cent.—of the Bank of Ireland were Protestant and 305—57·9 per cent.—were Roman Catholic. In January 1991, 277—44·2 per cent.—were Protestant and 350—55·8 per cent.—were Roman Catholic.

The bank is required by law to undertake a review of its employment composition and practices by 6 February 1993. If the review shows that members of one community are not enjoying fair participation, the bank must engage in affirmative action.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made to correct the under-employment of Protestants in the Allied Irish Banks Ltd. since it was first investigated by the Fair Employment Agency: when the Fair Employment Commission updated the position in this company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: At the time of the investigation by the Fair Employment Agency in 1985, 164 employees—28·1 per cent.—of the Allied Irish Banks plc were Protestant and 420—71·9 per cent.—were Roman Catholic. In January 1991, 232—31·7 per cent.—were Protestant and 501—68·3 per cent.—were Roman Catholic.

The bank is required by law to undertake a review of its employment composition and practices by 6 February 1993. If the review shows that members of one community are not enjoying fair participation, the bank must engage in affirmative action.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made to correct the under-employment of Protestants by Post Office Counters Ltd. since it was first investigated by the Fair Employment Agency; when the Fair Employment Commission updated the position in this company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The Fair Employment Agency began an investigation in 1987 into the Post Office in Northern Ireland. The investigation covered the three businesses within the Post Office Corporation—Royal Mail, Royal Mail Parcelforce and Post Office Counters Ltd. In 1987, 1,764 employees—53·3 per cent.—were Protestant and 1,545—46·7 per cent.—were Roman Catholic. In January 1991, 1,837—51·6 per cent.—were Protestant and 1,721—48·4 per cent.—Roman Catholic.

The Post Office is required by law to undertake a review of its employment composition and practices by 1 January 1993. If the review shows that members of one community are not enjoying fair participation, the Post Office must engage in affirmative action.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made to correct the under-employment of Protestants by Derry city council since it was first investigated by the Fair Employment Agency; when the Fair Employment Commission updated the position within this local authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Derry city council invited the Fair Employment Agency to conduct an investigation of its employment composition and practices. In March 1986, 166 of its employees—30·5 per cent.—were Protestant and 378—69·5 per cent.—Roman Catholic. In January 1991, 167—31·3 per cent.—were Protestant and 366—68·7 per cent.—Roman Catholic.

The council is required by law to undertake a review of its employment composition and practices by 1 January 1993. If the review shows that members of one community are not enjoying fair participation, the council must engage in affirmative action.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made to correct the under-employment of Protestants by Down district council since it was first investigated by the Fair Employment Agency; when the Fair Employment Commission updated the position within this local authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Down district council was not subject to a formal investigation by the Fair Employment Agency.

The council is required by law to undertake a review of its employment composition and practices by 1 January 1993. If the review shows that members of one community are not enjoying fair participation, the council must engage in affirmative action.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made to correct the under-employment of Protestants by Newry and Mourne district council since it was first investigated by the Fair Employment Agency; when the Fair Employment Commission updated the position within this local authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: When the Fair Employment Agency began its investigation in October 1986, 50 employees—11·7 per cent.—of Newry and Mourne district council were Protestant and 378—88·3 per cent.—were Roman Catholic. In January 1991, 29—9·5 per cent.—were Protestant and 276—90·5 per cent.—Roman Catholic.

The council is required by law to undertake a review of its employment composition and practices by 1 January 1993. If the review shows that members of one community are not enjoying fair participation, the council must engage in affirmative action.

Social Security Agency

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the Social Security Agency's targets for 1992-93 will be published.

Mr. Hanley: The targets are included in the agency's 1992-93 business plan which was published today and a copy of which has been placed in the Library. The targets present a demanding challenge for the agency and fully support the next steps principles. They are as follows:

1. Benefit clearance times[1]

Social fund crisis loans—applications cleared on the day the need arises.

Social fund community care grants—applications cleared on average in seven days.

Income support new claims—claims cleared on average in four days.

Sickness and invalidity benefit claims—65 per cent. of claims cleared in 12 days and 95 per cent. in 30 days.[2]

Child benefit—65 per cent. of claims in 10 days and 95 per cent. in 30 days.[2]

Family credit—60 per cent. of claims in 13 days and 95 per cent. in 45 days.[2]

Disability living allowance—60 per cent of claims in 30 days and 95 per cent in 55 days.[2]

Disability working allowance (claims from people starting work)—95 per cent. of claims in five days.[2]

Retirement pension—65 per cent. of claims in 20 days and 95 per cent. of claims in 60 days.[2]

Unemployment benefit—applications cleared on average in 8 days.[3]

2. Benefit accuracy

Income support—pay the correct amount in 99 per cent. of cases.

Incapacity benefits[4]—to pay the correct amount in 98 per cent. of cases.

Family credit—to pay the correct amount in 96 per cent. of cases.

Disability living allowance—to pay the correct amount in 96 per cent. of cases.

Disability working allowance—to pay the correct amount in 95 per cent. of cases.

Pensions—to pay the correct amount in 99 per cent. of cases.

3. Customer satisfaction

90 per cent. of customers to regard the agency's service as satisfactory or better.

4. Resource management

To manage the agency's resources to deliver its Business Plan within a total budget of £121 million of which £111·4 million relates to departmental running costs (DRC).

Achieve new efficiency savings worth at least 2·5 per cent. of DRC.

The budget of £121 million is net of these savings.

Keep to a gross allocation for social fund loans and grants of £25 million.

5. Financial recovery

Recovery of social fund loans—£13·62 million.

Recovery of income support overpayments—£1 million.

Benefit savings from detection and prevention of fraud—£10·4 million.

Increase number of national insurance contribution surveys of employers by 15 per cent. to 5,000.

Notes:

[1] Clearance times normally cover the period from date of receipt of the claim in the agency to the formal decision by the adjudication officer or equivalent. Notification of the result is normally issued by the following day. All days refer to working days.

[2] These targets are expressed in the format x per cent. in y days based on the time taken to clear individual cases, thus giving a better indication of the spread of service than a simple average.

[3] The target for clearing unemployment benefit claims has been set at eight days. This is slightly higher than last year's target of seven days. The main reason for this is that over the next 18 months offices will be converting to new computer systems. Sound experience on introducing major new systems in both the public and private sectors is that during conversion there is a period of temporary disruption while records are being transferred from clerical systems and staff are being trained and becoming proficient in the new ways of working. Whilst eight days remains a very challenging target which will require considerable commitment to achieve, performance will be continually monitored in a determined effort to improve upon this.

[4] Incapacity benefits is an overall term used to cover sickness benefit, invalidity benefit, severe disablement benefit and maternity allowance.

Local Government Boundaries

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has completed his consideration of the final recommendations of the Local Government Boundaries Commission in respect of local government district and ward boundaries in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: Yes. An order under section 50(4) of the Local Government Act (NI) 1972 giving effect to the commissioner's recommendations without modification, was made on 6 July 1992. A copy of the commissioner's report and final recommendations is available in the Library.

Customs Clearance

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) customs clearance staff work and (b) customs clearance firms operate in Northern Ireland; how many are based in each parliamentary constituency; and what is the estimated annual turnover generated by the customs clearance industry in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Atkins: Information from Her Majesty's Customs and Excise indicates that there are 75 businesses in Northern Ireland which provide customs clearance services. However, many of these businesses also have other activities and it is not possible to determine, from the available information, the staff numbers or turnover attributable solely to customs clearance work. The distribution of the 75 businesses by parliamentary constituency is as follows:

Customs clearance agents in Northern Ireland by parliamentary constituency

Belfast, North	15
Belfast, East	3
Belfast, West	9
South Antrim	12
Lagan Valley	1

HEALTH

Dentistry

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to settle the dispute with dentists practising in the national health service.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave to a private notice question from the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 6 July at columns 21-25.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide a breakdown by health region of the annual running cost of salaried dentists operating within the national health service; and if she will provide a breakdown by health region of the annual cost to the national health service of dental treatment.

Dr. Mawhinney: For the year ending March 1991 the annual cost of general dental services and the running costs of national health service salaried dentists in each health region are shown in the table.

Region	Cost of GDS £000	Cost of salaried dentists £000
Northern	41,935	8·056
Yorkshire	53,209	25·585
Trent	63,435	30·599
East Anglia	27,323	23·741

Mersey	36,987	115·541
North Western	63,567	56·105
ENGLAND	678,167	1,355·745

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advisory criteria her Department issues to family health service authorities in England by which cross-infection rates in dental surgeries are measured in both absolute and relative terms.

Dr. Mawhinney: Family health services authorities may arrange for the inspection of dental surgeries which includes consideration of cross-infection control. The Department has not issued guidance on measurement of cross-infection rates.

Tampon-related Illness

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations she has received about the incidence of toxic shock syndrome and other tampon-related illnesses; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: In recent months, we have received a number of letters about toxic shock syndrome. TSS is a rare condition which sadly proves fatal in one or two cases each year. The Government are fully committed to reducing the risk of TSS associated with tampon use to the absolute minimum.

Psychologists

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many qualified clinical psychologists are employed by the NHS to work in (a) adult mental health services, (b) services for the elderly, (c) services to children and adolescents, (d) services to people with physical disability and (e) services to people with learning difficulty; and how many unfilled vacancies there are in each of these areas of work.

Mr. Yeo: A total of 2,089 whole-time equivalent clinical psychologists were employed in the national health service in England as at 30 September 1991. Information about the numbers employed within particular areas of work and the number of unfilled vacancies is not collected centrally.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many clinical psychologists are employed by local authorities to work in (a) adult mental health services, (b) services for the elderly, (c) services to children and adolescents, (d) services to people with physical disability and (e) services to people with learning difficulty; and what information she has on the number of unfilled vacancies in each of these areas of work.

Mr. Yeo: The information requested is not held centrally.

Elderly People

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will set up a royal commission to consider how the physical and mental well-being of the elderly could be met by statutory and voluntary organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo No.

Disabled People

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what safeguards there will be for the physically disabled who may choose to have residential care but who may be designated by a local authority as suitable for care in the community.

Mr. Yeo: From April 1993 local authorities will be responsible for assessing with people their need for community care and arranging packages of care. Whether these services should be in the form of residential or non-residential care will depend on the outcome of the assessment. Both assessments and subsequent care plans should take full account of people's preferences.

Continuing Care Beds

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received on the provision of continuing care beds within the national health service; when she expects to reach a decision about these; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: A number of representations have been received. The points raised will be taken fully into account in setting priorities for the health service and in monitoring health authorities' continuing provision of services for elderly people.

Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which non-departmental public bodies are sponsored by her Department; which of these are audited by the National Audit Office; which firms of private accountants audits each of the others; by what method of tendering contracts to such firms are awarded; and for what duration.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to pages 33-37 of "Public Bodies 1991", HMSO, 1991, a copy of which is available in the Library. Since publication, additional non-departmental public bodies have been established as follows:

Youth Treatment Centre Advisory Group
Medical Manpower Standing Advisory Committee
The London Enquiry
Steering Committee on Pharmacy Postgraduate Education
Aids Action Group
National Disability Information Project Steering Group

The Department no longer sponsors the following bodies:

Independent Scientific Committee on Smoking and Health
National Development Team for People with Learning Disabilities

Of the Department's nine executive bodies, eight produce auditable accounts of which six are audited by the National Audit Office. The English National Board is audited by the Audit Commission, and the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting is audited by private accountants Lawrence and Co. of Baird house, 15-17 St. Cross street, London EC1N 8UN. Lawrence and Co. was appointed after a tendering exercise undertaken by the body itself and the contract is of open-ended duration, subject to satisfactory performance.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Wolds Prison

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about recent disturbances at Her Majesty's prison, Wolds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my replies to the hon. Member for Walthamstow (Mr. Gerrard) on 6 July, at column 38, and the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 8 July, at column 199.

Rave Parties

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the statutory provisions that relate to the holding of rave parties in rural areas; whether he has any plans to revise the existing legislation; and whether he has any plans to introduce further measures to control such events.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Provisions of the London Government Act 1963, the Private Places of Entertainment (Licensing) Act 1967 or the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1982, all as amended by the Entertainments (Increased Penalties) Act 1990 may, depending on the circumstances of each case, require the licensing of places used for such events. Other, more general, provisions of the criminal and civil law may also apply in particular cases. We have no present plans to amend these provisions or to introduce any new legislation to control events of this kind, but we keep the matter under review.

Trespassing

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to amend section 39 of the Public Order Act 1986.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We shall be further considering whether any changes need to be made to the public order law in consultation with other government departments and chief officers of police.

Metropolitan Police (Accidents)

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 553, in what form information is held on accidents involving Metropolitan police.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Accident records are held by local police stations. The accident claims branch record claims made either against or by the Metropolitan police. The driver training branch keep a record of qualified police drivers: this includes a record of all accidents which a driver has been found to be liable for. Statistics, other than the total of accidents and the number of accidents in which Metropolitan police officers were found to be to blame which are published in the commissioner's annual report, are not collected centrally.

Stonehenge

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost to (a) the taxpayer and (b) the community charge payer or ratepayer of policing the Stonehenge area during the period of the summer solstice in each of the last 10 years; and what percentage of the total cost was accounted for by police overtime pay.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand from the chief constable of Wiltshire that the additional cost of policing the Stonehenge area during the period of the summer solstice was as follows:

Year	Additional cost £
1985	811,413
1986	526,060
1987	268,400
1988	383,500
1989	520,500
1990	288,000
1991	277,000
1992	[1]242,450

[1] Estimate.

Details of the costs of overtime are not available. It is not possible to assign particular aspects of expenditure to the source of funding.

Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which non-departmental public bodies are sponsored by his Department; which of these are audited by the National Audit Office; which firms of private accountants audits each of the others; by what method of tendering contracts to such firms are awarded; and for what duration.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Details of non-departmental public bodies, including audit information, are published annually by HMSO in "Public Bodies"—ISBN 0-11-430064-X. Audit arrangements in respect of those executive bodies listed whose accounts are neither audited by nor accessible to the National Audit Office are as follows:

	Auditors
Alcohol Education and Research Council	Saffrey Champness
Fire Service Examinations Board	Touche Ross
Fire Service Research and Training Trust	Vale and West of Reading
Horserace Betting Levy Board	KPMG Peat Marwick
Horserace Totalisator Board	Stoy Hayward

Methods of appointment vary, including annual tender and nomination by local authority associations, as does duration.

Crime, Halifax

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will be replying to the hon. Member for Halifax about a meeting to discuss the increase in crime in Halifax and the urban crime fund.

Mr. Jack: A reply is being sent to the hon. Member today.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) husbands, (b) wives and (c) dependent children have been refused (i) extension of stay and (ii) settlement in the United Kingdom on the grounds that the Secretary of State is not satisfied that they can be maintained and accommodated without recourse to public funds, in each quarter since January 1990.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 3 July 1992]: The available information relating to after entry cases is given in the table. Information on dependent children is not readily available.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which non-departmental public bodies are sponsored by his Department; which of these are audited by the National Audit Office; which firms of private accountants audits each of the others; by what method of tendering contracts to such firms are awarded; and for what duration.

Mr. Waldegrave: All the non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department are audited by the National Audit Office. They are:

Civil Service Appeal Board
Agricultural and Food Research Council
Economic and Social Research Council
Medical Research Council
Natural Environment Research Council
Science and Engineering Research Council

TRANSPORT

Trains

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will request the Health and Safety Executive to obtain and publish a report on the responsibilities, training and employment and rules for train crews, with particular reference to safety, before further legislation relating to changes in the operation of railways is introduced.

Mr. Freeman: We are asking the Health and Safety Commission to arrange for a study of the safety implications of the Government's proposals for the privatisation of British Rail and to make detailed recommendations. This study will look at all safety-related issues, including the training and certification of train crews.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the approximate proportion of passenger train miles in the last available year where receipts were equal to, or exceeded, the costs that can be ascribed to the total transport service to the passengers.

Mr. Freeman: In 1991-92 receipts excluding grant exceeded operating costs only for InterCity among British Rail's three passenger businesses. InterCity was responsible for 22 per cent. of British Rail's total loaded passenger train miles.

Railway Costs

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the approximate proportion of railway costs ascribable to the provision, maintenance and operation of the track and associated stationary features, and those relating to the cost of moving and crewing rolling stock and its associated costs.

Mr. Freeman: A breakdown of rail business expenditure last year is provided in note 3 to British Rail's annual report and accounts for 1991-92, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House. Expenditure on track, signalling, telecommunications, terminals and operations control amounted to 44 per cent. of the total; train provision, operation, maintenance and catering to 39; and other expenditure to 17 per cent.

M25

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the estimated cost of his Department's proposal for new feeder roads between the M3 junction and the M4 junction of the M25.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The estimated cost of the proposed improvement between junction 12 (M3) and 15 (M4) of the M25 is £144 million at 1992 prices.

Bus Project

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make resources available to the boroughs concerned in the south and west London bus priority demonstration project.

Mr. Norris: I am pleased to announce the allocation of £300,000 of supplementary credit approvals in 1992-93 for the first stage of the south and west London bus priority demonstration project.

Air Travel Trust Fund

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action the Government are taking to address the depletion of the air travel trust fund revealed in the ATT annual report and accounts.

Mr. MacGregor: The Government intend to legislate, when parliamentary time allows, to allow the Air Travel Trust fund to be replenished.

In the meantime, I have laid a minute informing Parliament of my proposal to grant a guarantee to enable the fund to borrow to meet its obligations.

Harbour Authorities

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those harbour authorities where a direction has been given under the provisions of section 22 of the Aviation and Maritime Security Act 1990.

Mr. Norris: The harbours affected by directions issued to harbour authorities under section 22 of the Aviation and Maritime Security Act 1990 are listed:

Scotland
Aberdeen
Ardrossan*
Cairnryan
Invergordon*
Leith (Edinburgh)
Lerwick

*= although directions have been served they are at present dormant as no relevant passenger services operate from these harbours.

In addition, the following harbours have been the subject of directions given to harbour authorities under section 22 of the Aviation and Maritime Security Act 1990 but are now no longer covered as the direction has been revoked by a further direction given under section 22, as permitted under section 46.

Scotland
Lochboisdale
Oban
Stornoway
Ullapool
England
Grimsby

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those bodies of constables empowered under section 22(3) of the Aviation and Maritime Security Act 1990 to search or enter a private dwelling.

Mr. Norris: Constables empowered to search or enter a private dwelling under section 22(3), as qualified by sections 22(4) and (5), of the Aviation and Maritime Security Act 1990, are, in the case of England, Scotland or Wales, those from constabularies which are maintained by a police authority or an authority which has entered into an agreement with the Police Complaints Authority under section 96(1) of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984; and, in the case of Northern Ireland, those from constabularies which are maintained by the Police Authority for Northern Ireland or an authority which has entered into an agreement with the Independent Commission for Police Complaints for Northern Ireland under article 16 of the Police (Northern Ireland) Order 1987.

Such powers exist only where there are extant directions, issued by the Secretary of State under section 22(1) to the harbour authority, for searching to be carried out.

Airports

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive a progress report from the working group, chaired by his Department, which is taking forward the Civil Aviation Authority's advice on runway capacity in the south-east.

Mr. Norris: The working group is making useful progress and will publish next year its advice on future runway capacity. Its timetable is demanding and it has no plans to prepare an interim report.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Green Minister

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Attorney-General if he will outline the priorities for future action of the green Minister in his Department (a) over the next year and (b) over this Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I would refer the hon. Member to my answer of 15 June concerning the purchasing, energy use and waste management policies of the Departments for which I am responsible.

Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Attorney-General which non-departmental public bodies are sponsored by his Department; which of these are audited by the National Audit Office; which firms of private accountants audits each of the others; by what method of tendering contracts to such firms are awarded; and for what duration.

The Attorney-General: The Departments for which I am responsible do not sponsor any non-departmental public bodies.

Trades Union Congress

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 6 July, if he will publish in the Official Report the letter of 14 February sent by the secretary of the Law Commission to the TUC and the subsequent reply.

The Attorney-General: With the consent of the senders, I have caused copies of each of the letters to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Business Sponsorship Incentive Scheme

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what information he has regarding awards made for arts projects in (a) Blaenau Gwent and (b) Wales by the business sponsorship incentive scheme in 1992.

Mr. Key: To date, 27 awards have been made to arts organisations in Wales in 1992, representing a total of £180,356 in Government money. Of these, two awards have gone to arts projects in Blaenau Gwent. The garden festival, Wales has won an award of £13,000 to match sponsorship by Optrex and Trecco Bay leisure park. The second award of £2,000 is to South Wales Potters for a ceramic display at the garden festival, sponsored by Bath Potters Supplies and Work Shop Gallery.

Royal Watercolour Society

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what discussions he has had with the Royal Watercolour Society concerning the renovation of its collection of work by British artists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Neither my right hon. and learned Friend nor I have had any discussions with the Royal Watercolour Society, because none have been requested. As a watercolour enthusiast I would be happy to meet them.

Football

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether he is ready to announce the conclusions of his reconsideration of the all-seating requirements at Football League clubs.

Mr. Mellor: I am grateful to all those who have so promptly let me have their views following my announcement on 4 June that I was reconsidering certain aspects of the all-seating requirements. I have been struck by the consistency of the views which have emerged.

I said on 4 June that I was not prepared to review either the principle of or the timetable for all-seating at first division grounds in the Football League, the new premier league. This view has been confirmed by the responses I have received and I have decided furthermore, in the light of consultation, to continue our existing policy for all-seating for clubs in the present second division. Many of these clubs have recently played in the higher division. All of them should aspire to do so. I have no doubt that they will want to prepare themselves to put those aspirations into practice by pressing ahead vigorously with an all-seating policy.

Having considered the submissions made to me, I can confirm that I am prepared to allow some standing accommodation to be retained at grounds in the third and fourth divisions provided terracing is safe. Clubs in these divisions should not see this as an easy option. They will need to ensure that such accommodation fully accords with the high standards of safety which all spectators have a right to expect. Clubs moving from the third to the second division will continue to have three seasons to convert to all-seater.

I continue to expect that the vast majority of clubs throughout the league will see as their ultimate goal the achievement of substantially seated grounds as part of their commitment to the principles of improved spectator safety and comfort defined by Lord Taylor.

Note

References in the answer to divisions are to the present divisional structure of the Football League.

Upon the introduction of the premier league on 15 August, the present second division will become the first division and the current third and fourth divisions, divisions two and three.

Festivals

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much money was provided by the Arts Council for the Sheffield festival 1991 and the Sheffield festival 1992; what guidance has been given by his Department to the Arts Council concerning continuity of funding and encouragement for the development of festivals aimed at both entertainment and urban regeneration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: Yorkshire Arts provided £14,500 in 1991 and its successor body, the Yorkshire and Humberside regional arts board, £10,750 in 1992. The very helpful contribution which the festival makes to urban regeneration was taken into account in these funding awards.

Decisions on funding allocations to arts organisations are taken at arm's length from the Government by the Arts Council and the regional arts boards. It is not for my Department to give specific guidance in this area.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Tibet

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it remains his policy to support resolution 1723 of the UN General Assembly 16th session relating to the demand for the cessation of practices which deprive the Tibetan people of their fundamental human rights and freedom, including their rights to self-determination.

Mr. Goodlad: The resolution called for the cessation of practices which deprived the Tibetans of their human rights, including their right to self-determination. Her Majesty's Government believe that all peoples have the right to self-determination, but that this right can be expressed in several different ways. In voting for this resolution, Her Majesty's Government, as was made clear at the time in the explanation of vote, was expressing its concern about the sufferings of the Tibetan people, as expressed in the preamble to the resolution.

Iraq

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to Iraq following the refusal of entry to the United Nations Special Commission team to the Ministry of Agriculture and Irrigation in Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Security Council issued a presidential statement on 6 July reminding the Iraqis of their obligations under Security Council resolutions 687 and 707 to allow inspection teams immediate, unconditional and unrestricted access to all areas they wish to inspect. An envoy from the special commission is in Baghdad and in touch with Iraqi authorities.

Saudi Arabia

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Saudi Government regarding the conditions in which refugees from Iraq are being held.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We regularly discuss Iraq-related issues with the Saudi Arabian authorities. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs did so on 2 July with the Saudi Foreign Minister. I understand that the Saudis are investing considerable resources in constructing a new camp to house Iraqi refugees in much improved conditions. This is welcome.

European Court

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions the European Court of Human Rights has considered cases related to United Kingdom taxation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The European Court of Human Rights has not considered any cases related to United Kingdom taxation.

Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which non-departmental public bodies are sponsored by his Department; which of these are audited by the National Audit Office; which firms of private accountants audits each of the others; by what method of tendering contracts to such firms are awarded; and for what duration.

Mr. Goodlad: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office currently sponsors 11 executive non-departmental public bodies and one tribunal. The bodies and their auditors are:

British Council	National Audit Office
Commonwealth Institute	National Audit Office
Marshall Aid Commemoration Commission	National Audit Office
Crown Agents Holding and Realisation Board	National Audit Office
GB-China Centre	Sayers Butterworth
British Association for Central and Eastern Europe	B. M. May
Crown Agents	Price Waterhouse
Commonwealth Development Corporation	KPMG Peat Marwick
Commonwealth Scholarship Commission	Knox Cropper
Westminster Foundation for Democracy	To be appointed
Britain Russia Centre	Gain Jackson Scott

The auditors for Crown Agents and the Commonwealth Development Corporation are appointed annually by the Secretary of State. A review of audit arrangements involving competitive tendering by leading firms of auditors is normally undertaken every six years.

Audit of the administrative costs of the Commonwealth Scholarship Commission is carried out by Knox Cropper as part of the annual audit of the Association of Commonwealth Universities. The council of the ACU appoints its auditors annually following an assessment of their performance in the previous year.

The GB-China Centre, Britain Russia Centre and British Association for Central and Eastern Europe also appoint their auditors annually following an assessment of their performance in the previous year.

The Westminster Foundation for Democracy, a new NDPB, has yet to appoint auditors; it has obtained estimates from three recommended firms of chartered accountants.

Baltic States

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when visa-issuing facilities will be available at the British posts in Riga, Tallinn and Vilnius; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A final decision has not yet been taken on establishing entry clearance sections at these posts. We are currently reviewing the situation in the light of the availability of suitable accommodation.

The hon. Member will recall from the answer I gave to his question of 19 June that nationals of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania travelling on national passports do not require visas for visits to the United Kingdom.

South Africa (Companies)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for reassessment of the EC's code of conduct for companies with interests in South Africa during the British presidency of the EC.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 9 July 1992]: Her Majesty's Government continue to believe that the code of conduct fulfills an important function and to encourage companies to comply with its terms. In political co-operation, under the previous presidency, officials began discussion of possible changes to the code's reporting procedures.

ENVIRONMENT

Peat Bogs and Heathlands

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to improve the protection of lowland peat bogs and heathlands.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State to my right hon. Friend the Member for Taunton (Mr. Nicholson) on 7 July, Official Report, column 158.

Both habitat types are covered by annex I of the EC habitats directive. The means of implementing the directive and the scientific criteria for selecting sites are under consideration.

Waste Recycling

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of household waste is currently recycled by each district council in England.

Mr. Maclean: Information on the recycling activities of individual local authorities is not held centrally at present. Work is in hand to establish better data, including a national review of waste statistics on which we are working with the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy, and the recycling plans which are now being prepared by every waste collection authority in the country as a result of the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Local Government Ombudsman

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the councils which have refused to implement the recommendations of the local government ombudsman from 1991 to date; and what action he intends to take to ensure the recommendations are carried out.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information for the year ending 31 March 1992 will be published in the 1991-92 annual report of the Commission for Local Administration. The citizens charter makes clear the Government's intention to consider making the ombudsman's recommendations legally enforceable if such a step should become necessary.

Sewerage

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to make connection to adopted sewers compulsory for households in areas with (a) sensitive aquifiers and (b) pollution of streams and waterways.

Mr. Maclean: None. Septic tanks or cesspits can provide satisfactory drainage if they are properly designed and operated. For isolated properties, the provision of a public sewer might be prohibitively expensive. The National Rivers Authority has powers which it can use to control and prevent pollution from domestic drainage.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies he has made of the refusal of households to connect to first-time sewage schemes.

Mr. Maclean: A local authority would normally not requisition a first-time sewerage scheme unless the majority of householders in the relevant area had indicated that they wished to connect to public sewers. The Department's experience of grant-aiding schemes in rural areas shows that very small schemes usually have a 100 per cent. connection rate. Larger schemes serving whole villages have a lower connection rate because some of the properties will have an adequate septic tank or cesspit which the household can continue to use without problems. Some householders who do not connect when a mains system is first installed may do so later.

Housing Defects

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) of 13 May, Official Report, column 128, who undertook the efficiency scrutiny report into the housing defects scheme of assistance; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Baldry: The efficiency scrutiny report of the housing defects scheme of assistance was undertaken by Mrs. Susan Deville, an official in the Department. A copy will be placed in the Library.

Tillingdown Farm, Caterham

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent planning inquiry appeal, under the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 and the Planning and Compensation Act 1991, in regard to land use at Tillingdown farm, Caterham.

Mr. Baldry: In a decision issued on 22 June, on an appeal under section 174(2)(b) and (c) of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990, a planning inspector corrected and upheld Surrey county council's enforcement notice requiring the use of land at Tillingdown farm, Caterham, for the deposit of waste materials to cease. It is open to the appellant to seek the leave of the High court, in accordance with the amended provisions of section 289 of the 1990 Act, to appeal to the court, on a point of law, against the inspector's decision.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent applications have been received from Amersham International to dispose of low-activity radioactive waste under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960, at sites near Amersham other than those currently covered by licences under the Act.

Mr. Maclean: No such applications have been received.

Joint Nature Conservation Committee

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will indicate the current number of staff employed by, or seconded to, the Joint Nature Conservation Committee; and whether any posts have yet to be filled.

Mr. Maclean: There are currently 53·5 permanent staff on secondment to the committee from the country councils. A further 1·5 permanent posts are filled by fixed-term appointments and four permanent posts vacant. In addition, there are 37 fixed term appointments to undertake work on projects with a limited timetable. The formal staff complement for the JNCC is currently under review.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what role the Joint Nature Conservation Committee will play in advising the Government on the legislation and procedural changes which will be required in order that the United Kingdom can meet its obligations under the new EC directive on the conservation of wildlife and habitats.

Mr. Maclean: The Government are involving the Joint Nature Conservation Committee and the country councils closely in the consideration of the measures necessary to implement the habitats directive. The JNCC's particular responsibility will be to ensure that the scientific response to the directive's requirements is consistent across the United Kingdom.

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the functions and responsibilities of the Joint Nature Conservation Committee.

Mr. Maclean: The Joint Nature Conservation Committee was established under section 128(4) of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 to discharge the functions set out in section 133 of the Act. These include the provision of advice on nature conservation for great Britain as a whole or outside Great Britain, the establishment of standards for common monitoring and research and the commissioning of research.

Hostel Deficit Grant

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will obtain from the Housing Corporation a report of its assessment as to whether the use of hostel deficit grant by the Ling Trust in Essex to purchase district health authority staff time in respect of the care of former residents of Turner Village mental handicap hospital is in accordance with the regulations governing the provision of such grants.

Mr. Baldry: The Housing Corporation has received a claim for hostel deficit grant in respect of nine schemes managed by the Ling Trust, including accommodation for former residents of Turner Village hospital. The claim is being considered and no grant has been paid.

Hostel deficit grant is payable in respect of deficits incurred by registered housing associations in the housing management of hostels. Welfare costs, such as the cost of care staff, are not eligible for grant and associations need to look to other agencies, such as local health or social services authorities or charities, to support such expenditure.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses in the network installer area including Glasgow, Central constituency have been improved under the home energy efficiency scheme.

Mr. Maclean: Within the network installer area which contains the hon. Member's constituency, 1,018 homes have benefited from HEES grant since 1 January 1991.

Local Government Commission

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on which counties the Local Government Commission will consider; in what order and on what time scale.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. and learned Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Somerton and Frome (Mr. Robinson) on 3 June, Official Report, columns 545-46.

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the terms of reference of the Local Government Commission; and what guidance he has given as to the optimum size of a new unitary authority.

Mr. Robin Squire: The terms of reference of the Local Government Commission are set out in section 13(5) of the Local Government Act 1992.

The size of authorities is covered in paragraph 10 of our revised policy guidance which was placed in the Library on 3 June. My right hon. and learned Friend intends to direct the commission to have regard to this guidance shortly.

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Local Government Commission was established; and if he will list the names, qualifications and previous experience of its members.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Local Government Commission was formally established on 1 July. My hon. Friend the Minister of State for Local Government and Inner Cities, announced the names of the members we have appointed to the commission on 15 June, Official Report, column 397, and 3 July, Official Report, column 719. Further details about these members are available from my Department's press notice, a copy of which I have placed in the Library.

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to appoint an equal number of women and men members to the Local Government Commission.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Member to the answers my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Local Government and Inner Cities gave to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike), on 15 June, Official Report, column 397, and to my hon. Friend the Member for the Isle of Wight (Mr. Field), on 3 July, Official Report, column 719.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of capital allowances claimed for investment in enterprise zones.

Mr. Redwood: The total cost of capital allowances for all enterprise zones in Britain, estimated from eligible private sector investment in construction in the zones as at 31 March 1990, was £600 million in 1989-90 prices.

Unitary Authorities

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if it is his intention that any local authority whose boundary is coterminous with that of a shire county will be able to apply for unitary authority status when the position of that shire county is considered by the boundary commission.

Mr. Robin Squire The Local Government Commission's priority is to examine the structure of local government in the shire counties, as directed by the Secretary of State. Where the commission judges it necessary to make recommendations concerning localities bordering on an area under review, it should ask the Secretary of State to vary his direction requiring the review to be conducted.

Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which non-departmental public bodies are sponsored by his Department; which of these are audited by the National Audit Office; which firms of private accountants audits each of the others; by what method of tendering contracts to such firms are awarded; and for what duration.

Mr. Howard: The Comptroller and Auditor General, who is head of the National Audit Office, has statutory responsibility for auditing the accounts of the Audit Commission, the Countryside Commission, the Nature Conservancy Council for England—English Nature—and the Rural Development Commission. The external auditors of the other executive NDPBs sponsored by the Department are:

Executive NDPB	External Auditor
British Board of Agrément	BDO Binder Hamlyn
Commission for the New Towns	Ernst and Young
Housing action trusts:
North Hull	Kidsons Impey
Waltham Forest	Pannell, Kerr Forster
Housing Corporation	Coopers and Lybrand
Letchworth Garden City Corporation	Ernst and Young
Local Government Commission	not yet appointed
London Pensions Fund Authority	District Audit Service of the Audit Commission
London residuary body	District Audit Service of the Audit Commission

Executive NDPB	External Auditor
National Rivers Authority	Coopers and Lybrand
Urban development corporations:
Black Country	Touche Ross and Co.
Bristol	Touche Ross and Co.
Central Manchester	Touche Ross and Co.
Leeds	Kidsons Impey
London Docklands	Ernst and Young
Merseyside	Price Waterhouse
Sheffield	Price Waterhouse
Teesside	Price Waterhouse
Trafford Park	Price Waterhouse
Tyne and Wear	Coopers and Lybrand

These appointments are made annually and are renewed subject to satisfactory performance. Formal reviews, involving competitive tendering, are held at least every six years.

Maintenance Work, Calderdale

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has decided to take against Calderdale metropolitan borough council following the issue of notices under section 13 of the Local Government Act 1988 in relation to its decision to assign vehicle maintenance and ground maintenance work to its direct service organisation.

Mr. Robin Squire: My right hon. and learned Friend has given careful consideration to the response which Calderdale metropolitan borough council has made to the notices served on 19 May 1992, and has today given a direction under section 14 of the Local Government Act 1988 in respect of vehicle maintenance work. The direction requires the council to re-tender the contract and to seek the Secretary of State's consent before awarding the work to its direct service organisation.

The Secretary of State has decided not to give a direction in respect of the ground maintenance work.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the number of jobs created in each urban development corporation area, including information to March 1992; and if he will include a column of figures indicating the net and percentage increase or decrease of jobs relative for March 1991.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 20 May 1992]: Estimates of employment in urban development areas are derived from surveys commissioned periodically by urban development corporations. Seven UDCs have undertaken such surveys recently and, in a number of UDCs, the estimate of the number of net permanent jobs created to March 1991 has been revised in consequence.

The information requested is as follows:

	Permanent jobs
Urban development area	Net gain to March 1991 (Revised figures)	Net gain to March 1992 (Estimated)	Estimated net increase (Decrease)	Estimated percentage change
Black Country	[1]2,600	3,000	400	15
Bristol	4,500	4,483	(17)	0
Central Manchester	950	750	(200)	(21)
Leeds	[1]5,862	3,875	(1,987)	(34)
London Docklands	26,000	[1]26,000	0	0
Merseyside	4,000	2,000	(2,000)	(50)
Sheffield	5,862	5,902	40	1
Teesside	4,446	6,025	1,579	36
Trafford Park	2,557	[2]8,231	5,674	222
Tyne and Wear	4,785	9,237	4,452	93
TOTALS	61,562	69,503	7,941	13

Notes:
[1] No revised estimate made.
[2] May include jobs created in earlier years.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to provide a substantive reply to the question of 20 May from the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside regarding the number of jobs created in each urban development corporation to March.

Mr. Redwood: I have answered this question today.

SCOTLAND

Drug Surveillance

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the number of police working on drug surveillance in each police force.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 July 1992]: The number of officers dedicated to drugs duties is as follows:

	Number
Central Scotland	4
Dumfries and Galloway	2
Fife	4
Grampian	11
Lothian and Borders	24
Northern	5
Strathclyde	34
Tayside	12
TOTAL	96

In addition, there are 40 officers in the drugs wings of the Scottish crime squad engaged in drugs inquiries.

Police

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to meet police authorities to discuss manning levels in Scottish police forces.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 July 1992]: My right hon. Friend has at present no plans to do so. Manpower in each force is primarily the responsibility of the police authority concerned. If an authority decides to change the establishment level it has authorised, it requires my right hon. Friend's consent to the proposed change.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to give the police extra resources to deal with increasing drug problems in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 July 1992]: Police authorities determine the resources allocated to their forces and it is for chief constables to decide how the resources available to them should be deployed. The authorities receive police grant at 51 per cent. of their net expenditure. In addition, in the financial years 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93, three extra officers have been added each year to the strength of the Scottish crime squad for drugs-related inquiries.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Strathclyde on the number of police involved in the recent drug operation in Linwood, Renfrewshire, where seven people were charged with drug-related offences.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 July 1992]: No. This is an operational matter which is entirely the responsibility of the chief constable.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) armed robberies and (b) crimes involving weapons have taken place during the last five years in K division and X division of Strathclyde police.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 2 July 1992]: The available information is given in the table.

Number of robberies and crimes and offences involving the alleged use of firearms recorded in divisions K and X of Strathclyde police 1987 to 1991

	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991
K division, Strathclyde police
(a) Robberies involving the alleged use of a firearm	11	1	12	23	57
(b) Crimes and offences involving the alleged use of a firearm[1]	76	43	54	123	159
X division, Strathclyde police
(a) Robberies involving the alleged use of a firearm	0	0	3	4	7
(b) Crimes and offences involving the alleged use of a firearm[1]	20	12	20	22	34

[1] These figures include robberies involving the alleged use of a firearm shown separately in (a) above.

Drug-related Crimes

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many drug-related crimes have been committed in Scotland in the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 3 July 1992]: Information collected centrally on crimes recorded by the police is not held in a form which shows whether or not the crime was drug related. Information on the number of drugs offences, which includes importation, production, supply and possession of drugs, recorded by the police in the last five years is contained in the statistical bulletin "Recorded crime in Scotland 1991" which was published on 22 May 1992 and a copy of which is in the Library.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Departmental Select Committees

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he expects to provide a substantive reply to the question from the hon. Member for Newham, North-West on 22 May concerning reports from departmental Select Committees.

Mr. Newton: I replied to the hon. Member on Thursday 9 July.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Beef Premium

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will press for the introduction of a higher rate of premium for cattle stocked at 0·5 or 1·0 livestock units per hectare within the less favoured areas as a complementary measure to the £29 per cow which will be paid to all beef cows stocked 1·5 livestock units per hectare as agreed in the recent common agricultural policy reforms.

Mr. Curry: The Council has now reached agreement on the CAP reform package. For beef, the requirements on stocking densities make a valuable contribution to our environmental objectives. It would not be possible or desirable to reopen the CAP reform package to amend these stocking rate provisions.

Set-aside

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to use the United Kingdom Presidency to widen the choice available to farmers required to join rotational set-aside in order to receive compensation aids for cereals so that farmers who have already set aside land under the farm woodland premium scheme or countryside stewardship are also eligible.

Mr. Curry: We have already successfully negotiated arrangements under which we will be able to have non-rotational as well as rotational set-aside. This will increase the range of management options open to farmers under the new arable regime. Under the set-aside, land must normally be taken out of agricultural production in contrast to countryside stewardship which encouraged continued agricultural production in a way that enhances the environment.

Very few farmers have yet planted land with trees under the farm woodland premium scheme. We are exploring with the EC Commission the scope for set-aside land that has been planted with trees under the old farm woodland scheme or land that will be entered into the farm woodland premium scheme to count towards a farmers set-aside obligation under the new arable scheme. However, it would not be right to allow any element of double payment on that land.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library a copy of his study of the evaluation of set-aside conducted by the university of Reading.

Mr. Gummer: In accordance with my usual policy, I gave an undertaking to publish this report. This will be fulfilled once the final report is ready, and a copy will be placed in the Library.

Badgers

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if field tests monitoring further destruction of badgers are currently being carried out by or on behalf of his Department.

Mr. Soames: The greatest cause of destruction of live badgers, apart from disease, is road accidents, which some estimates indicate are responsible for as many as 47,500 badger deaths per year. The field tests undertaken by Ministry staff are concerned with the development of better methods of dealing with the problem of tuberculosis.

Fishing, Tendring

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has taken to resolve the dispute brought to his attention by the chairman of the Tendring district sports council concerning anglers and inshore fishermen within the Tendring district; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: A meeting was held on 25 June involving all those concerned, and I understand that a satisfactory solution was found. I welcome this as constructive discussions are the best route to resolve such problems.

Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which non-departmental public bodies are sponsored by his Department; which of these are audited by the National Audit Office; which firms of private accountants audits each of the others; by what method of tendering contracts to such firms are awarded; and for what duration.

Mr. Curry: The non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Department are listed in the table. The National Audit Office audits the royal botanic gardens, Kew, in accordance with paragraph 39(6) of schedule 1 to the National Heritage Act 1983. The firms of private accountants who audit the other non-departmental public bodies which are subject to audit are shown next to them.

Non-departmental public body	Audited by
Agricultural Training Board	Touche Ross
Apple and Pear Research Council	Day, Smith & Hunter
Food from Britain	Touche Ross
Home Grown Cereals Authority	KPMG Peat Marwick
Horticultural Development Council	Barter & Durgan
Horticultural Research International	Robson Rhodes
Meat and Livestock Commission	Coopers & Lybrand
Sea Fish Industry Authority	Coopers & Lybrand
Wine Standards Board of the Vinters' Company	Coulthards Mackenzie

I understand that the auditors were appointed after competitive tendering. The duration of the contract is not normally stated in the contract, but performance is monitored annually and a formal review is undertaken within six years.

Food Surplus Scheme

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the invitation to organisations to participate in the 1992 surplus food scheme in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: I announced to the House on 26 February that the surplus food scheme would be continued and invited applications from eligible organisations interested in taking part in the distribution.

A very large number of applications was received by the closing date of 10 April and of these I, together with the Secretaries of State for Scotland, for Wales and for Northern Ireland, have been able to designate 1,367 organisations. There are approximately 3,700 tonnes of butter and 3,000 tonnes of beef available to be distributed to the most needy citizens.

Once again, we have designated more organisations than in the previous years in order to ensure that the food is distributed to as many needy people at possible. But, as the quantities are limited, it will be necessary to place restrictions on the amount of produce available to organisations to ensure a wide coverage of distribution. We have therefore restricted the maximum amount of produce to be allocated to organisations to some 1 kg of packaged butter or tinned beef per individual recipient.

Priority in allocating this food is being given to organisations providing prepared meals to the homeless and destitute, who will be allocated twice that amount.

In addition, in order to receive an allocation, the smallest organisations will be asked to co-operate with others to keep the processing and distribution costs to a minimum.

I am placing a list of the organisations designated in the Libraries and officials will now be writing to all the organisations that applied.

Molluscs

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to publish the classification of shellfish harvesting areas which is required under EC directive 91/492 laying down the health conditions for the production and placing on the market of live bivalve molluscs.

Mr. Gummer: Officials from the Department have today circulated a preliminary version of the classification to interested parties for comment. I have placed a copy of the consultation letter and classification in the Library of the House.

All areas where bivalve mulluscs such as oysters, mussels and cockles are harvested are to be classified according to the bacterial contamination present in the mollusc flesh as required by EC directive 91/492/EEC.

The classification will provide an indication of whether the product can be placed on the market for human consumption or how it must be treated, either by purification, relaying or heat treatment.

The preliminary classification has been based on samples of bivalve molluscs taken by local authority environmental health officers from 75 known harvesting areas. Sample testing has been undertaken by public health laboratories and the results classified by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's fish disease laboratory in Weymouth.

Food Premises

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what statistical information for 1991 on inspection of food premises required by the EC Commission under directive 89/397 is available.

Mr. Gummer: The United Kingdom figures for food premises inspections during 1991 have been forwarded to the European Community Commission as required by directive 89/397. They are based on returns received from local authorities. A copy of the return has been placed in the Library of the House together with extracts covering England, Wales, Scotland and Northen Ireland respectively. Returns from individual authorities are available for inspection at my Department; copies can be provided for a small charge to cover expenses.

Sherwood Forest

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to revive Sherwood forest; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The name Sherwood forest is famous throughout the world and the forest is one of Britain's best-known tourist destinations. Little remains, however, of the ancient Sherwood forest, and what survives is subject to intense public pressure.

The Government believe that the time is now right for a programme of work to improve, and perhaps recreate, the Sherwood forest of old. This would enhance the appearance of an area of historic importance, provide an alternative use for agricultural land in a nitrate sensitive area and create valuable leisure attraction for the east midlands.

I have therefore asked the Forestry Commission to redesign its existing forest areas. This will quickly achieve a considerable visual improvement and restore some of the original heathland. The long-term aim will be to reconstruct and revive areas of mixed woodland of a type native to Sherwood.

Informal discussions have been held with the local authorities, and other parties, and I am pleased to announce that there is enthusiastic support for the initiative. The proposals I am setting out will draw on the report of a feasibility study "Bringing Back the Sherwood Green" undertaken in 1988 by the Nottinghamshire Wildlife Trust, the Conservation Foundation and David Bellamy Associates. The Nottinghamshire county structure plan of 1988 also referred to the development of Sherwood forest. A community forest to the south-east of the Sherwood area has recently been launched.

As a first step, the Forestry Commission will undertake a number of improvements to its 4,000 hectare landholding. These will diversify the mixture of species and ages of existing woodlands and take advantage of the scope for a degree of heathland restoration. Regeneration of the oak and birch woodlands will be encouraged by careful management and particular attention will be paid to forest areas adjacent to public roads. The commission will also encourage better management of existing woodland and further new planting by private landowners and tenants through the woodland grant scheme. More public access to the forest will be encouraged where it fits in with landowners' objectives.

To assist in taking these ideas forward, the Forestry Commission will set up a steering group, to include respresentatives of the local authorities, the Nottinghamshire Wildlife Trust, forestry, landowning and farming interests, and others.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Paper Back Campaign

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received about the Paper Back Campaign of the British Paper and Board Industry Federation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My Department has received various representations about the Paper Back Campaign, as a result of which officials have had discussions with representatives of the British Paper and Board Industry Federation and others in the waste paper industry; further meetings are planned.

Assisted Areas

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to make available new investment funds to Cumbria under the assisted areas scheme.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Government will consider the needs and circumstances of all areas, including Cumbria, before making decisions later this year under the current review of the assisted areas.

LASCAR

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many meetings of the LASCAR—large-scale commercial reprocessing plant safeguards—group on nuclear safeguards have been held since June 1990; what issues have been discussed and decided; what United Kingdom representation there has been at LASCAR meetings; which interim reports on LASCAR meetings have been published; and when the final report of the LASCAR group will be made public.

Mr. Eggar: Eight meetings of the LASCAR group on large-scale reprocessing plant safeguards have been held since June 1990. Typically one representative from DTI and two from industry have attended for the United Kingdom.

The issues and conclusions of LASCAR are described in the "Report of the LASCAR Forum". In addition, a paper describing aspects of LASCAR's work was published in July 1990, at the Institute of Nuclear Materials management conference. Copies of both papers are available in the Library of the House.

Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to order an investigation into the accuracy of the results obtained from the radiation monitor film badges used by the work force at British Nuclear Fuel's Sellafield plant over the past 20 years, following BNFL's recent announcement that significant under-recording has taken place.

Mr. Eggar: BNFL has not made any announcement suggesting under-recording of radiation dose assessments by film badges over the past 20 years. An expert review of historical radiation dose assessed by film badges was initiated by BNFL as a result of the litigation process into allegations of Sellafield being responsible for two cases of childhood leukaemia in the vicinity of the plant. These cases are currently before the courts. The indications from BNFL's expert review are that there are no compelling reasons to adjust the recorded doses from gamma radiation. I therefore see no need to carry out a further investigation of the type requested.

Parcelforce

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he plans to privatise the Post Office's Parcelforce business; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 9 July 1992]: The Government's policy towards the Post Office remains as set out in the citizens charter and in our election manifesto.

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) why he has authorised the Post Office to drop the Royal Mail prefix from the name of its Parcelforce business; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he plans to retain the monarch's cipher on livery and vehicles owned by the Post Office's Parcelforce business, once the Royal Mail prefix has been dropped;

(3) what consultations there were over the proposal to remove the Royal Mail prefix from the title of the Post Office's Parcelforce business; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 9 July 1992]: Details about Parcelforce's name are an operational matter. This decision was taken by Parcelforce management for commercial reasons.

Correspondence

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will be replying to the letter sent on 9 June from the hon. Member for Halifax.

Mr. Heseltine: I will write to the hon. Member.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

European Year of the Elderly

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has for his Department to celebrate in 1993 the European Year of the Elderly; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I have no such plans.

Relocation

Mr. Betts: To ask the Attorney-General what assessment he has made of the number of civil servants in his Department who could be relocated to provincial centres as part of the policy of devolving and decentralising Government Departments.

The Attorney-General: I have no plans to relocate any civil servants in the legal secretariat to the Law Officers or the Serious Fraud Office. The property division of the Treasury Solicitor's Department—nearly one quarter of the total staff—was relocated to Taunton in August 1991 but no further parts of the office are suitable for relocation. Some 90 per cent. of the staff of the Crown prosecution service are located near to the courts throughout England and Wales which deal with the criminal cases prosecuted by the service. The scope for devolving headquarters posts to locations outside London is kept continuously under review.

British National Party

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the evidence submitted to the Crown prosecution service following the search of the British National party premises in Welling in January.

The Attorney-General: A police report was submitted to the Crown prosecution service following the execution of a search warrant on 9 January 1992 at premises at 154 Upper Wickham lane, Welling in Kent.

Having given careful consideration to this report and taken the advice of Treasury Counsel, the Crown prosecution service decided not to initiate proceedings, on the basis that the available evidence was not such as to give rise to a realistic prospect of conviction for offences contrary to part III of the Public Order Act 1986.

I have also considered this matter and have concluded that the decision by the Crown prosecution service is entirely justified.

ENVIRONMENT

Caravan Sites Act 1968

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to publish a consultation document on the Caravan Sites Act 1968; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave my right hon. Friend the Member for Woking (Mr. Onslow) on 19 June, Official Report, column 693.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to review the outstanding permission for mineral extraction which affect sites of special scientific interest.

Mr. Baldry: The Town and Country Planning (Minerals) Act 1981 placed a duty on mineral planning authorities to review mineral sites in their area, including environmentally sensitive sites such as SSSIs, and to make such orders revoking or modifying permissions as they considered necessary. The Government announced in the environment White Paper "This Common Inheritance" their intention to review the legislative framework governing the updating of minerals permissions. We have already taken action in the Planning and Compensation Act 1991 to deal with the problems caused by Interim Development Order permissions granted in the 1940s and we are consulting on options for updating mineral permissions granted in the 1950s, 1960s and 1970s.

Protected Birds

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will strengthen statutory provision for protection for vulnerable habitats and protected species in the United Kingdom along the lines proposed to him by the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds.

Mr. Maclean: The RSPB has made a number of representations to my right hon. and learned Friend, to me and to my officials about the protection of habitats and species. I am always pleased to receive its proposals and take them fully into account in my considerations of policy for nature conservation.

Vacant Public Land

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to develop vacant and derelict public land for recreation purposes.

Mr. Baldry: We have recently announced our intention to establish an Urban Regeneration Agency with powers to reclaim vacant, derelict and underused land in urban areas. As indicated in planning policy guidance note 17 "Sport and Recreation", published in September 1991, the Government encourage the development of sport and recreation in the widest sense and advises local planning authorities on the policies they should incorporate in their development plans for the provision of space and facilities for sport and recreation. The Urban Regeneration Agency will promote the use of land it reclaims for these purposes where appropriate.

"Agenda 21"

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new United Kingdom contributions to international scientific programmes he proposes to establish as a result of the "Agenda 21" chapter on science for sustainable development agreed at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

Mr. Maclean: This chapter has four programme areas —strengthening the scientific basis for sustainable development, enhancing scientific understanding, improving long-term scientific assessment, and building up scientific capacity and capability. The United Kingdom is already extremely active in these areas working with developing countries both directly and through governmental and non-governmental international bodies. We are, for example, playing leading roles in a range of international programmes on climate change and its consequences. Some of the additional funds committed by the United Kingdom by replenishing the global environmental facility will no doubt be deployed on projects covered by chapter 35. More specifically, the United Kingdom initiatives on satelite monitoring, on technology, transfer, and on biodiversity—the Darwin initiative—will add significantly to our inputs to promoting science for sustainable development. I understand that new Natural Environment Research Council initiatives in training and research in taxonomy and in biodiversity, are designed to strengthen the United Kingdom science base thus underpinning existing and new applied work with developing countries.

Relocation

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the number of civil servants in his Department who could be relocated to provincial centres as part of the policy of devolving and decentralising Government Departments.

Mr. Howard: The need for civil servants in my Department to be located in central London is kept under review, in accordance with Government policy. We continue therefore to look for further opportunities to move posts to other parts of the country, in addition to looking at the suitability of posts to be moved to docklands.

Gipsy Sites

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pending the publication of his consultation paper on the law relating to gipsy sites, he will suspend further approval of local authority applications for the funding of pitches on council sites and any decisions on applications for designation of areas under sections 10 and 12 of the Caravan Sites Act 1968.

Mr. Baldry: I do not think that it would be appropriate to do so.

Abstraction Licences

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent discussions he has had with the chairman of the National Rivers Authority about the provision of funds for the revocation of abstraction licences.

Mr. Maclean: The funding implications of the authority's proposals for this and other water resources capital expenditure were among the issues I discussed with my right hon. and noble Friend at our recent meeting on the authority's corporate plan.

Household Waste

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of household waste has been recycled by Chelmsford borough council in each of the last three available years.

Mr. Maclean: Information on the recycling activities of individual local authorities is not held centrally at present. Recycling plans are now being prepared by every waste collection authority in the country as a result of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. The plans are due to be submitted in draft to the Secretary of State by 1 August. they will contain information on the quantities of waste which the council expects to deal with by separating, baling or otherwise packaging it for the purpose of recycling it. The plan for Chelmsford has not yet been received.

Council House Exchanges

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council tenants sought advice from their council about how to exchange their home with a tenant in a different local authority area in the six months from October 1991 to March 1992; and how many mutual exchanges took place in this period.

Mr. Baldry: Information is not collected centrally about the number of council tenants who seek advice from their local authority about exchanging their home.

Information about the number of mutual exchanges is reported by local authorities on their annual housing investment programme returns—HIP1. The latest available information records that 46,100 dwellings were let through mutual exchanges in the period 1 April 1990 to 31 March 1991.

Private Sector Leases

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to assist local authorities in tackling homelessness by reducing the cost of private sector leases.

Mr. Baldry: No. It is for local authorities to negotiate the cost of leases with landlords on an individual basis. My Department is, however, providing assistance of £20 million this year to the local authorities most affected by the recent change to finance short-term leases from outside the housing revenue account.

Council House Waiting Lists

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many names are on the waiting lists for tenancies of council houses in England.

Mr. Baldry: Local authorities report the number of households on their council housing waiting lists in their annual housing investment programme—HIP1—returns.

The figures as at 1 April 1991 are in colum B5 of the "1991 HIP1 All Items Print", a copy of which is in the Library.

Vacant Public Sector Land

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many years it would take to get rid of the surplus vacant public sector land; and how much it would cost to run the register for that period if no extra land was added to the register;

(2) what is the regional breakdown of land on the surplus vacant public sector land register with no potential, low potential and moderate/high potential, on a percentage basis;

(3) how many acres of unused and underused land are at present in the ownership of British Rail, the urban development corporations, local authorities, government departments, the residuary bodies and British Coal;

(4) how many acres of unused and underused land have been entered onto and also removed from the surplus vacant public sector land register in 1989, 1990, 1991 and 1992.

Mr. Baldry: The Secretary of State's register of unused and underused land has for most purposes been superseded by registers maintained by each public sector owner and since 1989 has been maintained only in connection with requests to order the disposal of sites. The central register is therefore too out of date to be used as a basis for meaningful analysis.

The Department does not hold detailed information about the amount of land on the registers maintained by owners or the quality and development potential of individual sites. Nor can we make estimates of the costs incurred by owners in maintaining the registers.

Town and Country Planning

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what benefits he expects to accrue to the United Kingdom from the inclusion of town and country planning in the Maastricht treaty as a new EC competence.

Mr. Baldry: The benefit to the United Kingdom is that the inclusion clarifies the competence of the Community on this aspect of environmental policy as well as the decision-making procedures to be followed on proposals from the Commission.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many permanent jobs have been created in each urban development area (a) since 1981-82 and (b) since 1987-88, net of losses.

Mr. Robin Squire: Estimates of employment in urban development areas are derived from surveys commissioned periodically by urban development corporations, and refer to the period since the designation of the areas. The figures below give the latest net estimate of permanent jobs created since inception in all UDAs except Merseyside. The figures for Merseyside UDA relate to the period since the area was extended in 1988.

UDA	Date Established	Estimated number of permanent jobs created (net of losses)
London Docklands	1981	26,000
Merseyside	extended 1988	2,000
Trafford Park	1987	8,231
Black Country	1987	3,000
Teesside	1987	6,025
Tyne & Wear	1987	9,237
Central Manchester	1988	750
Leeds	1988	3,875
Sheffield	1988	5,902
Bristol	1989	4,483

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what levels of borrowing have been undertaken by each urban development corporation in each year since 1985-86.

Mr. Robin Squire: This information is as follows:

	Amount
Bristol	— nil
Black Country	— nil
Central Manchester	— £350,000 in 1991-92
Leeds	— nil
London Docklands	— £3,100,000 in 1985-86
Merseyside	— £605,000 in 1985-86
	— £55,000 in 1986-87
	— £10,000 in 1987-88
Sheffield	— nil
Teeside	— £227,000 in 1988-89
Trafford Park	— nil
Tyne and Wear	— nil

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much grant in aid has been made available to each urban development corporation since 1981 as a cash sum (a) at current prices and (b) 1981 prices.

Mr. Robin Squire: Only two urban development corporations have been in existence since 1981, London Docklands and Merseyside. Their total grant in aid since 1981 is:

	£ million
(a) at current prices;
London Docklands	1,317·51
Merseyside	268·22
(b) at 1981 prices;
London Docklands	1,994·65
Merseyside	361·68

For the total grant in aid made available to the other urban development corporations from their inception, I refer to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member on 24 June 1992, Official Report, columns 195-96.

Area Cost Adjustment Scheme

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will redistribute the money made available under the area cost adjustment scheme to south-east authorities outside London in a manner which would treat all local authorities equally; and what sums would be made available to other authorities by such redistribution.

Mr. Robin Squire: The area cost adjustment within standard spending assessments reflects the additional employment costs faced by authorities in London and the south-east in providing the services for which they are responsible at a standard level. There are no plans to remove this adjustment for authorities in the south-east but we are always willing to consider any evidence brought forward.

If the money made available under the area cost adjustment to south-east authorities outside London were to be redistributed to all authorities outside London the sum available would be £15 per adult.

Planning and Compensation Act 1991

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to bring into force the remaining enforcement provisions of the Planning and Compensation Act 1991.

Sir George Young [holding answer 10 July 1992]: On 27 July we shall bring into force—

(1) the new breach of condition notice (section 2 of the Act), enabling the local planning authority to enforce compliance with planning conditions more economically and efficiently;

(2) the revised enforcement "immunity" rules (section 4 of the Act), establishing new time-limits for the planning authority to initiate enforcement action; and

(3) the new "lawful development certificate" provisions (section 10 of the Act), enabling the planning authority to decide, on an application to them, whether present or proposed development of land is lawful for planning control purposes.

A joint Department of the Environment and Welsh Office circular is being issued today, explaining how these provisions are intended to operate.

These provisions complete the implementation of the Government's thorough overhaul of planning authorities' powers for enforcing planning control over all types of unauthorised development of land. Provided that planning authorities use these new and strengthened powers vigorously and quickly, whenever their use is justified, they should now be able to remedy unlawful development whenever it is unacceptable on planning grounds. We intend to review the effectiveness of the strengthened enforcement regime once it has been in operation for a reasonable period.

Recycling

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements will be made for evaluating the environmental impact of recyclable materials in products before a Europewide standard for recycling comes into force.

Mr. Leigh: I have been asked to reply.

I have no reason to believe that a Europewide standard for recycling is coming into force, or being contemplated. However, my Department has commissioned Warren Spring laboratory to carry out research into the environmental impact of recycling. In addition, the recyclability of materials used in products may feature as one of the criteria for the award of ecolabels under the recently agreed EC ecolabelling regulation.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what arrangements have been made for exchange of manufacturing information relating to recyclable materials across Europe.

Mr. Leigh: I have been asked to reply.

No arrangements of a formal nature have been put in place, but my Department and the Department of the Environment participate in international and EC conferences, seminars and workshops at which recycling issues generally are debated, and views exchanged.

TRANSPORT

Shipping

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what estimate he has made of (a) foreign earnings by British shipping, (b) earnings of British shipping from the United Kingdom cabotage trade and (c) the City of London's maritime earnings, for each of the last 20 years;

(2) what estimate he has made for the earnings of United Kingdom-owned vessels from cross-trades for each of the last 20 years, respectively;

(3) what latest figure he has for the percentage of United Kingdom shipping earnings that come from cross-trade.

Mr. Norris: The table sets out the available figures. It does not include estimates of earnings on United Kingdom cabotage, information on which is not readily available.

	(1) Total International Revenue	(2) Revenue from Cross Trades	(3) Cross Trades as percentage of total	(4) City of London Maritime earnings

Notes:—Column 1 includes earnings from United Kingdom passengers and freight on United Kingdom imports.

Column 3 covers ONLY earnings from overseas residents by Baltic Exchange and Lloyd's Register of Shipping. Estimates of earnings from maritime insurance are not readily available.

Estimates for 1991 will be available in the latest edition of the CSO Pink Book ("UK Balance of Payments"), to be published within the next two months.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many seafarers are currently employed on vessels which are beneficially British-owned on, respectively, the United Kingdom register, the Crown dependencies register, British dependent territories register, and any other register, on the latest date for which he has figures, and on each year for the last 20 years.

Mr. Norris: Employment figures which distinguish between United Kingdom and non-United Kingdom flagged ships are not available for years prior to 1986. Separate statistics for the Crown dependencies and dependent territories registers are not produced. The annual statistics available to the Department do not include seafarers employed by companies which do not belong to the Chamber of Shipping.

With these provisos, the table shows the information requested:

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what figure he has for the number of beneficially British-owned vessels registered, for each of the last 20 years respectively in (a) the Crown dependencies, (b) British dependent territories, (c) the United Kingdom and (d) none of the above;

(2) if he will list the number of vessels, not beneficially British owned, which have been registered on the United Kingdom register, the registers for Crown dependencies and the registers of British dependent territories, in each of the last 20 years respectively.

Mr. Norris: Information is only available from 1988 onwards, as follows—vessels over 100 gross registered tons:

Number of United Kingdom parent owned vessels, by registry and year[1]

Registry	1988	1989	1990	1991	[2]1992
United Kingdom	1,720	1,668	1,584	1,557	1,542
Crown Dependency	83	68	87	91	91
Dependent Territories	149	141	117	120	119
Foreign	528	536	674	698	709
TOTAL	2,480	2,413	2,462	2,466	2,461

[1] As at 31 December.
[2] As at 31 March 1992.

Number of non-United Kingdom parent owned vessels, by registry and year[1]

Registry	1988	1989	1990	1991	[2]1992
United Kingdom	290	268	279	262	257
Crown Dependency	79	69	49	46	45
Dependent Territories	779	660	619	603	604

[2] As at 31 March 1992.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what calculation he has made of the average age of the United Kingdom-owned fleet registered in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the Crown dependencies and (c) the dependent territories at the latest date for which figures are available; and what estimate he has of the average age of vessels of the United Kingdom's main merchant navy competitors.

Mr. Norris: Figures for British-registered fleets and for the fleets of other major shipping registers, are shown in the tables:

Average age[1] of the United Kingdom owned trading[2] fleet: by registry: 31 March 1992

Registry	Average age Years	Months
United Kingdom	16	1
Crown Dependencies	14	2
Dependent territories	12	7
Foreign registries	15	5
All United Kingdom owned ships	14	8

[1] Average age of total deadweight.
[2] Trading vessels are those which carry cargo or passengers for commercial purposes. Certain vessel types, for example, dredgers and fishing vessels, are therefore deemed "non trading".

Average age[1] of trading[2] fleets owned in other countries: 31 March 1992

	Average age Years	Months
United Kingdom	14	8
Denmark	8	9
France	13	6
Germany	9	6
Greece	15	6
Italy	12	9
Netherlands	9	6
Spain	13	4
All European Community owned ships	12	5
Liberia	13	3
Panama	12	1
United States of America	19	3
Cyprus	15	11
Norway	13	0
Japan	8	10
All ships	13	4

[2] Trading vessels are those which carry cargo or passengers for commercial purposes. Certain vessel types, for example, dredgers and fishing vessels, are therefore deemed "non-trading".

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the percentage of, respectively, officers and ratings who are British nationals on United Kingdom vessels on (a) the United Kingdom register, (b) Crown dependency registers, (c) British dependent territory registers and (d) foreign registers.

Mr. Norris: The most recent figures relating to seafarers employed by companies which belong to the Chamber of Shipping show that, at 1 June 1991, 97 per cent. of officers and 90 per cent of ratings of United Kingdom-flagged, British-owned, vessels were United Kingdom nationals. The equivalent figures for British-owned, foreign-flagged, vessels, were 85 and 63 per cent. respectively.

Merchant Navy

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the regulatory requirements currently laid upon the British Merchant Navy which he is currently examining with a view to their possible removal or easing;

(2) if he will list the regulatory requirements laid upon the British Merchant Navy which have been removed or eased in each year, respectively, for the last 20 years.

Mr. Norris: We are committed to reducing the regulatory burden on the shipping industry as far as is compatible with continued high safety standards. This is a continuous process. Recent achievements include the introduction of new type approval arrangements to facilitate the entry of vessels into the United Kingdom register. We are also currently reviewing the rules which govern the nationality of senior officers on British merchant vessels.

Vehicle Testing

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the regional information held by all district offices of his Department's vehicle inspectorate about public vehicle testing, including the percentage failure rates at initial annual tests and re-tests and the most common failure items.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The information will be placed in the House Library at the earliest opportunity.

M6

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will arrange for the renovation of the sign on the northbound cross carriageway of the M6 at exit 20.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Yes.

Cycling

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the statutory provisions regarding cycling on the pavement; what are the exemptions for young riders on very dangerous roads; and when the law was enacted.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Cycling on the footway is an offence under section 72 of the Highways Act 1835, as amended by section 85(1) of the Local Government Act 1888. It currently carries a maximum penalty of £100. There are no exemptions for young riders.

Alternative Fuels

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress the national transport laboratory has made in the field of alternative fuels for transport.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: My Department's Transport Research Laboratory is currently reviewing national and international research and experience in the use of a wide range of alternative fuels and engines for road vehicles. The review is scheduled for completion by end of November 1992 and the findings will be published in due course.

In addition to the TRL review, my Department continues to keep abreast of developments worldwide and to encourage technological developments aimed at reducing the environmental impact of vehicles.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the percentage of the British-registered shipping fleet which is owned by the 20 largest British-owned shipping companies (a) by number of vessles and (b) by tonnage, at the latest available date.

Mr. Norris: The 20 largest British direct-owned shipping companies own 40 per cent. by number and 77 per cent. by tonnage of the total United Kingdom registered fleet.

Medical Advisory Council

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who are the members of the Medical Advisory Council who advise him on withdrawal of driving licences on medical grounds; and what are their qualifications.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Secretary of State is advised by a number of expert medical panels. I understand that the question specifically relates to the Secretary of State's honorary advisory panel on driving and disorders of the nervous system. Its membership and individuals' qualifications are:

Dr. C. J. Earl (Chairman)—Consultant Neurologist
Mr. J. G. Brice—Consultant Neurosurgeon
Dr. S. D. Shorvon—Consultant Neurologist
Dr. D. W. Chadwick—Consultant Neurologist
Dr. R. A. Cooper—Consultant Physician
Professor C. P. Warlow—Professor of Medical Neurology
Mr. A. E. Richardson—Consultant Neurosurgeon
Dr. M. J. Parsonage—Consultant Neurologist
Professor W. B. Jennett—Professor of Neurosurgery

The chairman is nominated by the president of the Royal College of Physicians and appointed by the Secretary of State.

Railway Preservation

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to encourage the railway preservation movement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The railway preservation movement has been growing in strength and importance. The Government acknowledge the movement's contribution to the railway heritage. The Department made 10 light railway orders for steam railway lines in 1991 and expects to determine perhaps a further six in 1992. We welcome this evidence that the movement is thriving.

London Underground

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in implementing the recommendations of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's 5 July 1991 report on London Underground Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: London Underground Limited is today publishing its 12-month response to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report detailing the progress which has been made in implementing the report's recommendations.

Since the publication of the report last year, LUL has made good progress with implementing the wide-ranging recommendations made by the MMC. Work on 58 of the report's 114 recommendations is now complete. Of the others, only one has been rejected altogether, and work is under way to implement the others, which are of a longer-term nature.

In its report, the MMC identified scope for improvement in a number of important areas which have subsequently been addressed by both the Government and the management of the underground.

The MMC concluded that the underground was suffering from the effects of long-term underfunding. In response to this, last year's IFR settlement provided for a record £3·7 billion grant to be given to London Transport over the three years from 1992-93, the vast bulk of which will go towards investment on the Underground. The MMC also identified scope for management improvements and efficiency savings. The underground responded to that finding with the publication last November of its company plan, designed to bring about a step change in the efficiency and quality of underground services, through improvements to working practices and an extension of contracting out. This plan has the Government's support.

Another key finding in the MMC's report was that there was inadequate political commitment to the underground's planning processes. As was announced at the publication of the Government's three-month response to the report, the Government and LUL are now working together on the preparation of a 10-year strategic plan for the underground.

On 27 May, the Government set the underground 12 new quality-of-service targets. These took on board the MMC's recommendation that new targets should be based on outputs rather than inputs and, where possible, should be measured in terms of customer satisfaction.

I am confident that LUL is committed to continuing to build on all these initiatives, and fulfilling the promise made in its response to "transform the services provided so that London will have an Underground to be proud of".

Copies of LUL's response have been placed in the Library. I will be continuing to pay close attention to progress on implementing the remaining recommendations. A third and final response will be made in two years' time.

Car Alarms

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to issue amendments to the construction and use regulations to improve noise standards from car alarms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 10 July 1992]: The Government have approached representative organisations for their views on a consultative draft of the regulations. We have also been awaiting possible regulatory developments in the European Community. The draft regulations are currently being revised to take account of progress in both these areas, and I expect to make them later this year.

Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which non-departmental public bodies are sponsored by his Department; which of these are audited by the National Audit Office; which firms of private accountants audits each of the others; by what method of tendering contracts to such firms are awarded; and for what duration.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 10 July 1992]: Bodies for which my right hon. Friend is responsible, and their audit arrangements are listed in "Public Bodies 1991", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Since the entries were prepared, the only executive body then not subject to audit by the National Audit Office, the Red Sea Lights Company, has been dissolved and a new non-departmental public body, the Traffic Director for London, has been established. The latter will be audited by private accountants to be appointed by competitive tender. The initial appointment will be for two years.

Transpennine Roads

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department received the transpennine roads study; and when it will be published.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 10 July 1992]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Prentice) on Friday 3 July at column 730. The Department received the consultants' findings on the transpennine roads study during February 1992.

Relocation

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the number of civil servants in his Department who could be relocated to provincial centres as part of the policy of devolving and decentralising Government Departments.

Mr. Norris: About 85 per cent. of the Department's staff are now located outside London. Next year, we plan to relocate up to 250 posts in marine to Southampton and 200 posts in central services to Hastings. There are separate reviews under way of the future location of 525 posts in highways, safety and traffic command and the Department's headquarters accommodation needs and options. Decisions are expected to be taken later this year.

Liverpool Air Travel

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assistance he is prepared to give to the establishment of a regular Liverpool to London docklands air flights service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: It is a matter for airlines' commercial judgment which services they should operate. Any application for a new air service between Liverpool and London would be for the Civil Aviation Authority to decide on, in accordance with its statutory air transport licensing responsibilities.

I cannot comment on the merits of such an application, since it could be the subject of an appeal to the Government under statutory procedures.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Immigration Appeals

Mr. Darling: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will provide a table of the number of appeals to the immigration appeals tribunal allowed and dismissed in 1991 and the first quarter of 1992.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is as follows:

Appeals to the immigration appeals tribunal

	Allowed	Dismissed
1991[1]	130	224
January to March 1992	60	103

[1] Because of an administrative error at the immigration appellate authorities no figures are available for the period October to December 1991. Estimated figures have therefore been provided for 1991 based on the number of appeals allowed and dismissed from January to September 1991.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will provide a table showing the number of appeals to the immigration adjudicators allowed and dismissed in 1991 and the first quarter of 1992 broken down according to the nationality of the appellant and the type of decision appealed against.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information concerning the nationality of appellants is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The number of appeals to immigration adjudicators allowed and dismissed in 1991 and the first quarter of 1992, broken down according to the type of decision, is given in the table.

Type of decision	1991		January to March 1992

Total	3,204	18,340	962	5,274

Mr. Darling: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the average delay, listed by each immigration appeals hearing centre, (i) between receiving the explanatory statement and papers about a case (a) from a British post overseas and (b) from the Home Office and sending those papers to an appellant or his or her authorised representative and (ii) between the hearing of an immigration appeal by an adjudicator and the dispatch of the determination to the appellant or authorised representative.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The immigration appellate authorities are able to dispatch copies of the explanatory statement and case papers to an appellant or his or her authorised representative within five says of their receipt from a British post overseas or the Home Office. The current average time between the hearing of an immigration appeal by an adjudicator and the dispatch of the determination to the appellant or authorised representative is as follows for each hearing centre:

	Weeks
Thanet House, London	5
Harmondsworth	5
Birmingham	6

NATIONAL FINANCE

European Monetary Union

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had in the EC Council of Ministers about progress towards the Madrid conditions for moving to stage III of European monetary union; and what priority he attaches to this matter during the EC presidency.

Mr. Nelson: Progress towards convergence is covered at Ecofin's bi-annual discussions on multilateral surveillance, the last of which took place in February. Also, since last September Ecofin has examined the convergence programmes of Portugal, Italy, Ireland, Germany and Spain.

The United Kingdom attaches a high priority during its presidency of the EC to encouraging member states to take the necessary action to achieve convergence.

VAT (Heritage Buildings)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will remove VAT on the repair of heritage buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope: When we agreed the EC sixth VAT directive we accepted that we would not extend the scope of our current zero-rating. Our policy is to use discretionary repair grants to target help where it is most needed.

Business Investigations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the manner in which inspectors are appointed to investigate businesses under the Financial Services Act 1986.

Mr. Nelson: Persons may be appointed by the Securities and Investments Board under sections 94 and 106, and by the Secretary of State for Trade under sections 94, 106 and 177 of the Act.

Taurus Programme

Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what account has been taken of the requirements of private shareholders in the Taurus development programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The needs of the private shareholder are being very much taken into account in the development of Taurus. The London stock exchange, as Taurus operator, has built high levels of system security and investor protection into the system. The Uncertificated Securities Regulations 1992, which set out the legal and regulatory framework for Taurus, contain a number of safeguards for private shareholders. These include the requirement for each company to appoint a company controller who will hold a person's entitlements to shares at no cost to himself, together with the 'locking up' arrangement, the complaints commissioner and the compensation scheme.

EC Budget

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the ratio between receipts from and contributions to the European Community budget for each of the member states in the current year.

Sir John Cope: The ratio for the United Kingdom in 1992 is forecast to be 1:1.9—taking account only of receipts coming to the public sector. As no details of individual member states' receipts in the current year are available, it is not possible to calculate the ratio for other member states.

Mr. Whittingdale: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the United Kingdom's net contribution to the EC budget this year and what it was in each of the last 10 years; and what it would have been if the Fontainebleau rebate mechanism had not been in operation.

Sir John Cope: The information requested is given in the table.

	Net contribution before abatement £ million	Net contribution after abatement £ million
1982	606	606
1983	647	647
1984	656	656
1985	1,974	1,808
1986	2,273	572
1987	2,874	1,721
1988	2,956	1,362
1989	3,469	2,315

European Community Legislation

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the direct consequence of the implementation of EEC legislation on United Kingdom public expenditure in each year ending 31 March since 1987.

Sir John Cope: The United Kingdom public expenditure costs of EC legislation with a direct effect on Community budget spending are best measured by reference to the United Kingdom's gross contribution to the Community budget, less abatement, as follows:

United Kingdom gross contribution less abatement

Year	£ million
1986-87	3,778
1987-88	3,769
1988-89	3,567
1989-90	4,487
1990-91	4,573
1991-92	3,700

United Kingdom public sector receipts, mainly in the form of agricultural support and the structural funds, generally offset increased United Kingdom public expenditure resulting from Community programmes.

No central estimate is available of the aggregate effect on United Kingdom public expenditure of the implementation of Community legislation which does not have a direct effect on Community budget spending.

Relocation

Mr. Betts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the number of civil servants in his Department who could be relocated to provincial centres as part of the policy of devolving and decentralising Government Departments.

Mr. Nelson: Following the review in 1991 the then Economic Secretary announced on 18 December that about 200 posts in CCTA—the Government centre for information systems—would be relocated to Norwich over the next three years.

Overseas Assets

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total of the United Kingdom's net assets overseas—assets less liabilities—at the end of each calendar year from 1987 to 1991; and what is the latest estimate.

Mr. Portillo: The estimated levels of identified overseas assets and liabilities from the end of 1987 to the end of 1990 are shown in table 8.1 of the Pink Book, "1991 UK Balance of Payments", published by the Central Statistical Office. Further estimates for the levels of identified net overseas assets at the end of 1990 and 1991, based on information available at March 1992, are shown in paragraph 3.47 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report 1992-93, the Red Book. Copies of these publications are in the Library.

Joint Nature Conservation Committee

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the findings of the Treasury's recent staff review of the Joint Nature Conservation Committee.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 10 July 1992]: The chief executives of English Nature, Scottish Natural Heritage and the Countryside Council for Wales commissioned a report from the Treasury's consultancy and inspection services division. The review covered a number of organisational and management issues as well as staffing in the Joint Nature Conservation Committee's scientific and secretarial support unit. The report is an internal management document and it is for the chief executive to consider how to take it forward.

Bingham Report

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with Lord Justice Bingham concerning the timing of the receipt of his report.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 10 July 1992]: Lord Justice Bingham's inquiry is independent of the Government and the timing of his report is a matter for him. I understand that he hopes to complete his report before the end of this month.

Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which non-departmental public bodies are sponsored by his Department; which of these are audited by the National Audit Office; which firms of private accountants audit each of the others; by what method of tendering contracts to such firms are awarded; and for what duration.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 10 July 1992]: All the NDPBs sponsored by Her Majesty's Treasury are audited by the NAO. These are the National Economic Development Council, and various pay review bodies: the Armed Forces Pay Review Body, the Doctors and Dentists Review Body, the Nurses Midwives and Other NHS Professionals Review Body, the Pharmacists' Review Body and the Top Salaries Review Body.

Customs Searches

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received from hon. Members about the treatment of constituents at (a) Heathrow, (b) Gatwick and (c) Manchester airports by customs officers.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 9 July 1992]: During April, May and June of 1992 my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has received representations from hon. Members concerning the treatment at Heathrow on behalf of seven of their constituents. These related to one complaint about customs clearance of a postal package and six by passengers. No representations have been received in respect of Gatwick or Manchester airports during this period.

EC Agricultural Reform

Mr. Biffen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions have been held in the Council of Finance Ministers of the comments by the Court of Auditors on the potential for fraud in the MacSharry proposals for agricultural reform; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lamont [holding answer 9 July 1992]: The Council of Economic and Finance Ministers had a preliminary discussion of the Court of Auditors' special opinion, which was produced in connection with the review of Community future financing, on 9 June. However, it was not possible on that occasion to discuss all aspects of the report and the Council did not focus on the potential for fraud in the reformed common agricultural policy.

The Government are committed to the fight against fraud and welcomes the warning note given by the Court of Auditors about the control risks associated with CAP reform. We are pressing strongly for the inclusion of robust anti-fraud provisions in the regulations governing the reformed CAP.

Tackling fraud in the Community is a priority for the United Kingdom presidency.

VAT (Whisky)

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what offset agreements in respect of harmonisation of VAT rates were agreed to in the Council of Ministers as part of the agreement on Scotch whisky; and what effect the VAT agreement will have on the maintenance of each existing zero rate.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 8 July 1992]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Chancellor gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) on 3 July 1992, at columns 755-56.

All the United Kingdom's existing zero rates are fully safeguarded by the sixth VAT directive. That protection is reinforced by a provision in the draft VAT rates and structures directive.

Currency

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the date for the issue of the reduced size 10p piece; and when he expects standard versions of the new £2 currency coin to be available from banks.

Mr. Nelson: The new, smaller 10p coin will be issued on 30 September 1992. A £2 coin to commemorate the tercentenary of the Bank of England will be issued during 1994. No decision has been made as to the exact date that the standard version of this coin will be available from banks.

Consultancy and Research Costs

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was spent on consultancy and outside research capacity in his Department for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Nelson: My Department spent some £2·69 million on consultancy and outside research in 1991-92. This figure includes the costs of consultants working for CCTA —the Government centre for information systems— economic research and other consultancies.

Ministerial Transport

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was spent on ministerial transport in his Department, for the last year for which the information is available.

Mr. Nelson: My Department spent £360,661 on ministerial transport in 1991-92. This covers travel abroad and within the United Kingdom and payments to the Government car service.

Hospitality Costs

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was spent on hospitality in his Department for the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Nelson: The total expenditure on entertainment by my Department in 1991-92 was £115,541. This includes the costs of the several international conferences and other large intergovernmental meetings.

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what additional loans, support credits and other facilities are made available to countries entering the narrower bands of the ERM; and what additional responsibilities fall on the member Governments.

Mr. Nelson: If one currency is at its limit against another in the ERM, the central banks of both currencies each have an unlimited obligation to buy or sell at the limiting rates during European business hours. The EMS provides for a very short-term facility (VSTF) under which credit is automatically available in unlimited quantities to finance such obligatory intervention at the limiting rates. If intervention is undertaken when one currency is not at its limit against another in the ERM, the VSTF can be made available, but not automatically. VSTF credits have to be repaid within a period of three months.

The amounts available under the VSTF do not differ between wide band and narrow band currencies.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what loans, support credits and other facilities are made available under the terms of ERM entry to Britain to maintain the pound within the 6 per cent. bands; to what extent these have been called on since Britain joined; and at whose cost these aids are provided.

Mr. Nelson: On the first part of his question, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him today.

Since becoming a member of the exchange rate mechanism, the United Kingdom has not had recourse to these credit facilities.

Where intervention is carried out at the limits of the ERM bands, interest on drawings under the very short-term facility (VSTF) is paid by the central bank of the currency at its lower limit.

Balance of Trade

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the method of calculation of the British balance of trade and payments figures following the inauguration of the single market; how deficits with the whole of the EEC and with individual countries in it will be measured; how British external balances with countries outside will be assessed; and how borrowing and regional aid levels necessary to balance trade flows can then be assessed.

Mr. Nelson: The only change in the methodology used to estimate the United Kingdom balance of payments accounts resulting directly from the completion of the single market at the end of this year concerns the data on trade in goods.

A new system, known at Intrastat, linked to VAT returns is being introduced throughout the European Community to measure trade in goods between member states. The present system, based on custom's documents, will continue to be used to measure trade with countries outside the Community.

There will be a transitional period while Intrastat becomes fully established, but after this the trade figures will be available in the same detail as at present.

Advisory Staff

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the number of staff employed in directly providing advice, research and policy development for Ministers in his Department; and what is the cost of such staff for the last year for which the figures are available.

Mr. Nelson: As noted in my departmental report—Cm. 1918—some 860 staff in central Treasury are engaged in the process of providing policy advice to Ministers. CCTA —the Government centre for information systems—also employs a further 300 staff in non-support roles, bringing the total to 1,160. The pay costs of these staff amount to some £28·4 million.

These figures do not include staff in central support services within central Treasury and CCTA. Staff in Forward—the civil service catering organisation—and in Chessington computer centre—which deals largely with payroll—have also been excluded.

Financial Services

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the grounds on which recognised professional bodies are permitted to have a different authorisation procedure under the Financial Services Act 1986; and if he will review these.

Mr. Nelson: The arrangements for authorisation of members of recognised professional bodies reflect the fact that their members' investment business is incidental to the practice of their profession, in which they are subject to the rules of the body concerned. I have no plans to review these arrangements.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning the new rules on disclosure of the Securities and Investments Board; what discussions he has had with the SIB about these; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: Rules on disclosure are a matter for the Securities and Investments Board. As part of its review of retail regulation under the Financial Services Act, the board published a policy statement on disclosure and standards of advice in May 1992.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to review the workings of the Financial Services Act 1986 as it affects the retail sector; and what discussions he has had with a view to changing the rules governing the disclosure of commission by tied agents and the disclosure of commission, charges and expenses by all financial retailers and intermediaries.

Mr. Nelson: Rules on disclosure are a matter for the Securities and Investments Board. As part of its review of retail regulation under the Financial Services Act, the board published a policy statement on disclosure and standards of advice in May 1992.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact on consumer protection and consumer understanding of requiring providers of bundled products to disclose separately how much of an investor's money goes to each constituent part.

Mr. Nelson: This is a matter for the Securities and Investments Board.

Iraqi Funds

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total of Iraqi funds currently blocked in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nelson: The total sum of Iraqi assets held by United Kingdom banks is estimated to be £580 million.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps are being taken to release blocked Iraqi funds in order to settle the claims of creditors who conducted legitimate business in Iraq prior to Iraq's invasion of Kuwait.

Mr. Nelson: Any company who conducted legitimate business in Iraq prior to 4 August 1990 and is owed money, should apply to the Bank of England for permission for payment to be made. The bank will normally grant permission in these circumstances. However, the request for payment also has to be made by the Iraqi entity involved, and we have no powers to compel them to make such an approach.

Trinidad Terms

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to extend the remit of the Trinidad agreement to cover middle-income countries.

Mr. Nelson: No. Trinidad terms are specifically designed to address the debt problems of the poorest and most heavily indebted countries.

Manufactured Goods

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 24 June, Official Report, column 226, on imports and exports of manufactured goods whether he will now publish in the Official Report the figures requested.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 9 July 1992]: Further to my reply of 24 June, Official Report, column 226, the information is regularly published in table A9 of the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics" and table D5 of its annual supplement. The latest figures available from the Central Statistical Office database are as follows:

Audio Tapes

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has had from voluntary associations representing the blind in regard to the difficulties that would be posed by the European Commission's proposal to levy tax on all blank audio tapes.

Mr. Leigh: I have been asked to reply. There have been numerous representations from both national and local voluntary groups since the European Commission's intention to propose a levy on blank recording tapes, to compensate copyright owners for home taping, became known in January 1991. The Royal National Institute for the Blind, the Talking Newspaper Association of the United Kingdom, many local talking newspaper associations and numerous individuals have made their concerns known. The Government will take these representations fully into account when deciding its negotiating position on the proposal, which has not yet been published.

WALES

Pembroke Power Station

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the probable effect on acid rain in Wales of an increase in utilisation of Pembroke power station from recent levels of 10 to 15 per cent. capacity to 60 per cent. capacity; and how this would be affected by the burning of orimulsion rather than other fuels.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The environmental effects of the burning of orimulsion fuel at Pembroke power station including the consequences of any increase in utilisation of the station are currently being considered by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution in relation to the application by National Power under the Environmental Protection Act 1990. It would not be appropriate for me to comment, in view of the Secretary of State's appellate role under the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advice he has received from Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution about the pollution control equipment that would need to be installed at Pembroke power station, in particular to reduce levels of sulphur dioxide emissions, if orimulsion were to be burnt at this station.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This issue is currently under active consideration by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution which is considering under the provisions of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, National Power's application to burn orimulsion at the Pembroke power station. It would not be appropriate for me to comment further in view of the Secretary of State's appellate role under the Act.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the value of financial assistance offered or given by his Department towards the cost of drawing up the application for trust status or any other ways of promoting a move to trust status by (a) Clwyd Community and mental health services, (b) Glan Clwyd district general hospital and associated hospitals and (c) Wrexham Maelor hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Following the invitation to prepare a formal application to become an NHS trust in April 1993, a contribution of £38,000 was made available to each of the three health units in Clywd to help meet costs incurred within the application process.

Health Targets

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will publish targets for Wales which are directly comparable to each of the targets set by the Government in the document "The Health of the Nation".

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The aim in setting targets across a wide range of health gain areas is to take Wales into the 21st century with a level of health on course to compare with the best in Europe. This forms the cornerstone of all our efforts in Wales and to accomplish this we intend to reach and if possible surpass the range of health goals we have set outselves.

We have identified 10 health gain areas for specific attention against five in England. The targets already set reflect the specific circumstances of Wales with technical differences noticeably in starting points/levels, age groupings, classification categories and time series. Where direct comparisons with the English strategy are possible, for example in smoking and alcohol, our targets are more ambitious than those in "The Health of the Nation".

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he intends to revise his targets for health gain in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: It is my intention that targets contained in the Welsh Health Planning Forum's protocols for investment in health gain and in the Health Promotion Authority for Wales's "Health for all in Wales" strategy will be reviewed approximately every three years in the light of advances in health care and developments elsewhere.

Acid Deposition

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has made of the (a) current and (b) future levels of acid deposition in Wales; and what action he (i) has taken or (ii) proposes to reduce levels of acid deposition in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) on 22 June, at column 66.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those schools in each education authority which have expressed interest in grant maintained status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: There has been a significant increase in the number of schools interested in grant-maintained status. My Department has received inquiries from around 40 schools since April. It would not, however, be appropriate for me to make such information public until such time as the views of parents on whether to apply for grant-maintained status have been sought through the ballot box. Ballots have already taken place at Ysgol Emrys ap Iwan, Abergele, and Ysgol Caergeiliog, Anglesey.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

UNCED

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what will be the effect on projects in Africa supported or sponsored by the Overseas Development Administration of the agreement achieved at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development of (a) the statement on forestry principles and (b) the desertification initiative.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There will be no direct effect on current projects, which we believe to be consistent with the UNCED forest principles. We will respond to requests from developing countries for assistance with implementing the agreements reached at UNCED, including in the areas of forests and land degradation or desertification.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action Her Majesty's Government are taking to reduce the financial crisis and debt burden faced by the Government of Zambia.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have pledged or disbursed £40 million in balance of payments grants, in addition to a programme of technical assistance costing some £15 million this year, and have rescheduled service payments totalling £4·1 million due in 1992 on past British aid loans. We have also told the Zambian Government that, provided its economic reform programme remains in place, we are prepared to consider cancellation of all its outstanding aid debt to the United Kingdom.

Other official debt owed to the United Kingdom and other government creditors will be considered in the context of the Paris club. Subject to International Monetary Fund approval of Zambia's economic reform programme, adherence to which would result in the clearance of Zambia's arrears to the IMF, we shall be pressing for Zambia to receive Trinidad terms at the Paris club's July meeting. These terms resulted directly from proposals made by the Prime Minister, in 1990, to relieve the burden of debt on the poorest, most heavily indebted countries.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the attitude of Her Majesty's Government regarding debt relief for Zimbabwe; and if it is his intention that Zimbabwe should be eligible for the full Trinidad terms following the meeting of the Paris club on 23 July.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Zimbabwe has consistently serviced her debts in full and, as a result, has maintained her creditworthy status. Our understanding is that the Government of Zimbabwe are determined to continue this policy, and do not intend to apply for any debt relief.

Our approach has been to focus on Zimbabwe's overall financing needs. We are supporting Zimbabwe with a substantial aid programme which totalled over £53·4 million in 1991.

Guyana

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy that none of the environmental projects that the Overseas Development Administration funds in Guyana should involve logging or deforestation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I gave details of the projects the ODA is currently funding in my reply to the hon. Lady on 9 July.

The ODA's policy on development projects in tropical forest areas is set out in our manual of environmental appraisal, copies of which are in the Libraries of the House. The manual makes it clear that natural forests should be managed on a sustainable basis and that aid projects should aim to conserve forest resources and should avoid indiscriminate logging or deforestation. It would not be right, however, to rule out all forms of tree-felling, for example logging on a trial or experimental basis, designed to demonstrate that controlled economic use is compatible with conservation, and part of sustainable management.

European Parliament Development Committee

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many meetings of the European Parliament Development Committee will be held, and when, during the course of the British presidency; and what are the key themes that Her Majesty's Government will be raising at these meetings.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Development Committee of the European Parliament will meet five times during our presidency; 13 to 15 July, 21 to 23 September, 14 to 16 October, 4 to 6 November, and 1 to 3 December. The Minister for Overseas Development will address the committee at its July and December sessions; and will take the opportunity to discuss the main themes which will feature in the Development Council on 18 November: Community development policy to the year 2000, population, the follow-up to UNCED, the untying of aid, and the use of non-governmental organisations in Community aid.

Relocation

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the number of civil servants in the Overseas Development Administration who could be relocated to provincial centres as part of the policy of devolving and decentralising Government departments.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The location of the work of the ODA has been reviewed on a number of occasions, most recently before the ODA's London HQ moved in 1991 to new accommodation. A number of additional functions were then transferred to ODA's HQ in East Kilbride. Over 60 per cent. of ODA staff work outside London. The ODA's London HQ comprises an integrated core of policy and programme departments which must remain together and with the Minister.

South Africa

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much money in pound sterling the European Commission contributed to the South African Council of Churches and related bodies between 1986 and 1990; what was the purpose of this funding; and what steps have been taken by the European Commission to establish how the cash has been used.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The European Community committed the equivalent of a total of £77 million, at current exchange rates, during the period 1986-90 for specific projects recommended by the South African Council of Churches, the South African Catholic Bishops' Conference, the Kagiso Trust and certain trades unions. The purpose of this expenditure was to support organisations providing assistance to South Africans disadvantaged by apartheid, focusing largely on education and community and social development. All the funds were channelled through European non-government organisations, which were required by the European Commission to report on their use and to provide satisfactory accounts. The Commission also carried out physical monitoring on a sample basis.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Research Councils

36. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much the research councils will be allocated from the science budget 1992-93; and what percentage increase is proposed for the next two years.

Mr. Waldegrave: In 1992-93 the research councils will for the first time be allocated £1 billion—£1,030 million. The science budget for 1993-94 and 1994-95 is planned to increase in real terms by 1·8 per cent. and 2·6 per cent., excluding the effect of the dual support transfer.

British-trained Scientists

37. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps are being taken to encourage British-trained scientists to remain in this country.

Mr. Robert Jackson: There have always been British scientists living abroad whom we would like to see back working in Britain; just as there are non-British scientists working in Britain who will be welcomed back home by their countries of origin. The fact remains, however, that the guidance of university appointments indicates that Britain has consistently had a favourable net balance of trade at all levels in the brain trade in the 1980s.

Science and Technology

38. Mr. Duncan-Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the Vice-President of the European Commission to discuss science and technology issues.

Mr. Waldegrave: I met Vice-President Pandolfi on 23 June, to discuss the European Commission's research and development framework programme, and again on 1 July, when the European Commissioners visited London on the United Kingdom's assumption of the presidency of the European Community.

British Rail

39. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to extend the charter promulgated by British Rail.

Mr. Waldegrave: Revised performance targets for 1993 will be set during the autumn. The Government and British Rail will also be reviewing the achievements of the current passengers charter once we have had more experience of its operation to see how these can be built upon.

Scientific Research

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps have been taken to promote science research and activity in Leicestershire.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government provide funds for the promotion of science research and activity in, and for the benefit of, the United Kingdom as a whole, including Leicestershire.

Citizens Charters

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if citizens charters will be published in looseleaf form to permit amendments.

Mr. Waldegrave: We intend to set increasingly tougher standards for public services; and further improve their quality and responsiveness to the public. Each public service organisation will determine how best to publicise its own improved standards of service.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many times so far he estimates that individuals have availed themselves of provisions in citizens charters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The citizens charter aims to provide better quality service, greater customer choice, published standards of service and accessible means of redress, to all users of public services. Published, measurable standards ensure the public know what quality of service they can expect to receive; compare this with other service providers, and measure performance in achieving the standards required.

Over time, we will set even tougher service standards; and further improve the quality and responsiveness of public services. For example, the patients charter set maximum two-year waiting times for NHS operations; these will be reduced to 18 months from April 1993 for hip and knee replacements and cataract operations.

Research and Development

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when Her Majesty's Government will publish the 1992 annual review of Government-funded research and development; and what steps will be taken to ensure widespread distribution of the report.

Mr. Waldegrave: The "1992 Annual Review of Government Funded Research and Development" will be published on 28 July. Copies will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses and made available to relevant Select Committees and to the Parliamentary Office of Science and Technology. Publication will be marked by a press conference and the review will be on sale at HMSO bookshops.

Intestacy

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the charitable donations for the last five years arising from funds of intestate deceased residents of the county palatine.

Mr. Waldegrave: A list of charitable donations made by the Duchy over the last five years would run to several hundred items.

Donations made from the duchy benevolent fund during the last five years are as follows:

1987	61,063
1988	81,122
1989	99,805
1990	119,124
1991	129,653
1992	[1]78,814

[1]Up to 30 June 1992.

The duchy's policy has been not to reveal the identity of a recipient or the amount given. This is the usual policy of charitable foundations. However, the duchy would of course have no objection to a recipient giving this information.

Substantial amounts have been given to educational establishments, including universities, in the county palatine; to ecclesiastical causes, to the elderly and infirm and various youth projects.

Many small donations have also been made, usually after seeking local advice, to individuals or to causes worthy of assistance.

Relocation

Mr. Betts: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the number of civil servants in his Department who could be relocated to provincial centres as part of the policy of devolving and decentralising Government Departments.

Mr. Waldegrave: Parts of my Department have already been relocated to provincial centres. The headquarters of the Occupational Health Service was relocated to Edinburgh in August 1989. In addition, the Civil Service College, Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency and Her Majesty's Stationery Office are based outside London: at Sunningdale, Basingstoke and Norwich respectively. The Central Office of Information has a regional network across the country. I see no scope for further relocation of the remaining small central core.

Nuclear Structure Facility, Daresbury

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Hall) of 2 June, Official Report, column 417, what representations he has received from the scientific community about the successor arrangements for nuclear physics research following the closure of the nuclear structure facility at Daresbury.

Mr. Waldegrave: My office has received two letters on this subject.

PRIME MINISTER

Whaling

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister if he will undertake to raise Japan's continuing whaling activity with the Japanese Prime Minister, Mr. Kiichi Miyazawa, when he meets him this week; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Prime Minsiter if he will discuss the ban on commercial whaling and the proposed whale sanctuary in the Antarctic with the Prime Minister of Japan, Mr. Miyazawa, during his visit to London; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I expressed the Government's concern at the continued hunting of Minke whales and urged Japan to continue to work within the International Whaling Commission.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to veto entry into the EC of any country which carries out commercial whaling; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom supports membership of the Community for European countries which want to join and can take on the obligations. Commerce in whale products by EC member states was prohibited by a specific Council regulation—348/81—which was subsequently subsumed and extended by EC CITES regulations 3626/82 and 3418/83, implementing the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species —New applicants will be expected to apply the EC CITES regulation.

European Year of the Elderly

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what action Her Majesty's Government will be taking to mark 1993 as the European Year of the Elderly;

(2) what plans he has for his Department to celebrate in 1993 the European Year of the Elderly; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Government are well advanced with plans for the European Year of the Elderly. The Department of Health, in co-operation with the Department of Social Security, has overall co-ordinating responsibility in the United Kingdom. Following wide consultations, a group has been set up to advise on the programme for the year. The group involves representatives of a wide range of organisations reflecting the interests of older people, including the National Pensioners' Convention, and will take direct account of the views of older people themselves. The programme in the United Kingdom will focus on four major themes: combating "agism" and promoting positive images of aging; volunteering; health promotion and active leisure, including remaining mentally active; social integration, including problems of isolation and loneliness, information needs and housing, transport and community care issues.

Four task groups have been set up to put forward specific proposals, and to implement them once agreed, with particular reference to promoting better relations between the generations and multicultural aspects.

There will be a core programme involving high-profile national events and a general programme, including activities being organised by individual organisations, but not co-ordinated through the official structure.

The Departments of Health and of Social Security are providing funds for the costs of a secretariat, based at Age Concern England's headquarters, to co-ordinate the official programme and disseminate information. A total of £65,000 has already been committed in the current year.

The European year 1993 will be launched in the United Kingdom at the Age Resource awards presentation in London later this year.

Age Discrimination

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to remove the age limit of 70 years on membership of (a) community health councils, (b) jury service and (c) other similar bodies; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The age limit of 70 for appointment to community health councils is a recommendation of the Department of Health, not a requirement. Active participation in CHC affairs can be both time-consuming and taxing, and those appointing members must ensure that the individuals appointed can remain active and committed without detriment to themselves or the work of the CHC, during their term of office.

The upper age limit for jury service was increased from 65 to 70 in 1988. We have no current plans to make further changes.

Age limits for appointment to other bodies will depend on the nature of the tasks carried out by those bodies.

Citizens Advice Bureaux

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Prime Minister if he will transfer responsibility for funding citizens advice bureaux from the Department of Trade and Industry to the Office of Public Service and Science.

The Prime Minister: Citizens advice bureaux are funded directly by local authorities. The Department of Trade and Industry provides grant-in-aid to the National Association of Citizens' Advice Bureaux and Citizens' Advice Scotland which provide the support services to citizens advice bureaux. The Government do not believe that it would be helpful to separate the funding of either body from the wider consumer protection role of the Department of Trade and Industry.

British National Party

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Prime Minister what the outcome was of the submission of evidence to the Crown prosecution service, to which he referred in his answer of 20 February, Official Report, column 462.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General today.

Environmental Protection Agency

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister when he will announce his timetable for the establishment of the Environmental Protection Agency.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside on 13 May to the hon. Member for Cardiff, Central (Mr. Jones) at column 125.

Libya

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations he has received about the effects of United Nations sanctions upon Libyan health services.

The Prime Minister: None.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister under what circumstances Libya may seek a temporary lifting of the United Nations sanctions against it.

The Prime Minister: Sanctions will be lifted when Libya has complied in full with United Nations Security Council resolutions 731 and 748.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what information he has on the number of occasions which Libya has sought permission from the United Nations sanctions committee to operate flights on grounds of significant humanitarian need.

The Prime Minister: According to the information made available to us by the United Nations, Libya has not sought such clearance.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the monitoring by the United Nations of sanctions against Libya.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 9 July 1992]: United Nations Security Council resolution 748 established a sanctions committee to oversee the efficient implementation of the sanctions against Libya. The committee relies on member states to provide its information on national enforcement of the regime and in highlighting any reported breaches. It has met eight times to date.

Maastricht Treaty

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he is taking to inform the public about the implications for them of the Maastricht treaty; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Memoranda produced by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and Her Majesty's Treasury outlining the content of the treaty have been published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office and are publicly available. The Government are considering whether to issue additional information about the treaty and its benefits.

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister how many letters he has received from the general public supporting a national referendum on the Maastricht treaty.

The Prime Minister: I have received approximately 700 representations supporting a national referendum on the Maastricht treaty.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Alton: To ask the Prime Minister, following the interim ruling of the European courts, on Sunday trading, if he will make a statement; and whether the Government will now provide official support for the Bill of the hon. Member for Ogmore (Mr. Powell) which seeks to amend the Shops Act 1950.

The Prime Minister: On 8 July, the Advocate General of the European Court of Justice—ECJ—gave his opinion in the cases concerning the law on Sunday trading in England and Wales which had been referred to the ECJ by English courts. The opinion is not a judgment of the ECJ, and the cases before it remain sub judice. Our position on the Bill in question therefore remains as I explained in my reply on 30 June at column 709.

EC Meetings (Publicity)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 6 July 1992, Official Report, column 17, if he will set out the reasons why he does not intend to seek to change the rules concerning publicity for Council and COREPER meetings held during the United Kingdom presidency of the European Council.

The Prime Minister: The proceedings of the Council and of COREPER cannot be made public without the unanimous agreement of all member states. I therefore see no prospect of a change to these rules in the foreseeable future.

Subsidiarity

Mr. Michael: To ask the Prime Minister whether it is his intention during the EC presidency to promote acceptance of the definition of subsidiarity as the minimum of interference.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 7 July 1992]: The principle of subsidiarity is clearly defined in article 3b of the treaty on European union. It contains a presumption of activity at national level. Work will be undertaken during our Presidency on practical steps for implementing the principle of subsidiarity in line with the conclusions of the Lisbon European Council.

Brazil (Street Children)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Prime Minister when he expects to launch his personal initiative to raise funds for the Brazilian street children; what follow-up initiatives he has taken since his visit to Sao Martinho in Rio de Janeiro; and what information he has about the well-being and whereabouts of street children removed from the streets of Rio de Janeiro in preparation for the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 7 July 1992]: I am looking into what might be done to help Brazilian street children and am in touch with a number of interested parties. This is a serious problem which requires sympathetic handling.

Uruguay Round

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister what consideration he has given to the communiqué on the Uruguay round issued by the Cairns group Ministers on 28 June; what further action the Government will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 7 July 1992]: The Government welcome the communiqué issued by the Cairns group Ministers, and support the points they make about the importance of the Uruguay round. At the Munich summit, the G7 leaders recognised the progress made in recent months. We expressed their conviction that an agreement is now within reach, and could be achieved before the end of 1992. The United Kingdom will continue to work hard for this during our presidency of the European Community.

EC and EEC

Mr. Michael: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the different ways in which the initials EC have been used (a) by Government and by Government Departments and (b) by European institutions, giving the dates between which each usage has been current and the source and meaning of each alternative usage.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 8 July 1992]: The initials EC are used by the Government and other bodies mentioned to stand for the European Communities, for example, the European Coal and Steel Community—ECSC—established in 1951, the European Economic Community—EEC—and the European Atomic Energy Committee—Euratom—both established in 1957. This is the correct usage. The Maastricht treaty on European union contains an article saying that the term European Economic Community will be replaced by the term European Community abbreviated as EC.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the different ways in which the initials EEC have been used (a) by Government and by Government Departments and (b) by European institutions, giving the dates between which each usage has been current and the source and meaning of each alternative usage.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 7 July 1992]: The initials EEC are used by the Government and other bodies mentioned to stand for the European Economic Community, established by the treaty of Rome in 1957. Since at least the Single European Act, however, the initials EC have been used as a convenient shorthand. The Maastricht treaty on European union contains an article saying that the term European Economic Community is to be replaced by the term European Community, abbreviated as EC.

Tibet

Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions he has recently held with the leaders of other member states of the Security Council of the United Nations concerning the issue of human rights in Tibet; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 9 July 1992]: I raised human rights in Tibet with Premier Li Peng in Peking last September. I also raised human rights in his discussions with him in New York in January and in Rio de Janeiro in June. At the recent Munich summit leaders of the G7 countries called on the Chinese to make considerable further improvements in human rights.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cameroon

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has discussed the subject of human rights recently with the Government of Cameroon.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The Government of the Cameroon are aware of the importance we attach to human rights. We have made representations to them about human rights, on several occasions both in Yaoundé and to the Cameroon ambassador in London. We shall continue to monitor the situation closely, and make representations whenever necessary.

Radiation Research

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what technical or financial support the United Kingdom has pledged to the radiation research programme of the International Sakharov College of Radioecology in Minsk.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. The British Government have not been approached to pledge technical or financial support.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the other signatories of the partial test ban treaty of 1963, the nuclear non-proliferation treaty of 1970 and the threshold test ban treaty of 1974 to negotiate a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: None.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to halt the proliferation of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 3 July 1992, at column 757.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about progress being made for a comprehensive nuclear weapons test ban treaty to be negotiated.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: A comprehensive test ban treaty is a long-term objective. We participate actively in discussion of test ban issues in the conference on disaramament in Geneva. These take place on the basis of a non-negotiating mandate. Progress can only be made on a step-by-step basis taking into account a number of factors including verification.

India

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what opportunities he has taken to raise with the Indian authorities the human rights concern of widespead custodial violence.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I raised this with the Indian high commissioner in May and our high commissioner did so with the Indian Home Minister in New Delhi in early June.

Bosnia

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will be reimbursing the Ministry of Defence for transporting humanitarian aid to Bosnia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The extra costs to the MOD of providing airlift to the interim operation to relieve Sarajevo will fall to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. Financial responsibility for the provision of aid once the airport is open to non-military flights will lie with the Overseas Development Administration.

West Tripura

Ms. Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the latest information he has on the mass rape in Ujan Maidan village, West Tripura, by members of the Assam Rifles, during a cordon and search operation in the district between 31 May and 2 June 1988; and what information he has about investigations into the circumstances of the women's rape and measures taken to bring those responsible to justice.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: An Indian commission of inquiry into this incident submitted its report in December 1991. This confirmed that at least eight tribal women in Ujan Maidan had been raped by soldiers of the Assam Rifles. We do not know how or whether those responsible were punished and have asked the Indian Government for information.

Czechoslovakia

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what details he has received from the Government of Czechoslovakia of particular ecclesiastical items stolen, and placed on the west European art market.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: At the request of my right hon. and learned Friend, the Secretary of State for National Heritage, our embassy in Prague has approached the Czechoslovak Ministry of the Interior to obtain details of stolen ecclesiastical items. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister also raised the issue with senior colleagues of President Havel during his visit to Czechoslovakia in May. The embassy subsequently followed this up with a further call on the Ministry of the Interior. The Ministry has confirmed that it is in the process of drawing up a list which should be completed shortly. This will be forwarded to the relevant authorities and art trade associations in London upon receipt.

Immigration

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the present waiting times until first interview for all categories of applicant in each country and at each post in the Indian subcontinent.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The estimated present waiting times to first interview (in months) are:

Settlement

Subcontinent post	Q1	Q2	Q3	Q4
Islamabad	3	3	6	9
Karachi	1	3	4	7
Dhaka	3	6	8	9
New Delhi	0	3	7	10
Bombay	0	4	9	12
Madras	1	1	1	1
Calcutta	1 week	1 week	1 week	1 week

Visitors

Due to seasonal high demand, applicants for visit visas in Islamabad requiring a full interview can expect to wait between five and seven days. Elsewhere they are dealt with on day of interview.

Settlement queues are organised as follows:—

Q1 Persons with a claim to the right of abode, dependent relatives over 70 years, special compassionate cases.

Q2 All spouses and all children under 18 years.

Q3 Fiance(e)s and others applying for the first time.

Q4 Re-applicants.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how long a person applying for entry clearance for settlement at the British post in (a) Manila, (b) Accra, (c) Lagos, (d) Kingston, (e) Nicosia, (f) Cairo, (g) Bangkok and (h) Rabat on 31 March or the lastest convenient date could expect to wait for (i) interview, (ii) referral of the case to the Home Office and the requested information being received by the post, (iii) decisions and (iv) an explanatory statement prepared by the post in the event of an appeal against a refusal to be despatched to the immigration appellate authorities in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: As at 30 June the timings required at (i), (ii) and (iv) were as follows.

The information requested at (iii) is not available. Times vary according to the circumstances of individual cases. Many decisions are made on the day of interview.

Post	(i)	(ii)	(iv)
Manila	4 weeks	3 months	5 months
Accra	2 days	2 months	3 months
Lagos	1 day	3 months	3 months
Kingston	4 weeks	2-3 months	1 week
Nicosia	1 day	3 months	3 months
Cairo	1 day	3 months	1 month
Bangkok	8 weeks	2-3 months	2 months
Rabat	1-14 days	4 months	3 months

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a), men, (b) women and (c) children were waiting in each queue at each post in the Indian subcontinent on 31 March or the latest convenient date.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The number of men, women and children waiting in the settlement queues for interviews in the Indian sub-continent posts at 30 June is:

	Q1	Q2	Q3	Q4
Islamabad

[1] Breakdown not available.

Queue 1. Persons with a claim to the right of abode. Dependent relatives over 70 years old. Special compassionate cases.

Queue 2. All spouses and all children over 18 years.

Queue 3. Fiancé(e)s and others applying for the first time for settlement.

Queue 4. Reapplicants.

There are no queues for visit applications other than in Islamabad, where due to seasonaly high demand, applicants requiring a full interview can expect to wait 5-7 days.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how long a person applying for entry clearance on 31 March or the latest convenient date at each post in the Indian subcontinent could expect to wait, in each queue, for (a) first interview, (b) referral of the case to the Home Office and the requested information being received by the post, (c) decision after first interview and (d) the explanatory statement prepared by the post in the case of appeal against any refusal to be dispatched to the immigration appellate authorities in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: (a) As at June the estimated waiting times for settlement interviews (in months) were:

	Q1	Q2	Q3	Q4
Islamabad	3	3	6	9
Karachi	1	3	4	7
Dhaka	3	6	8	9

	Q1	Q2	Q3	Q4

Settlement queues are organised as follows:
Q1 Persons with a claim to the right of abode, dependent relatives over 70 years, special compassionate cases.
Q2 All spouses and all children under 18 years.
Q3 Fiance(e)s and others applying for the first time.
Q4 Re-applicants.

Visit visa applications are dealt with within 24 hours except in Islamabad which, due to seasonal high demand, applicants requiring a full interview can expect to wait five to seven days.

(b) If referred to the Home Office, inquiries concerning applications may take from one to 12 months depending on individual circumstances.

(c) Decisions after first interview are taken within 24 hours in the majority of cases in Indian Sub-Continent posts.

(d) Dispatch times of explanatory statements are, at 30 June:

	Settlement	Non-Settlement
Islamabad	12 weeks	4 weeks
Karachi	8 weeks	4 weeks
Dhaka	12 weeks	12 weeks
New Delhi	12 weeks	4 weeks
Bombay	8 weeks	4 weeks
Madras	12 weeks	4 weeks
Calcutta	4 weeks	4 weeks

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many explanatory statements related to entry clearance appeals were awaiting typing at each post in the Indian subcontinent in Manila, Lagos and Accra, on the latest available date; how many staff are employed, both full-time and part-time, to type statements; and when he expects any backlogs to be cleared.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The information requested is given in the following table, as at 30 June,:

Post	Number[1]	Number[2]
Islamabad	0	11
Karachi	1	1
Dhaka	176	5(3)
New Delhi	41	4
Bombay	4	(11)
Madras	Nil	1

Manila	83	2
Lagos	4	3
Accra	22	1

[1] Number of explanatory statements awaiting typing
[2] Staff whose duties include typing explanatory statements; staff also employed on other typing duties shown in brackets.

The posts in Dhaka and Manila estimate that they should clear the backlogs in three months and two months respectively.

Hong Kong

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British Dependent Territories' citizens from Hong Kong have (a) applied for and (b) been granted the status of British national (overseas) in each year since 1989.

Mr. Goodlad: Details of the number of British dependent territories' citizens applying for British national (overseas) status are as follows:

1989	1990	1991	[1]1992
Applications 53,222	80,213	101,534	67,947
Granted 49,519	78,265	107,423	64,080

[1] To 30 June 1992

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications for naturalisation as British dependent territories citizens on the basis of a connection with Hong Kong have been (a) received, (b) granted and (c) refused for each year since 1989 and to the nearest available date.

Mr. Goodlad: Details of the number of applications for naturalisation as British dependent territories citizens by virtue of a connection with Hong Kong are as follows:

	1989	1990	1991	[1]1992
Received	3,098	12,543	7,588	1,293
Granted	1,098	11,699	11,463	5,673
Refused	73	95	399	310

[1] To 30 June.

In any one year the number of British dependent territories citizens naturalisation applications received and the numbers approved/rejected cannot be compared directly. This is because the processing time can result in applications from one calendar year being finalised in a different year.

Tibet

Mr. Cormack: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the parliamentary delegation announced in March by the Chinese Foreign Minister Qin Qichen is leaving for China; how long they will spend in Tibet; what parts of Tibet and Tibetan autonomous areas in Qinghai and Sichuan provinces they propose to visit; whether they will be free to visit any place they wish and if he will provide an independent translator fluent in Tibetan, Chinese and English and an independent expert on Tibetan affairs to accompany them.

Mr. Goodlad: The high-level study group agreed between the Prime Minister and Premier Li Peng under the leadership of Lord Howe is to visit China later this year. Details of its itinerary and membership have still to be settled.

Relocation

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the number of civil servants in his Department who could be relocated to provincial centres as part of the policy of devolving and decentralising Government Departments.

Mr. Goodlad: An internal investigation in 1988 into the viability of relocating parts of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office diplomatic wing outside central London considered a number of relocation sites, including Glasgow and Cardiff. Hanslope Park, an estate near Milton Keynes owned by the FCO, was chosen for the 245 posts then identified for possible relocation. The number of posts has since fallen to 166 because of the subsequent abolition of some posts and reorganisation of FCO departments. This relocation programme is well advanced and is due to be completed by mid-1994.

European Political Parties

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made on the effects for the United Kingdom of article 138a of the treaty of Rome, inserted by the treaty of Maastricht, dealing with pan-European political parties.

Mr. Garel-Jones: We welcome contacts at the European level between national political parties, including in the European Parliament. But there is no provision in article 138a of the treaty on European union for any specific action by member states or the Community in relation to political parties.

Iraq

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions are taking place with his European Community counterparts about their release of blocked Iraqi funds for (a) the financing of trade in goods not embargoed under United Nations Security Council resolutions 706 and 712 and (b) for settling creditors' claims; and what sums have been released in the case of each Community country, including the United Kingdom under each head.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We regularly exchange views with our European Community partners about all aspects of policy towards Iraq. Iraq continues to refuse to export oil to pay for essential humanitarian supplies and to meet claims for compensation as provided for in UN Security Council resolutions 706 and 712.

In conformity with the ruling of the United Nations sanctions committee we released £70 million of Iraqi funds frozen in the UK for the purchase of humanitarian goods of British origin following the release of Mr. Ian Richter in November 1991. We do not plan to release further assets.

There is a general agreement among our EC partners that Iraqi funds should remain frozen until Iraq meets its obligations under UN Security Council resolutions. We have no figures of any frozen Iraqi funds released by our partners.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current state of the Vienna talks between representatives of the United Nations and the Iraqi Government.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Despite a further round of talks between the United Nations and the Iraqi Government in Vienna in June the Iraqi Government still refuse to export oil to finance the purchase of essential humanitarian supplies as provided for in United Nations Security Council resolutions 706 and 712.

Vietnam

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Vietnam about the detention of prisoners of religious conscience; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: We continue to raise with the Vietnamese authorities, both bilaterally and with our EC partners, individual human rights cases, including prisoners of religious conscience. I also raised our concern about Vietnam's human rights record with the Vietnamese Foreign Minister during the latter's visit to Britian in June.

France (Road Blockades)

Mr. George: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the French authorities on behalf of those British citizens stranded in France as a consequence of the blockade of roads by demonstrating farmers and truckers.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have been asked to reply.

I am glad to say that the blockades have almost all now been lifted. My right hon. Friend has kept in close and regular contact with his French counterpart Mr. Bianco on behalf of British coach and lorry drivers and British holiday-makers caught up in the blockades. Consular staff in France have given assistance to British citizens where necessary.

EDUCATION

Relocation

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment he has made of the number of civil servants in his Department who could be relocated to provincial centres as part of the policy of devolving and decentralising Government Departments.

Mr. Forman: The Department keeps under review the balance between its staff in central London and those in its Darlington offices.

Schools Information

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proportion of parents have received in the past 12 months (a) a written report on their child's progress in school, (b) a publication with comparable information about all schools in their locality including examination results, truancy rates and destination of school leavers and (c) a reminder of their right of appeal and how to use it in cases where the local education authority or school governors refuse them a place for their child in the school of their choice.

Mr. Forth: The parents charter, published in September 1991, promised that steps would be taken to ensure that all parents would receive or have access to the information mentioned. All these promises have been or are in the process of being implemented. New reporting regulations, introduced in May, require annual written reports to be sent to all parents on their child's educational progress. Comparative tables of public examination results will be produced this autumn; in 1993 these will also cover national curriculum assessment results, truancy rates and school leavers' destinations. Since February of this year, all LEAs and governing bodies of LEA-maintained schools have been required by law to remind parents of their right of appeal when informing them of a decision not to allocate a place for their child at their preferred school. The model articles of government for grant-maintained schools were amended in January this year to include this requirement.

Computer Networks

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what steps are being taken to draw together the research in the United Kingdom and other European countries on high band width computer networks;

(2) if he will use Britain's presidency of the European Community to initiate an EC-wide network for connecting basic and applied research laboratories and universities.

Mr. Forman: The information systems committee of the Universities Funding Council—UFC—is participating in a European multi-protocol project to connect European countries via high band width computer networks. Fifty of the 200 sites connected to the United Kingdom joint academic network—JANET—already have full multi-protocol access. The United Kingdom and Germany are taking the lead in the European multi-protocol project. Several other European countries have expressed an interest in joining.

The SuperJANET initiative will enhance United Kingdom development providing very high band width multi-protocol computer networking to United Kingdom academic sites.

The UFC and the DTI have jointly funded United Kingdom participation in the EUREKA COSINE project. This has recently completed a successful pilot project in academic computer networking across Europe and will move to a higher performance production service later this year.

The European Community is actively pursuing the provision of pan-European networks for academic sites through its consultations with the European Consultative Forum on Research Networking, which represents academic and research networking interests in the Community.

Schools, Isle of Wight

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he will write to the hon. Member for the Isle of Wight to provide the advice which he undertook to supply following the meeting on 26 February and the visit of his regional team to Lake, Sandham and Nodehill schools.

Mr. Forth: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Youth Service Funding

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on his Department's plans for funding the voluntary sector youth service in London.

Mr. Forman: I have nothing to add to what my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Baroness Blatch, said in another place on 6 July, Official Report, columns 981-84.

Rural Primary Schools

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has had about the consequences of future trends in devolved school budgets under local management of schools for the viability of small rural primary schools; what safeguards exist to protect such schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Department has received a number of representations within the last four weeks on issues arising from the local management of schools—LMS—including the funding of small rural schools. Under LMS, local education authorities—LEAs—can provide additional support to small schools in two ways: they may offer salary protection to schools with fewer than 330 pupils, and they may build factors into their formulae which allow for the higher costs of providing a balanced curriculum in small schools.

Special Needs

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the 10 local education authorities in England which spent most per pupil on the education of pupils with special needs, with the average amounts spent for each such authority and (b) the 10 local education authorities with the greatest number of pupils with special needs, with the number in each case, for the last year for which the information is available.

Mr. Forth: The latest year for which information on local education authorities—LEAs—actual spending is available is 1989-90. Information is not collected separately on LEAs' spending on special needs within mainstream schools, nor on support services for special needs. Table 1 lists the 10 LEAs in England which spent most per pupil in maintained or non-maintained special schools, hospital schools, or receiving education other than at school. Table 2 indicates the 10 LEAs providing education for the greatest number of such pupils. To provide a reasonable match with spending data, pupil number data are for January 1990.

Pupil Numbers

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many primary schools there are in England with (a) fewer than 50 pupils and (b) between 50 and 75 pupils; and how many secondary or middle schools there are with (i) fewer than 200 pupils and (ii) between 200 and 300 pupils, at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is given in the table:

Subjects Allied to Medicine

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what criteria will be used by the Higher Education Funding Council for the funding of subjects allied to medicine; and what account such funding will take of the relative costs of the subjects within that category;

(2) what steps he will take to ensure adequate funding for the clinical training of university students of optometry under the future arrangements proposed by the Higher Education Funding Council.

Mr. Forman: The Higher Education Funding Council for England is consulting institutions on the funding methodology for teaching and on the academic subject categories to be adopted from 1993-94. The council has adopted the general principal that the number of subject categories should be relatively small so as to maximise institutions' management freedom. The precise coverage of academic subject categories will be the subject of further consultation. It will be for individual institutions to determine the level of funding for particular courses within each category, taking account of cost differences.

Sex Education

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what aims and standards his Department has for the teaching of sex education to all children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Section 1 of the Education Reform Act 1988 requires the curriculum of maintained schools to prepare pupils for the opportunities, responsibilities and experiences of adult life. As part of that preparation, all pupils are now required to be taught those aspects of sex education contained in national curriculum science. Beyond that statutory requirement, school governing bodies are responsible, under the provisions of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986, for deciding whether any further sex education should be included in their school's curriculum; and for maintaining a written record both of that decision, and the content and organisation of any sex education they decide should be provided. In addition, section 46 of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 requires that any sex education which schools provide—whether or not it is required as part of the national curriculum—should be given in such a manner as to encourage pupils to have due regard to moral considerations and the value of family life. Detailed decisions about how such education is delivered in the classroom should take full account of local circumstances, the particular needs of pupils and the views of parents.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) in what circumstances sex education can be excluded from the teaching of human biology within the national curriculum;

(2) if he will give details of the circumstances in which teachers and parents may withdraw children from lessons about HIV and AIDS.

Mr. Forth: There is no statutory right of withdrawal from the secular curriculum: pupils may not be withdrawn from the teaching of any aspects of sex education provided by their school, whether or not these are required by the national curriculum. Schools should be ready to discuss with parents both their policies and approaches to sex education, and to consider any anxieties or suggestions which individual parents may have.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of school children at the ages of 11, 14 and 16 years have received sex education.

Mr. Forth: This information is not available.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Environmental Initiatives

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what new environmental initiatives he intends to promote for the European Community during his term as President of the European Agriculture Council.

Mr. Curry: We intend to press forward our initiative to integrate environmental protection requirements into the common agricultural policy.

Seagulls, Sellafield

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what radiological surveys of the seagulls killed by British Nuclear Fuels at Sellafield in the cull carried out in June have been carried out by the scientific services in his Department.

Mr. Curry: None.

Set-aside

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what flexibility will be applied to the new 15 per cent. set-aside scheme to take into account field layout and cost structure.

Mr. Curry: We have stressed to the Commission the importance of providing flexibility in the implementing regulations for the scheme. I hope that this will be reflected in the final text of these regulations.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what experiments have been undertaken to see if meat from bovines suffering from BSE is infective; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Experiments in which mice have been inoculated with muscle tissue from cows confirmed to have BSE are in progress. Two of these have passed the end point for these studies and no clinical evidence of a scrapie or BSE-like disease has resulted. The results so far show that, as in all other naturally occurring transmissible spongiform encephalopathies, there is no detectable infectivity in muscle tissue and thus meat.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of confirmed cases of bovine spongiform encephalopathy for each year since 1986, and the latest figure for 1992 for the total number of cattle diagnosed that were (a) under two years of age, (b) aged two to three years, (c) aged three to four years, (d) aged five to six years and (e) aged seven or more years.

Mr. Soames: There were 847 cases of BSE confirmed in Great Britain prior to the disease becoming notifiable on 21 June 1988. Since then the number of confirmed cases is as follows by year of report.

	Number
1988	2,185
1989	7,136
1990	14,179
1991	25,013
1992[1]	13,430

[1] to 3 July.

The distribution of confirmed cases of BSE as at 10 July 1992 with a date of onset of disease between January and June 1992 of known age is as follows:

Age band (yrs)	Number of cases
2 and less than 3	1
3 and less than 4	[1]225
4 and less than 5	3,734
5 and less than 6	2,132
6 and less than 7	737
7 and over	340

[1] These animals will have been born during the period from 1 January 1988 to 30 June 1989.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will invite the Royal Society and the Royal Colleges of Medicine to carry out a wholly independent study of the epidemiology of bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Soames: No. The spongiform encephalopathy advisory committee—the Tyrrell committee—already exists to look at all matters relating to spongiform encephalopathies.

Dogs and Cats

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) dogs and (b) cats are exported and imported for breeding purposes each year; and how many (i) dogs and (ii) cats are imported for scientific experiments each year.

Mr. Soames: This information is not available.

Sugar Quota

Mr. Cann: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking to protect the British sugar industry from cuts in its quota.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on July 6, Official Report, column 62.

Agricultural Support

Mrs. Currie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of Government spending was allocated to agricultural support in (a) 1962, (b) 1972 and (c) the most recent year available; and what equivalent proportion is estimated to be required in 1995.

Mr. Curry: The figures for 1962 and 1972 are not readily available. The most recent year for which figures have been published is the financial year 1991-92 when the proportion of Government spending allocated to agriculture was 0·7 per cent. There are no estimates available for what the equivalent proportion will be in 1995.

Fisheries Conservation

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he sent his consultation paper for new fish conservation proposals to (a) the Anglo-North Irish Fish Producers Organisation Ltd. and (b) the Northern Ireland Fish Producers Organisation Ltd.

Mr. Curry: The Department of Agriculture, for Northern Ireland issued the consultation paper on effort control and decommissioning to both Northern Ireland producer organisations on 30 April 1992.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he received any representations from (a) the Northern Ireland Fish Producers Organisation Ltd. and (b) the Anglo-North Irish Fish Producers Organisation Ltd. prior to the publication of the Sea Fish (Conservation) Bill and after he published his consultation paper for the fishing industry.

Mr. Curry: The Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland received comments from both organisations in June after the publication of the Sea Fisheries (Conservation) Bill.

National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions when, where and with whom in each of the last five years he, his predecessors in that office, Ministers in his Ministry and their predecessors have officially met representatives of the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations.

Mr. Curry: I have had regular meetings with the National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations since I came to the Ministry three years ago. I recently attended its executive committee in Cheltenham on July 4 and I offered the federation a further meeting on 7 July.

Relocation

Mr. Betts: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the number of civil servants in his Department who could be relocated to provincial centres as part of the policy of devolving and dencentralising Government Departments.

Mr. Curry: Some 78 per cent. of the Ministry's staff are based outside London. Planning is at various stages of development for moving 1,000 posts away from a number of locations in London and the south-east.

Salmon

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Scotland about further measures to protect British salmon stocks.

Mr. Curry: The Department maintains close and regular contacts with the Scottish Office on matters relating to British salmon stocks and their protection.

Farm Workers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the average number of farm workers employed per hundred hectares on farms of (a) under 100 hectares, (b) 100 to 200, (c) 200 to 300, (d) 300 to 400, (e) 400 to 500, (f) 500 to 600 and (g) 600 and over hectares.

Mr. Curry: The information is as follows for the latest available date, with separate details for the total farm labour force and regular hired workers.

Average number of persons per 100 hectares of total area
England and Wales
June 1991

Total area of holding[1] (hectares)	Total labour force[2]	Regular hired workers[3]
Under 100	7·8	1·4
100—<200	2·9	0·8
200—<300	2·3	0·9
300—<400	2·1	1·0
400—<500	1·7	0·9
500—<600	1·7	1·1
600 and over	1·3	0·8
All holdings	4·5	1·1
NUMBER OF PERSONS ('000s)	486·0	115·0

[1] Based on main holdings in the annual June census.
[2] Includes all whole-time and part-time workers on the holding in June 1991, i.e. farmers, partners, directors, spouses, managers, regular family and hired workers, seasonal and casual workers.
[3] Whole-time and part-time.

Cerone

Mr. Kevin Hughes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is the approved shelf life of the pesticide product (a) Union Carbide cerone, (b) Embetec cerone and (c) ICI cerone, MAFF registration numbers 3467, 04416 and 00463, respectively;

(2) how long the approved shelf life of the Union Carbide product cerone was for the years 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Soames: For a pesticide product to gain full approval under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986 evidence of two years storage stability at ambient temperature must be supplied. Only if such evidence is not forthcoming will a shelf life be specified on the approved product label. The information on cerone is as follows:

(a) Union Carbide cerone (MAFF 00464)—This product has been commercially withdrawn. From 1981 to 1986 it held approval (No. 3467) for efficacy under the former Agricultural Chemicals Approval Scheme (ACAS) with no specified shelf life on the label.

(b) Embetec cerone (MAFF 04416)—This has been replaced by Rhone-Poulenc's cerone which holds provisional approval, with no specified shelf life on the label.

(c) ICI cerone (MAFF 00463)—This has provisional approval with no specified shelf life on the label.

Badger Baiting

Mr. Burns: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of badger baiting there have been in Essex in each of the last three available years; and what action is being taken to enforce the laws against badger baiting in Essex.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have been asked to reply.

In 1988 there were seven prosecutions and one conviction in Essex under the Badgers Act 1973, although it is not possible to say how many of these involved alleged cases of badger baiting. There were no prosecutions under the 1973 Act in Essex in 1989 or in 1990, the last year for which statistics are available.

The enforcement of the law in Essex is an operational matter for the chief constable.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Residential Requirements

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what residential requirements he sets for the payment of DSS benefits; whether he plans any changes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: People who do not have a fixed abode, and who meet the entitlement conditions for a benefit, will often have to come to a social security or Employment Service office in person to collect their girocheque or notification to pick up their order book from a post office. In some cases they are posted to an address nominated by claimants. For unemployed people the entitlement conditions include being available for, and actively seeking work. These conditions are rigorously checked by Employment Service staff. Social security and Employment Service staff are careful to verify the identities of all claimants, and our computer systems will show if someone is making a duplicate claim at another office.

Disability Living Allowance

Mrs. Helen Jackson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 29 June, Official Report, column 428, to the hon. Member for Harwich, (Mr. Sproat) about appeals against disability living allowance decisions, if he will make a statement on the factors which account for the delay in resolving the appeal of the constituent of the hon. Member for Sheffield, Hillsborough, Ref. YR691179c.

Miss Widdecombe: An appeal to the social security commissioner was made by the hon. Member's constituent on 18 November 1991 and leave to appeal was granted by the commissioner on 23 January 1992. A submission by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State was sent to the office of the social security commissioners on 19 February 1992 and the appeal is now awaiting a date for hearing. Hearings by the social security commissioners are a matter for my noble Friend, the Lord Chancellor.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people with learning difficulties have been awarded the lower rate of the mobility component of the disability living allowance;

(2) how many people with visual impairments have been awarded (a) the lower rate care or (b) the lower rate mobility component of the disability living allowance;

(3) how many awards of the higher rate mobility components made since 3 February were made (a) on the grounds that the person was severely mentally impaired and displayed severe behavioural problems and (b) under the deaf-blind provisions;

Miss Widdecombe: The latest available figure for the number of people awarded the higher rate mobility component on the grounds of severe mental impairment is 116. The other information is not yet available.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown of the numbers awarded the disability living allowance to date by (a) those awarded the higher rate of the care component, (b) those awarded the middle rate of the care component, (c) those awarded the lower rate of the care component, (d) those awarded the higher rate of mobility component and (e) those awarded the lower rate of the mobility component.

Miss Widdecombe: The latest available figures for components awarded on new claims and top-up claims, including claims made on the grounds of terminal illness, are as follows:

Numbers
Highest rate of the care component	8,700
Middle rate of the care component	9,900
Lowest rate of the care component	27,800
Higher rate of the mobility component	24,400
Lower rate of the mobility component	31,600

There is some overlap the categories because some new claims result in dual awards of both a care and mobility component.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many requests for a review of an adjudication officer's decision on attendance allowance and mobility allowance received by his Department prior to 3 February remain outstanding; how many have been decided: and how many, and what percentage, of reviews decided resulted in the award of the lower rate of disability living allowance.

Miss Widdecombe: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown of successful disability working allowance applicants by (a) people already working and (b) people who started working shortly before making an application for benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: Up to 30 June the number of successful applications for disability working allowance was 1,130. Of these we estimate that about 5 per cent. started work as employees in the week of the claim.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide a breakdown of successful disability working allowance applicants by (a) average hourly earnings, (b) average hours worked, (c) average age, (d) sex, (e) marital status, (f) householder status and (g) qualifying benefit.

Miss Widdecombe: Information on the householder status of applicants is not available. The table provides estimated figures derived from a provisional analysis of claims up to 31 May.

	Successful claims
Average hourly earnings	£3·12
Average hours worked a week	29·8
Average age	36
Number of awards to men	468
Number of awards to women	357
Number of awards to single people	536
Number of awards to couples	289
Householder status	not available
Qualifying benefits:
Invalidity benefit	80

	Successful claims
Severe disablement allowance	43
Income support with disability premium	118
Housing benefit with disability premium	70
Disability living allowance	86
Attendance allowance and other benefits	659

NOTE: Customers may have more than one qualifying benefit.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people claiming the disability living allowance had help completing their claim forms either (a) from the telephone claims completion service of a regional disability benefits centre or (b) from his Department's visiting service;

(2) how many applications for the disability living allowance have been received by his Department to date; and if he will provide a breakdown by (a) the number and percentage of these that resulted in an award, (b) the number and percentage of these that were refused broken down by grounds for refusal and (c) the number and percentage of these that are awaiting a decision;

(3) what is his Department's policy regarding the notification of income support, housing benefit and community charge departments when someone is awarded the disability living allowance; and whether such notification distinguishes between the mobility and care component and the rate of these components, respectively;

(4) how many applications for the disability working allowance have been received by his Department to date; and if he will provide a breakdown by (a) the number and percentage of these that resulted in an award, (b) the number and percentage of these that were refused and (c) the number and percentage of these that are awaiting a decision;

(5) if he will provide a breakdown by number and percentage of the total number of claims for disability working allowance received by his Department that were refused on the grounds that (a) the claimant was not in remunerative work, (b) the claimant's income was above the limit, (c) the claimant was not in receipt of a qualifying benefit, (d) the claimant was receiving family credit, (e) the joint income of the claimant and his or her partner exceeded the limit, (f) the claimant was working less than 16 hours a week or (g) for other reasons;

(6) how many claims for disability living allowance included a report by an examining medical practitioner; and if he will break this down by (a) the number and percentage of successful claims, (b) the number and percentage of unsuccessful claims and (c) the number and percentage of cases where the claimant had already completed the self-assessment application form;

(7) how many requests for reviews of disability living allowance have been received by his Department breaking these down by (a) numbers seeking a review of a decision to refuse benefit and (b) numbers seeking a review of the rate of benefit awarded; and if he will provide a breakdown of this total by (i) successful reviews, (ii) unsuccessful reviews and (iii) reviews not yet decided.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of disability living allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Low Incomes

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether the recommendations made in the publications of the University of Bristol's statistical monitoring unit in 1991 and 1992 about the measurement of low incomes have been followed by his Department in preparing the report on households below average income in 1989.

Mr. Burt: The methodology of the forthcoming report on households below average income—HBAI—in 1989 is based on the recommendations of a technicl stocktaking exercise in 1991. During this exercise external analysts were consulted, including Professor Peter Townsend of the university of Bristol. A member of the Bristol statistical monitoring unit also attended a follow-up seminar in February 1992, along with independent analysts from established and authoritative institutions. The use in HBAI of equivalence scales, allied to sensitivity testing, was supported by all independent analysts from other institutions. This methodology has accordingly been adopted in the forthcoming edition of HBAI.

Although the university of Bristol statistical monitoring unit's views on some key issues are not shared by the majority of independent or Government expert opinion, the Department has of course given them due weight, as it does all advice on methodological issues.

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he plans to make available and publish the results of the households below average income analysis for 1991.

Mr. Burt: The households below average income analysis based on 1990-91 data should be available in mid-1993.

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the other countries which have adopted his Deparrtment's equivalence scale in measuring low incomes.

Mr. Burt: Equivalence scales can be expected to vary from country to country. However, I understand that equivalence scales, with relative rates for singles and couples similar to those employed by the households below average income analysis—HBAI—have been employed in studies in Finland, Sweden, Ireland and France. The approach incorporated in the 1992 edition of HBAI is to produce results on a central set of equivalence scales and subject these to extensive sensitivity testing. This approach was recommended in the report of last year's HBAI stocktaking review, a copy of which is available in the Library. It has been endorsed by almost all the external analysts consulted.

Disability Allowances

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications have been submitted to date for (a) disability working allowance and (b) disability living allowance from claimants in Wales; and, of these claims, how many have been refused since the introduction of the allowances.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of disability working allowance and disabilty living allowance are matters for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Relocation

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the number of civil servants in his Department who could be relocated to provincial centres as part of the policy of devolving and decentralising Government Departments.

Miss Widdecombe: There are 662 posts being relocated from the south-east to Leeds over the next year; the first staff from DSS moved into the new Leeds building, Quarry house, last week. In addition 3,000 new posts will be created outside London in 1993, when Child Support Agency centres are established in Belfast, Birkenhead, Dudley, Falkirk, Hastings and Plymouth.

Disability Tribunals

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many appeals have been heard by disability appeal tribunals to date; and if he will provide a breakdown of these by (a) outstanding mobility allowance, (b) outstanding attendance allowance and (c) disability living allowance appeals.

Miss Widdecombe: The administration of disability appeal tribunals is the responsibility of the president of the Independent Tribunal Service, his honour Judge Holden, and the hon. Member may wish to contact his office to obtain this information.

Benefit Claims

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claims for invalidity benefit, sickness benefit, severe disablement allowance and income support were referred to the regional medical services in each month since January 1992; how many of these cases resulted in medical examinations; and what were the outcomes (a) where examinations took place and (b) where they did not.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available for these benefits is in the table.

References to the regional medical services cleared during quarter ending 31 March 1992

	Number
Incapable of work (without examination)	127,745
Claim terminated before examination—no opinion given	3,571
Failed to attend examination	14,664
Incapable of work (after examination)	51,545
Capable of work (after examination)	9,332
Capable of work within limits (after examination)	14,785
Total number of references cleared	221,642

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will show the level of unemployment benefit (a) in real terms at 1992 prices and (b) as a percentage of the equivalent average wage for (i) a single unemployed person, (ii) an unemployed person with a dependent spouse and (iii) an unemployed person with a spouse and two children for each year since 1979.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the tables:

1. Child dependency additions were abolished from 26 November 1984.
2. Average earnings are taken from Gross Adult Males All Occupations (New Earnings Survey).
3. Over 70 per cent. of those registered unemployed are in receipt of Income Support.

Social Fund

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to publish the study on the social fund by York university; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) on 8 July at column 224.

SCOTLAND

Tourism

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the budget of the Scottish tourist board is currently spent outside the United Kingdom on the marketing of Scotland as a tourist location.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In 1991-92, 19·6 per cent. of the Scottish tourist board's gross expenditure was spent on overseas promotion. The estimate for 1992-93 is 20·3 per cent.

Health Service (Consultants)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each health board the names of the consultants holding a merit award and its grade.

Mr. Stewart: The information requested is of a personal and confidential nature and cannot therefore be made publicly available.

Prison Population

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the prison population in Scotland at the latest available date.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As at Friday 3 July 1992, the prison population in Scotland was 5,294.

Grampian Healthcare

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received an application for national health service trust status from Grampian Healthcare; and if he will say from which date the statutory 90 days consultation period will commence.

Mr. Stewart: I can confirm that an application for NHS trust status has been received from Grampian Healthcare. The Secretary of State intends shortly to instruct Grampian health board to carry out formal consultation on the application on his behalf. The board will decide the date on which the three month consultation period will commence.

Training

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each local enterprise company area in Scotland and for Scotland and Great Britain as a whole, for the latest available period, the wages earned by employment training trainees who three months after leaving were (a) in a full-time job, (b) in a part-time job and (c) self employed.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 2 June 1992]: The information requested is not available, in all the categories requested, for individual local enterprise company areas. Data about leavers are obtained through a survey which started in July 1989. Returns from leavers are incomplete; and information is therefore only available at the level of Scotland and for Great Britain. The survey shows that for trainees leaving the programme between August 1990 and July 1991 and in employment six months afterwards net weekly earnings were as follows:

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about the level of private sector financial contributions to government training schemes; how many youth training places have been offered by the private sector in each of the past five years; and what has been the average cost to public funds of a youth training place in real and actual terms in each of the past five years.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 16 June 1992]: Information about the level of private sector financial contributions to Government training schemes in the last five years and about the number of youth training places offered by the private sector from 1987-88 to 1990-91 is not available. The number since April 1991 is not held centrally and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, the youth training leavers survey—to which not all leavers respond— shows that, in Scotland in 1991-92, an estimated 61 per cent. of youth training leavers trained with employer-led organisations or other private sector training providers. Information about the average cost to public funds in each of the past five years of a youth training place, in actual terms and at 1992-93 price levels, is available only for Great Britain as a whole and is set out in the table.

Youth Training unit price per annum in Great Britain for 1987-88 to 1991-92

	Actual	At 1992-93 price levels
1987-88	2,600	3,595
1988-89	2,527	3,258
1989-90	2,620	3,169
1990-91	2,375	2,656
[1]1991-92	2,732	2,855

[1]Provisional figure, subject to revision.

A 1991-92 figure for Scotland will be available when checking of the relevant information has been completed and I will write to the hon. Member on that point.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people are currently on (a) youth training and (b) employment training in Scotland; and how many of these training programmes involve work experience with an employer.

Mr. Allan Stewart [holding answer 10 July 1992]: In Scotland, the latest available information indicates that at the end of May 1992 there were 35,206 people on youth training and 16,402 on employment training. The majority of trainees receive work experience as part of their training; however information about the exact numbers receiving such experience is not held centrally.

Green Minister

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will outline the priorities for future action of the green Minister in his Department (a) over the next year and (b) over this Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 10 July 1992]: As the responsible Minister I shall, over the next 12 months, follow-up commitments in the White Paper Cm 1200 "This Common Inheritance" and its successor CM 1655 "The First Year Report". In particular, the Scottish Office will develop an environmental housekeeping strategy for its accommodation and purchasing.

Over the next year and beyond I shall seek to achieve greater integration of environmental concerns into wider policy-making. I shall also continue to ensure that Scotland's environment is further safeguarded through the influence of Scottish Natural Heritage, Historic Scotland and the creation of a Scottish Environment Protection Agency.

Water Supplies

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will state, by region or island water authority, the water supply zones which do not fully comply with the requirements of the EC drinking water directive, stating for each the parameters concerned and expected compliance date in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The Water Supply (Water Quality) (Scotland) Regulations 1990 incorporate the requirements of the EC drinking water directive. The zones listed in the table are currently subject to improvement undertakings given by water authorities because one or more of the standards set in the regulations has been infringed in the past. Details of current water quality in individual supply zones are available in public registers maintained by water authorities.

In the zones listed, reported results continue to show that, in many cases, breaches of the standard are marginal or infrequent. It is also clear that many of the zones listed are not experiencing difficulty in achieving the standards concerned, and in these cases the undertakings are simply precautionary. In the majority of zones the contravention relates to only one of the 57 standards set.

Note: "Compliance dates" are latest dates by which all parameters in zones will comply. Individual parameters may comply earlier.

Hospitals (Tertiary Referrals)

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what provision is made for the enumeration of tertiary referrals in hospital (a) in-patient and (b) out-patient treatment as separate consultant episodes; from what date this was done and what arrangements were made for reference back to fund-holding general practitioners for renewed authorisation; if he will estimate the impact of the change in recording and enumeration methods on achieving consistent time-series statistics on numbers of cash treated in hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 10 July 1992]: Provision for the recording of information on in-patient tertiary referrals is included in the SMR 1 scheme which was introduced in 1961. The scheme, which records the information by consultant episode, has identified the referring general practitioner practice number since 1 January 1991.

Tertiary referrals to out-patient departments are separately identified on the SMR 0 return which was introduced on 1 April 1991. The return identifies the referring general practitioner practice number.

It is for individual health boards or trusts to consider what arrangements shall be introduced for reference back to fund holding general practitioners for renewed authorisation.

There have been no recent changes to the data collection methods which have affected the consistency of time-series on the number of cases treated in hospitals.

Multiple Births

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total numbers of (a) sets of (i) twins, (ii) triplets, (iii) quadruplets, (iv) quintuplets and (v) sextuplets born in Scotland in each year from 1980 to 1991, (b) maternities in Scotland in each year and (c) multiple births of each type in each year which were conceived as a result of (1) IVF, (2) GIFT and (3) other forms of assisted conception.

Mr. Stewart: The information is as follows:

Type of birth	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991

Triplet	4	7	6	2	10	9	10	10	9	13	16	24
Quadruplet	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	2	1	2
Quintuplet	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Sextuplet	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	—
Total maternities	68,689	68,865	65,963	64,776	64,800	66,342	65,456	65,839	65,842	63,090	65,556	66,630

Information on the number of multiple births in Scotland attributed to assisted reproduction is not available. Some information on these matters is published in the first annual report of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority, and in earlier annual reports of the interim licensing authority, copies of which are available in the Library.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Sporting Attainment

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has for improving levels of sporting attainment among young people in inner cities.

Mr. Key: We want to encourage young people to higher levels of sporting achievement both in inner city areas and elsewhere. The Sports Council promotes good practice and partnerships in the inner cities by supporting a range of local initiatives. I am greatly encouraged that the 1993-94 city challenge bids contain significant proposals for improving sports provision.

English Heritage

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what discussions he has held with the chairman of English Heritage about the proposed move to Nottingham.

Mr. Key: My right hon. and learned Friend and I discussed the proposed move with the chairman in May.

Sports Participation

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what survey his Department has carried out of the proportion of adults in the United Kingdom regularly participating in sporting activities.

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what study his Department has carried out of the proportion of adults in the United Kingdom regularly participating in sporting activities.

Mr. Key: My Department pays for the inclusion on a three-year cycle of questions in general household survey relating to participation in sport. These questions will next appear in the 1993-94 survey. In addition the Sports Council, which is funded by my Department, was a joint sponsor of the Allied Dunbar national fitness survey the results of which were published on 15 June.

European Festival of Arts

18. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will outline his plans for the European festival of arts taking place during the British presidency of the EC.

24. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will outline his plans for the European festival of arts taking place during the British presidency of the EC.

Mr. Mellor: I have sent each hon. Member a personal copy of the programme for the European arts festival, which contains details of more than 600 events across the United Kingdom.

In addition, a schools and youth programme is being prepared for publication for the start of the autumn school term. This will include special workshops, visits to exhibitions and performances, competitions for special curriculum awards and a wide range of topic and project work. More than 2,000 schools have so far expressed interest in taking part. I shall send hon. Members a copy when it is available.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what consultation was undertaken to determine the programme for the European arts festival.

Mr. Mellor: The Festival Director, John Drummond CBE, has consulted extensively in preparing the programme for the European arts festival, including the four arts councils, the regional arts boards, the Museums and Galleries Commission and a large number of arts organisations and others. He has also been supported by a widely based festival committee. In addition, all primary and secondary schools have been invited to participate in the education and youth programme.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what consideration was given to the scheduling of more than one event in the European arts festival for North Staffordshire; and if he will make it his policy to consult Staffordshire county council and the Stoke on Trent city council twinning officer to ensure that youth events and events in schools are scheduled for Stoke on Trent, North constituency.

Mr. Mellor: The festival programme has very wide coverage. North Staffordshire is one of 250 locations attracting 600 events. Two thousand primary and secondary schools are also involved in the education and youth programme. The festival organisers have been in touch with all local education authorities in the United Kingdom.

Tourism

20. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether he will take steps to encourage the flow of tourists to Leicestershire.

Mr. Key: Nearly half the Government's grant in aid to the English tourist board is devolved, under contract, to help the developmental and promotional work of the regional tourist boards. The East Midlands tourist board, which covers Leicestershire, will this year receive over £400,000 from the ETB. That is a more than 12 per cent. increase over 1991-92.

25. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps the Government are taking to encourage a wider regional spread of tourism.

Mr. Mellor: It has always been the policy of this Government to encourage the widest possible geographical spread of tourism. This is reflected in the policies and activities of the British Tourist Authority and the English tourist board. Nearly half of the English tourist board's grant-in-aid received from my Department goes to support the work of the regional tourist boards. This year these boards will receive a total of £6·89 million—double the sum of only three years ago.

BBC

21. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to meet the chairman of the British Broadcasting Corporation to discuss the method of appointment of the director general.

Mr. Mellor: None. This is a matter for the BBC governors.

Departmental Functions

22. Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when he last met representatives of local authority organisations to discuss the functions of his Department.

Mr. Mellor: I met the Association of County Councils on Wednesday 17 June.

Football

Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what consultations he has had about the implementation of the Taylor report.

Mr. Mellor: I completed on 3 July a round of consultations with interested parties on proposals to re-examine the all-seating requirement for Football League grounds. I announced the conclusions of my re-examination last Friday, in reply to a question from the hon. Member for Stalybridge and Hyde (Mr. Pendry).

Public Art

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what initiatives he is considering to promote public art and support for art schemes.

Mr. Key: The Department of National Heritage already funds a scheme administered by the Royal Society of Arts known as "Art for Architecture" to encourage the integration of works of art and craftwork into new and refurbished buildings at the planning stage. Since its launch in 1990 the scheme has contributed to 17 projects and has received Government funding totalling over £0·25 million.

In addition, I welcome the lead taken by the Arts Council in promoting the principles of support for art which also emphasises the fact that art should be integral, rather than peripheral, aspect of new buildings. But at the same time I would like to reaffirm the Government's view that these schemes must be voluntary.

Arts Funding

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what estimate he has made of the ratio of public to private funding for the arts for the most recent available period.

Mr. Mellor: Total Government funding for the Arts in the current year stands at £253 million. Annual business sponsorship of the arts, including corporate membership, was more than £57 million in 1990-91—the latest year for which firm figures are available. The arts also gains substantially from the patronage of businesses and individuals; from grants made by the Foundation for Sport and the Arts; and through the gift aid scheme.

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proportion of his Department's spending on the arts goes to the professional arts and what proportion to the voluntary or amateur arts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Precise figures are not available. The Arts Councils and, particularly, the regional arts boards support the amateur arts in a variety of ways, for example by making grants to festivals and other community events, and by meeting the costs of the involvement of professional artists with amateur groups.

National Lottery

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what percentage of the national lottery income he expects to be spent in Wales.

Mr. Mellor: Arrangements for the distribution of national lottery funds have not yet been decided. The proceeds will be used to benefit good causes and worthwhile projects throughout the nation.

Fitness

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what representations he has had regarding the recent Sports Council-Health Education Authority national fitness survey.

Mr. Mellor: The Allied Dunbar national fitness survey was published on 15 June 1992. To date we have received no representations.

Relocation

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what assessment he has made of the number of civil servants in his Department who could be relocated to provincial centres as part of the policy of devolving and decentralising Government Departments.

Mr. Mellor: It is the Government's policy to relocate Government offices outside London in those cases where it is possible and appropriate to do so, taking into account such factors as effectiveness, efficiency, value for money and accessibility of the site. Of the approximately 1,000 civil servants in the Department of National Heritage, 397 are appropriately located in the Historic Royal Palaces Agency at Hampton Court Palace and other royal palaces, 168 are members of the Royal Parks constabulary and 40 are royal parks staff also appropriately located on site in the royal parks. The remaining 360 senior officials and other policy staff form the central core of DNH. A variety of options for rehousing them are currently under consideration and I shall be making a statement in due course.

British Sports Forum

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what support he intends to give to the British Sports Forum.

Mr. Key: I welcome the formation of the British Sports Forum which will create a tough, authoritative voice for non-governmental sports organisations in the United Kingdom. I itend to invite a member of the forum to sit on the proposed United Kingdom Sports Commission.

EMPLOYMENT

Training

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total amount spent by public sector employers on training in each year from 1979 to the latest date available on the same basis as shown in "Training Statistics 1991 for 1986-87", published by her Department.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will list the current unemployment rates in each of Allendale, Corby, Dudly, Glanford, Hartlepool, Isle of Dogs, Middlesbrough, North-east Lancashire, North-west Kent, Rotherham, Salford/Trafford, Scunthorpe, Speke, Telford, Tyneside, Wakefield, Wellingborough, Delyn, Milford Haven, Swansea, Clydebank, Inverclyde, Invergordon, Tayside, Belfast and Londonderry.

Mr. McLoughlin: The smallest geographical areas for which unemployment rates are officially compiled are travel-to-work areas—TTWAs. Information for each of these can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library. Those areas requested for which no matching TTWA exists are listed, along with their nearest equivalent TTWA.

Area	"Best fit" TTWA

Relocation

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment she has made of the number of civil servants in her Department who could be relocated to provincial centres as part of the policy of devolving and decentralising Government Departments.

Mr. McLoughlin: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Roxborough and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 6 November 1989, Official Report, columns 471-72.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Naturalisation

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the 65,623 applications for naturalisation made under the provisions of the British Nationality (Hong Kong) Act 1990 were (a) decided, (b) granted, (c) refused and (d) withdrawn, under each class and category of the scheme, in each quarter since March 1991; and how many of these applications were from (i) heads of households or (ii) family members.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information about family members is not available for refusals or withdrawals of applications. The remaining information requested is as follows:

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for British citizenship under section 4(5) of the British Nationality Act 1981 have been (a) made, (b) granted and (c) refused in each quarter since January 1991; and how many of those granted have been on the grounds of service in the armed forces.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Five applications were received in May 1991 and two in December 1991. Of these, two have been granted, three have been refused and two have not yet been decided. Neither of the two granted was on grounds of service in the armed forces.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his best estimate as to how many applications for (a) adult registration with entitlement, (b) naturalisation and (c) registration of minors his Department (i) will receive and (ii) expects to grant in 1992-93.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The latest estimate of the numbers of citizenship applications likely to be received and granted in 1992-93 is as follows:

	Intake	Applications granted
Adult registration	4,000	4,000
Naturalisation	25,000	28,500
Minor registration	5,000	9,500
Total	34,000	42,000

Visas

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for entry clearance from (a) wives, (b) husbands, (c) fiancés and (d) financées made at British posts in (i) New Delhi, (ii) Bombay, (iii) Calcutta, (iv) Madras, (v) Dhaka, (vi) Islamabad, (vii) Karachi and (viii) Colombo for each quarter since January 1991 were (A) received, (B) granted and (C) refused; how many refusals at each post were (1) wholly and (2) partly because the visa officer was not satisfied that the primary purpose of the marriage was not immigration; how many refusals at each post were (x) wholly and (y) partly because the visa officer was not satisfied that the couple could support and accommodate themselves without recourse to public funds; what was the refusal rate at each post; and what percentage of those refusals were wholly and partly on primary purpose grounds.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information for the Indian sub-continent for each quarter of 1991 and for the first quarter of 1992 is given in the tables. Where the numbers are small, the figures for individual posts have been combined. Information on refusals which takes account of successful appeals is not compiled for periods shorter than 12 months. Corresponding information for Colombo is not available centrally.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for entry clearance from (a) wives, (b) husbands, (c) fiancés and (d) fiancées in each British post in all countries apart from those of the Indian sub continent were (a) granted and (b) refused in each quarter since January 1991; how many such applications in each category, at each post and in each quarter were refused (i) wholly and (ii) partly because of the primary purpose rule; what was the refusal rate at each post; and what percentage of those refusals were (x) wholly and (y) partly on primary purpose grounds.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The only information requested which is available centrally is that on applications granted and refused in Hong Kong, and is given in the table.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for (a) single entry and (b) multiple entry visit visas were (A) received, (B) granted and (C) refused at each post in the Indian subcontinent, Ghana, Nigeria and Jamaica in each quarter of 1991 and the first quarter of 1992; what was the delay between application and interview for those whose applications were felt to need a second or long interview at each of the above posts in (i) June 1991, (ii) January 1992, (iii) June 1992 or (iv) the nearest available date.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on applications in Jamaica for a visit entry clearance, and separate information on applications in the other countries for single entry and multiple entry visit visas, are not available centrally. The other information requested is given in the tables.

Hong Kong

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) British nationals and (b) holders of certificates of identity from Hong Kong have been admitted to the United Kingdom in each quarter since January 1991 as (i) persons of independent means, (ii) self-employed persons, (iii) business people (iv) visitors (v) students (vi) husbands and fiancés, (vii) wives and fiancées and (viii) other dependent relatives.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The available information for British dependent territories citizens and British nationals (overseas) from Hong Kong is given in the table. Data on admissions of holders of certificates of identity from Hong Kong are not available.

Immigration

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many outstanding immigration applications there are at Lunar house from (a) students, (b) family members in the United Kingdom applying for variation of stay, (c) settlement entry clearance applications referred from overseas posts and (d) asylum-seekers; and what are the average times applicants in each category might expect to wait before a decision.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The available information is that at end of June 1992 there were in total about 20,700 cases in the general immigration caseworking groups—including eastern European cases and referred entry clearance applications—the majority of which were under consideration or the subject of further inquiries, and about 59,700 cases in the asylum and special cases division.

The estimated average length of time between the receipt of an application and the decision, for cases decided in caseworking groups and the public inquiry offices, in the first quarter of 1992, was two months for students and 17½ months for asylum applications. Information on average waiting times for family members in the United Kingdom for variation of leave and for settlement entry clearance applications referred from overseas posts is not available.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were received into prison department establishments under Immigration Act powers during (a) 1991 and (b) 1992 to the latest convenient date, by individual prison establishment; what was the average daily population of persons so detained in each of those years; what was the average length of time spent in detention by persons so detained in each of those years; and whether he will give a breakdown by nationality of persons so detained for each of those years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information about detainees received into prison service establishments in England and Wales under the Immigration Act 1971 in 1991 and the first quarter of 1992 is given by establishment and nationality in the tables.

The provisional average population in 1991, including persons originally received for a criminal offence, was 222. The average period of detention in 1991 is provisionally estimated as about eight weeks. The corresponding averages for the first quarter of 1992 are 216 and just over nine weeks.

[1] The figures, which are provisional are those recorded centrally and are approximate: detailed checking of individual cases would involve disproportionate cost.
[2] Where fewer than five were recorded.
[3] Where fewer than two were recorded.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were detained under Immigration Act powers for a period of more than two months on completion of a custodial sentence during 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle: During 1991, 36 people were so detained for a period of more than two months. This figure excludes the subjects of deportation orders who served a custodial sentence of seven days or less and in relation to whom the information is not readily available.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons detained under Immigration Act powers applied to the Home Office to be allowed to depart voluntarily under (a) the supervised departure provisions and (b) the voluntary departure provisions of the immigration rules in each quarter since January 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The readily available information relates to persons subject to deportation action who were removed under the supervised departure procedures, or left voluntarily, and persons dealt with as illegal entrants who left voluntarily. This information is given in tables 14 and 15 of the Home Office statistical bulletin "Control of Immigration; Statistics—Third and Fourth Quarters and Year 1991", a copy of which is in the Library. In the first quarter of 1992, 227 persons subject to deportation action were removed under the supervised departure procedures and 15 left voluntarily, and 82 persons dealt with as illegal entrants left voluntarily; these figures are provisional. Most of these persons will have been detained prior to departure. A number will have been subject to restrictions as an alternative to detention, but such cases could be separately identified only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the (a) passengers in total and (b) persons treated as illegal entrants who were granted temporary admission in 1991 subsequently absconded.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The available information relates to the number of persons who absconded, either from detention or by failing to respond to the terms of temporary admission/release, and is given in the table. Separate information on these two types of absconder is not recorded centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Absconders in 1991

Category of person	Number of persons

Illegal entrants	168

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the European Commission about the entitlement of persons visiting or seeking asylum in other European Community countries to enter the United Kingdom as from 1 January 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I have had no discussion with the Commission specifically on these matters, which are considered among the Twelve on an intergovernmental basis outside the treaty of Rome.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the decision by the European Court of Justice in the case of Surinder Singh with regard to the enforcement of United Kingdom immigration rules under the treaty of Rome; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The case of Mr. Surinder Singh will now be considered by the High Court in the light of the decision by the European Court of Justice on the relevant point of Community law. It would not be appropriate for me to comment in detail on this particular case in advance of the High Court's judgment.

I will carefully study the judgments of both Courts and consider their wider implications, but at present I see no need to amend the immigration rules in the light of the case.

Deportation

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were recommended for deportation with no custodial sentence during (a) 1991 and (b) 1992 to the latest convenient date; and in how many such cases the courts directed release (i) subject to conditions and (ii) without conditions.

Mr. Charles Wardle During 1991, 27 people were recommended for deportation by the courts with no custodial sentence and six during the first half of 1992. The other information requested is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Special Quota Vouchers

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were waiting for special quota vouchers in (a) India, (b) east Africa and (c) the rest of the world in (i) May 1991 and (ii) December 1991; when those issued with vouchers on those dates had applied; how many vouchers were issued in (1) India, (2) east Africa and (3) the rest of the world in (A) 1991 and (B) the first quarter of 1992; when those applying can now expect to receive vouchers; and how many applicants there were for vouchers in (v) India, (w) east Africa and (x) the rest of the world in (y) 1991 and (z) the first half of 1992.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information which is currently available is given in the tables.

Relocation

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the number of civil servants in his Department who could be relocated to provincial centres as part of the policy of devolving and decentralising Government Departments.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Home Office has completed a number of relocation reviews as part of the Government's programme to move civil service posts away from London and the south-east. Plans are well advanced for relocation of the prison service headquarters to Derby in 1993-95, the directorate of telecommunications headquarters to Ruddington—near Nottingham—in 1992 and accounts branch to Merseyside in 1991-92—which involve over 1,600 posts moving from the south-east and others from elsewhere in the country. The police national computer organisation is looking at relocation as part of a wider review. The Home Office keeps under review the location of work in accordance with central guidelines.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 16 June, Official Report, column 428, whether inquiries made by anyone other than the subject of the record cause such temporary records to be retained; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It is whether inquiries have been made by the Security Service since the coming into force of the Security Service Act 1989 which determines whether temporary records need to be retained for tribunal purposes in order to comply with the view of the Security Service Commissioner.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the Security Service's policy in relation to temporary records made since the coming into effect of the Security Service Act 1989 after they become more than three years old.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: If they have not by that time been converted into permanent files, or destroyed because no inquiries had been made on the subject since the coming into force of the Act, such temporary records are retained for the purposes of the complaints tribunal.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many records in the categories referred to in paragraph 24 of the Security Service Commissioner's report for 1991 (Cm 1946) have not been destroyed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In cases where no inquiries have been made since the coming into force of the 1989 Act, the Security Service's policy, in accordance with the view of the commissioner, is that no files in the cateogories referred to should be retained.

Empty Housing

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a list of empty residential properties in the London borough of Lewisham in the ownership of the Metropolitan police and the type of accommodation available; how long each property has been vacant; and what is the intended future use.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is as follows:

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a list of empty residential properties in the London borough of Lewisham in the ownership of his Department, the type of accommodation available and how long each property has been vacant; and what is the intended future use.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are no empty residential properties owned by the Department in the London borough of Lewisham.

Overseas Voters

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of sending annual reminders to overseas voters wishing to register under the Representation of the People Act 1989 for each year since 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Annual reminders are sent to overseas electors by electoral registration officers. Details of the costs are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the Government's total budget for advertising and publicising the new provisions for overseas voting (a) in the Representation of the People Act 1985 and (b) in the Representation of the People Act 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The total costs of advertising the provisions of the Representation of the People Acts 1985 and 1989 were £279,000 and £705,000 respectively. In addition, £1,400 was spent in 1991 on updating posters used in British diplomatic posts abroad.

British National Party

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the seizure of literature from the BNP headquarters in Welling earlier in the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: On Thursday 9 January, the Metropolitan police searched the headquarters of the British National party. A search warrant had been granted in the belief that material inciting racial hatred might be found there.

A number of magazines were seized and submitted to the Crown prosecution service for advice as to whether the possession and distribution of them constituted offences under the Race Relations and Public Order Acts.

The police have been informed that, in counsel's opinion, the articles were insufficient to justify prosecution.

Female Circumcision

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action the Government are taking to prevent young girls being taken out of the United Kingdom to be circumcised.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A person may apply to a court for an order to prohibit the removal of a child from the country, if he has reasonable grounds to believe that the child if taken abroad would suffer harm. The police at airports and seaports maintain a list, which is also given to the immigration service, of children who are believed to be under threat of removal. Immigration officers are instructed to check this list when a child embarks alone or in the company of one parent or an adult who is not a parent, and to notify any identified subject of the list to a police officer.

Obscene Publications Act 1959

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there have been in England and Wales in each of the last 10 years under section 2 of the Obscene Publications Act 1959; and of those found guilty what sentence was imposed.

Mr. Jack: The information is given in the table.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many items have been seized under section 3 of the Obscene Publications Act 1959 by the Metropolitan police in each year of the last 10 years.

Mr. Jack: Figures for 1982 to 1984 are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Figures for 1985 to 1992 are as follows:

Year	Warrants executed	Items seized
1985	52	286,511
1986	46	560,047
1987	90	813,243
1988	101	655,119
1989	166	356,478
1990	142	120,821
1991	116	34,696
[1]1992	36	5,007

[1]January to May only.

The decline in numbers of items seized, as opposed to the number of warrants executed, is accounted for by the obscene publications branch's concentration of effort on cases involving child pornography, in which typical seizures involve fewer individual articles.

South Wales Police

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 7 July, Official Report, column 131 if he will make a statement on the reasons for deciding not to revise his assessment of uniform needs of the south Wales police following the undertaken assessment of the urban/rural split in the south Wales area.

Mr. Charles Wardle: We have undertaken to include the definition of urban and rural areas in our review of the allocation formula. Decisions on the next round of allocations to individual forces will be informed of the outcome.

Michael Shirley

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to announce the result of the inquiry into the conviction for murder of Michael Shirley.

Mr. Jack: Mr. Shirley's case is currently being considered in the light of a recently received police report and representations from his solicitor. I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as a decision has been reached.

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is being taken to end the hunger strike of Michael Shirley at Long Lartin prison.

Mr. Jack: The medical officer is closely monitoring Mr. Michael Shirley's condition in the prison hospital and, although he has refused food since 26 June, he is accepting liquids. Physically, he is stable and staff continue to counsel him to persuade him to end his protest.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Vauxhall (Ms. Hoey) of 15 June, Official Report, column 376, if he will provide comparable information for the periods (a) 1 October 1990 to 31 March 1991 and (b) 1 October 1991 to 31 March 1992; and what changes in policy with regard to asylum decisions there have been since April 1991.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Information on decisions on asylum applications taken in the periods 1 October 1990 to 31 March 1991 and 1 October 1991 to 31 March 1992 is given in the table.

There have been no changes in policy in making decisions: applications continue to be determined according to article 1 of the 1951 United Nations refugees convention. Procedural measures were introduced in November 1991 to require all undocumented applicants to attend an interview to establish identity, and to reduce other opportunities for fraud.

Decisions[1] on asylum applications, excluding dependants

[3] Figure for 1 January 1991–31 March 1991 only. These refusals for 1 October 1990–31 December 1990 are included in "Refused asylum and exceptional leave after determination of case".
[4] For failure to provide evidence to support the asylum claim within a reasonable period, including failure to respond to invitations to interview to establish identity.
[5] Separate figures only available from 1 December 1991. Prior to this, these refusals are included in "Refused asylum and exceptional leave after determination of case".

Police Helicopter Use

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the contracts for each police force in England and Wales for the full-time or part-time use of helicopters; what is the availability for each area; and what is the annual cost in each area.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The operation of police air support units is a matter for chief constables. The table shows the information which is available centrally on the 14 air support units which operate helicopters.

It would not be in the operational interest of the police to disclose details of the availability of helicopters.

Prison Visitors

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many black and ethnic minority people were appointed to the board of visitors of prisons in England and Wales in the financial year 1990-91.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In 1990-91, 195 appointments were made to boards of visitors.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures have been taken by his Department to increase black and ethnic minority representations on the boards of visitors of prisons in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: In making appointments to a board of visitors, consideration is given to the abilities of the individual candidate to discharge the duties effectively and the desirability of maintaining, so far as possible, a representative balance on the board in terms, for example, of age, sex and social and ethnic background. No fewer than two members of the board are required to be justices of the peace. The membership of individual boards is reviewed every three years.

Advice on the selection and appointment of new members forms part of the training of chairmen of boards of visitors and is also included in the "Notes for the guidance of Chairmen" in the "Handbook for Members of Boards of Visitors", a copy of which I have placed in the library.

The current ethnic make-up of boards is as follows:

Percentage of members in post on 7 July 1992

Ethnic origin	Percentage
Asian	2.31
Black	3.80
White	64.15
Other	0.25
Not known	29.49

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many appointments were made to the boards of visitors of prisons in England and Wales in the financial year 1990-91.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The figures for 1990-91 are given. These do not include those 63 members who were appointed during the relevant period but have since resigned; this information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Number appointed to Boards of Visitors 1990-91

Ethnic Origin	Number
Asian	1
Black	2
White	59
Other	0
Not known[1]	70

[1] The figures are based upon self-assessment and not all members choose to disclose their ethnic origin.

Bail

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will introduce legislation to give the prosecution the right of appeal to a judge in chambers on the ground that bail has been unreasonably granted by magistrates.

Mr. Jack: We have no immediate plans to do so; but we have received a representation on this point and it will be considered as part of our wider exercise of examining the issues affecting the bail decision-taking process.

Miss Megan Bloem

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the appeal by Miss Megan Bloem case B 500534 will be determined.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 9 July 1992]: When the Home Office has prepared an explanatory statement setting out the facts and the reasons for the decision, it will be for the immigration appellate authorities to arrange for the appeal to be heard.

Police Retirements

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, what is the number of early retirements from the police on medical grounds for each police force for each of the last three years.

Mr. Wardle: I will write to the hon. Member.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Protective Equipment

Mr. Hawksley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if a thimble is too small to carry a mechanical pictogram CE mark as described in annex 11, section 2.12 of the personal protective equipment directive, how big it should be before it is exempt.

Mr. Sainsbury: All PPE units covered by the personal protective equipment directive 89/686/EEC are required to bear the CE mark both on the unit, regardless of its size, and its packaging. Thimbles for private use are not covered by the directive. Those for professional use are.

A Commission proposal on the CE mark currently under discussion would, if adopted as currently drafted, amend the directive and other new approach directives to provide for the mark to be affixed to the packaging or other associated documentation where for practical reasons it cannot be placed on the unit itself.

Paragraph 2.12 of annex II of the directive relates to identification or recognition marks other than the CE mark.

Green Minister

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will outline the priorities for future action of the green Minister in his Department (a) over the next year and (b) over this Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heseltine: Over the next 12 months, I shall continue to follow up specific commitments relevant to my Department in the White paper Cm 1200 "This Common Inheritance" in the subsequent "First Year Report", Cm 1655, and in the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development in Rio on 12 June. I shall also be giving priority to the further development of a strategy for integrating environmental considerations into the day-to-day management of my Department.

For the longer term, I will continue to ensure that environmental considerations are integrated into the development of all the policies and programmes of my Department where relevant. I shall also continue the practice established by my predecessor of including a report on the environmental aspects of my Department's activities in the annual trade and industry expenditure plans.

Certification Industry

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what assessment his Department has made of the adequacy of resources available to the National Accreditation Council for Certification Bodies to enable it to respond to the expansion in the certification industry both in Europe and internationally;

(2) in what circumstances Government purchasers and regulatory bodies are willing to accept third party certification in lieu of separate supplier assessments;

(3) what assessment his Department has made of the effectiveness of the measures that were introduced in 1985 to improve the competence of certification bodies;

(4) what is the Government's policy in respect of competition amongst certification bodies;

(5) what restrictions exist on a certification body which has received Government accreditation as attestation of competence for a function from offering a non-accredited service for the same function;

(6) what assessment his Department has made of the sufficiency of information technology expertise in the National Accreditation Council for Certification Bodies and supporting industry structures, to ensure continued development and expansion of certification services in the field of information technology.

Mr. Leigh: Since accreditation of certification bodies in the United Kingdom, is confined to United Kingdom bodies or others under United Kingdom jurisdiction, the role of the National Accreditation Council for Certification Bodies is limited to providing advice on the suitability or otherwise of such bodies. There is therefore no direct resource implication for the NACCB resulting from the expansion of the certification industry in Europe and internationally. In addition, the NACCB recoups the full economic costs of its assessments through the fees it charges; and increase in its workload which might occur would therefore generally be self-financing.

The NACCB has adequate resources to finance its consequential work to promote the development of and co-operation between national accreditation systems throughout Europe including participation in international discussion of accreditation issues.

Information Technology

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consideration his Department has given to possible confusion concerning the status and standing of BSi QA within the information technology industry.

Mr. Leigh: BSi Quality Assurance is a commercial business offering certification services. As it forms part of the British Standards Institution it could be perceived that BSi QA is the only body which may offer certification to British Standards. In fact, a number of other certification bodies have also been accredited to offer such services and yet others may apply in the future. Officials in my Department take every opportunity to advise enquirers from the IT industry that competition exists in the market for certification services, and that the DTI QA register contains names and addresses of all the certification bodies and the services they offer. The register is available from HMSO and a copy is located in the House of Commons Library.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment has been made of the costs of establishing IT certification conducted by qualified IT-literate specialists relative to the costs of damage done by low IT-skilled auditors.

Mr. Leigh: IT-literate specialists are now able to qualify as auditors for software quality management system certification following introduction of the TickIT scheme. This scheme was initiated at the behest of both the United Kingdom information technology industry and IT users more widely. My Department has supported development of the TickIT Guide, TickIT auditor qualifications, a professional auditor register, and auditor training course material. The scheme seeks to improve the standard of IT quality management system—QMS—auditing and to date more than 35 auditors have qualified under the TickIT scheme.

Both IT suppliers and users perceive considerable benefit in the use of qualified IT professionals as auditors, because added value can accrue through having experienced IT practitioners examine and comment on company QMS. The cost/benefit of this approach is also evident through the enthusiasm with which industry at large is beginning to adopt TickIT, and more than 60 companies have achieved certification under this scheme.

A copy of the TickIT guide is located in the House of Commons Library.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give details of the number, and names of all TickIT-accredited bodies which have gained full acceptance by the European Organisation for Testing and Certification.

Mr. Leigh: EOTC is the European Organisation for Testing and Certification. It is an umbrella body which oversees ECITC—the European Committee on information technology certification—a sectoral committee which in turn oversees the ITQS agreement group, the recognition arrangement for assessment and certification of quality systems in information technology. Agreement groups comprise signatories to arrangements for the mutual recognition of certificates relating to the provision of services. ITQS has as its remit the certification of IT quality management systems, using a common set of rules based on European and International standards.

There are four certification bodies accredited for TickIT in the United Kingdom—BSi Quality Assurance, Bureau Veritas Quality International Ltd, Det Norske Veritas Quality Assurance, of which the first named is also a member of EOTC.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what current or planned initiatives exist aimed at developing the European information technology industry.

Mr. Leigh: In accordance with the EC Industry Council resolution on electronics, information and communications technologies of 18 November 1991, the European Commission is carrying out a number of studies in this field; and is setting up a centralised point of information to monitor marketing, market access and distribution practices. In addition the Community's ESPRIT and Telematics R and D programmes aim to strengthen the European science and technology base in IT.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the relationship and possible competition between the TickIT scheme and BSi QA (a) domestically and (b) in the international community.

Mr. Leigh: TickIT is a scheme which provides for accredited independent certification of quality management systems—QMS—in the software development process in the United Kingdom. Its use internationally is also welcome and there is growing interest from outside the UK.

BSi QA is a commercial business, offering certification services, including services within the TickIT scheme. It is understood that BSi QA offer TickIT accredited certification both domestically and internationally. BSI QA has also offered non-accredited certification in the information technology field; it has furthermore received accreditation by the relevant authority in the Netherlands for provision of certification services in IT.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans his Department has to further information technology certification, to underpin the interoperability of telecommunications, computer and software technology.

Mr. Leigh: My Department's approach is that credible IT conformance testing can greatly assist progress towards interoperability. It may be expected that as conformance testing becomes increasingly adopted by the market, so should certification become increasingly influential in promoting user confidence in interoperable products. Therefore my Department is already providing support in establishing a testing infrastructure including the establishment of an United Kingdom open systems interconnection test service.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give details of the arrangements his Department is making to permit other countries to use the TickIT mark.

Mr. Leigh: TickIT-accredited certification bodies can assess and certificate company quality management systems in any country in the world. Following a successful assessment, the certification body issues a certificate and permits use of the TickIT mark on that certificated company's stationery and literature. My powers do not extend to accreditation of bodies which are not legal entities in the United Kingdom.

The United Kingdom has been approached by several countries wishing to participate in the TickIT scheme. This they are able to do either by use of the existing TickIT accredited certification bodies or by agreeing to a suitable reciprocal arrangement between their national accreditation body and the United Kingdom National Accreditation Council for Certification Bodies.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give details of the measures his Department has taken to encourage TickIT-accredited bodies to join the Information Technology Quality Systems arrangement.

Mr. Leigh: BSi QA is a TickIT accredited certification body and a founder member of ITQS. My Department has explained fully the benefits of joining the ITQS agreement group to the other TickIT certification bodies.

CFCs

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what research he has commissioned into substitutes for chlorofluorocarbons in technologies where CFCs are currently regarded as essential components; and what chemicals are involved.

Mr. Leigh: There is a continuous programme of research by industry worldwide into ozone-benign alternatives to chlorofluorocarbons. The programme has had a number of successes including the announcement by ICI on 1 July of their new ozone-benign refrigerant, KLEA 32.

The DTI encourages industry-led research into environmentally-friendly technologies through a number of schemes of financial support and these schemes are open both to producers of alternatives to CFCs and to those developing cleaner process technologies which reduce or eliminate the need for CFC-based substances.

Nuclear Levy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations he has received from the Major Energy Users Council over the level of profits accruing to Nuclear Electric as a result of the nuclear levy.

Mr. Eggar: I recently met representatives of the Major Energy Users Council to discuss electricity prices for their members. The non-fossil fuel levy was one of a number of matters raised.

North Sea Oil and Gas

Mr. Colvin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his latest estimate of the cost of abandonment of oil and gas production related structures in the British sector of the North sea.

Mr. Eggar: The cost of abandonment of oil and gas production installations, currently producing or under development in the United Kingdom continental shelf, is estimated to be in the region of £6 billion in 1992 money. The expenditure will take place over a long period, extending well into the next century.

Business Expansion

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the availability of long-term finance to small and medium-sized businesses seeking funding for expansion and capital reconstruction.

Mr. Leigh: The vigour and dynamism of small and medium-sized businesses over the past 12 years show that their capital needs for start-up, expansion and re-construction are largely being met from the expanding range of public and private sources. Government initiatives have complemented the role of the banks and other financial institutions. We will continue to encourage everyone concerned to take account of the special needs and potential of this sector, including the need for long-term finance.

Enterprise Funds

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what provision is currently available for unquoted companies in (a) north Staffordshire, (b) Staffordshire, (c) west midlands and (d) all other regions wishing to secure enterprise funds for investment.

Mr. Sainsbury: Companies in all regions have access to a variety of sources of capital for investment. In certain areas, including parts of the west midlands but not the North Staffordshire travel-to-work areas, certain regional industrial incentives, are available from my Department, notably regional selective assistance.

Fuel Cell Technology

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what consideration he is giving to a combination of combined heat and power technology, and solid oxide fuel cells;

(2) what support he is giving to research on solid oxide fuel cells;

(3) if he will make a statement on the work of the energy support unit at Harwell in relation to fuel cell technology;

(4) what action he is taking to promote the use of existing skills in the United Kingdom to promote the development of solid polymer fuel cell technology.

Mr. Eggar: On 11 March this year, the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State announced a research programme to accelerate the development of fuel cell systems for early application in the United Kingdom. He also announced the appointment of a fuel cell advisory panel with members who are experts from industry, to advise and provide guidance on the content of the programme.

In forming this programme, the Department of Energy, now the DTI, consulted with researchers and industry and commissioned studies which indicate that the United Kingdom has technical skills and industrial interests needed to advance the development of two fuel cell types, the solid oxide and solid polymer. While this programme is likely to concentrate on the development of the technologies, it will be guided by potential applications such as combined heat and power.

The energy technology support unit at Harwell will act as the DTI's agent for managing the programme.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will institute a study of legislation in the state of California relating to zero pollution emissions, and the use of fuel cells in hydrogen.

Mr. Eggar: My Department has already undertaken a number of studies on fuel cells and I refer the hon. Member to my answers to his other questions today. On the matter of californian state emissions regulations, these are well documented in technical publications and are available to the public.

Steel Production

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the volume of steel production in the United Kingdom in the first quarter of this year and in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sainsbury: Information on steel production is regularly published in "Economic Trends" which is available in the Library of the House.

Government Departments (Payment of Bills)

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the outcome of the survey of prompt payment by Government Departments.

Mr. Leigh: During the financial year 1991-92, major purchasing Government Departments and agencies undertook sample surveys to determine the percentage of invoices paid within the agreed credit period, or within 30 days where no credit period had been set. All but two departments reported results in the range 70 to 100 per cent.

The full details are:

Department	Invoices paid within contract terms or 30 days percentage
Agriculture, Fisheries and Food	77·0
Customs and Excise	83·0
Defence	89·3
Education and Science	83·2
Employment Service	83·0
Energy	91·8
Foreign and Commonwealth	86·0
Health	85·0
Health and Safety Executive	86·6
Inland Revenue	99·0
Lord Chancellor's Department	82·5
National Savings	93·0
Northern Ireland Office	74·0
Overseas Development Administration	87·6
Property Services Agency
Building Management	41·6
Projects	80·6
Scottish Office	82·0
Social Security	90·4
Trade and Industry	80·0
Transport	83·0
Welsh Office	65·0

I have asked that Departments continue to monitor their payment performance and that individual Departments report that performance on request.

Regional Financial Assistance

Mr. Milburn: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the public sector cost per additional permanent job created as a result of regional financial assistance schemes, excluding multiplier effects.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 6 July 1992]: I refer the hon. Member to the report published in 1990 by HMSO, "Regional Selective Assistance an evaluation by DTI, IDS and WOID", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

National Economic Development Office

Mr. Adley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what initiatives he intends to take following the decision to wind up the National Economic Development Office.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 8 July 1992]: I announced on 3 July my plans to reorganise the Department of Trade and Industry to enable it to concentrate more on promoting the competitiveness of British industry and commerce, and to relate more closely to industry, sector by sector. The new organisation will encourage the establishment of a flexible and direct dialogue with industry. The Department is inviting inward secondees from industry to join civil servants in the new sectorial divisions, and I also expect to fill a small number of posts with staff drawn from the National Economic Development Office.

RETEX

Mr. Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade for what reasons (a) he has decided not to forward the Nottinghamshire county council's bid for funding under the RETEX programme and (b) he has not offered Nottinghamshire country council and explanation of his decision; and how many such bids so far have met the EC's criteria for the programme, indicating which bids.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 8 July 1992]: No decisions have yet been taken about any requests for RETEX funding. The RETEX scheme of European Community grants was announced on 4 June 1992. The UK and other member states have until 4 December to present operational programmes to the Commission. The Commission will have six months to consider them. When it has approved them, applications for funding can be considered.

Mr. Straw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which travel-to-work areas in Lancashire are eligible for consideration under the EC RETEX initiative; what representations he has received in respect of Blackburn's eligibility; and by what dates decisions have to be made by Her Majesty's Government, and by the EC Commission.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 10 July 1992]: The European Commission has decided that RETEX grants for textile dependent areas will not be available outside areas designated under structural funds objectives 1, 2 and 5(b). The travel to work areas of Accrington and Rossendale, Blackburn, Bolton and Bury, Burnley, Liverpool, Pendle, Rochdale and Wigan and St. Helens, which lie wholly or partly in Lancashire, are so designated.

Representations about Blackburn have been received from a number of local interests.

The United Kingdom and other member states have until 4 December 1992 to present operational programmes to the European Commission. Pursuant to article 14(3) of Council regulation EEC 4253/88, the European Commission wil have six months from the receipt of the programmes to decide on the assistance.

Timeshare Act 1992

Mr. Onslow: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he now expects to lay the necessary orders to bring the Timeshare Act 1992 into effect.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 10 July 1992]: I expect to lay the printed notices orders required under the Act within the next two to three weeks. It is intended that the Act should enter into force two months after the laying of these orders.

Coal Industry

Mr. Patchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when the European Energy Council last discussed the British coal industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 10 July 1992]: Prospects for the coal industry were last discussed by the Energy Council in 1986 in the context of the current state aids decision which commenced the following year.

HEALTH

NHS Statistics

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the numbers of (a) general practitioners, (b) hospital doctors and dentists and (c) nurses and midwives have changed since 1979.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested at 30 September for England is shown in the table.

	1979	1990	Per cent. change
General Practitioners	21,357	25,622	20·0
Hospital Doctors and Dentists	32,749·1	40,576·2	23·9
Nurses and Midwives:
Including agency staff	358,446·5	402,066·4	12·2
Excluding agency staff	354,421·5	395,361·0	11·6

All figures are in whole-time equivalents except for general practitioners, where whole-time equivalents are not available for 1979; actual numbers are used instead for both years. 30 September is the latest date for which this information is available.

Psychologists

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is her Department's target figure for training places for clinical psychologists; what assessment her Department has made of the projected demand from (a) the NHS and (b) local authorities for clinical psychologists; and if she will make a statement;

(2) what assessment she has made of the demand for clinical psychologists (a) currently and (b) in 1991; and what estimate she has made of the extent to which the demand was met in each of these periods.

Mr. Yeo: It is for national health service employers to determine the work force they require and the training staff they need, in the light of the services they are contracted to provide. Regional health authorities, in consultation with employers, which include family health services authorities and local authority social services departments, calculate the overall demand for training and purchase the required number of training places from the educational and training institutions on behalf of the employers.

Regional health authorities purchased 178 training places for clinical psychologists in 1991 and have signed contracts to purchase 215 places in 1992.

Brain Damage

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is currently taking to assist individual districts and units to provide an adequate service to meet the needs of long-term brain-damaged people; if she will provide central funding in each region above and beyond normal allocations for such patients; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: We have recently launched an initiative to improve national health service services for the rehabilitation and long-term support of people with brain injury. Central funding of £1 million per year is being provided to 12 sites around the country to develop model services. The selected sites, with funding for 1992-93, are:

Regional rehabilitation centre, Hunters Moor hospital, Newcastle-upon-Tyne (£40,000);
Leeds general infirmary and Leeds community services (£80,000);
Derbyshire royal infirmary and Derby city hospital (£75,000);
Nottingham health authority (£75,000);
Central Sheffield university hospitals (£70,000);
Regional Neurological rehabilitation unit, Homerton hospital, London (£150,000);
Rivermead rehabilitation centre, Oxford (£70,000);
Rayners Hedge physical rehabilitation service, Aylesbury (£40,000);
Stroke and rehabilitation unit, Royal Cornwall hospital (City), Truro (£65,000);
Frenchay healthcare services, Bristol (£200,000);
Neurobehavioural rehabilitation unit, St. Edward's hospital, Cheddleton, and Neurological rehabilitation unit, Haywood hospital, Burslem (£90,000);
Community unit, Worcester district health authority (£90,000).

Out-patient Treatment

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will consider including as a further national charter standard in the patients charter to ensure continuity of care that health authorities should require that when a patient has a series of out-patient appointments, then whenever possible the same doctor should attend the patient; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Patients attending hospital out-patient clinics are under the care of a named consultant who provides continuity of care. The consultant oversees a team of doctors, including junior doctors on rotation, and is responsible for ensuring that they undertake work within their competence.

Service Committee Decisions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will take steps to ensure that family health service authorities give reasons to the patient for decisions reached when cases are disposed of by service committees without an oral hearing; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she will ensure that when an appeal from a family health service authority service committee is heard by her, the patient is given reasons for the decision reached by her; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The National Health Service (Service Committees and Tribunal) Regulations 1992 govern the investigation of complaints against family practitioners. These require service committees, whether or not an oral hearing is held, to give reasons for their findings in their reports to family health services authorities which are sent to the patients involved. Similarly, the regulations require my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to give reasons for her decisions on appeals and it is standard practice to do so.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will ensure that where district health authorities are merged there is (a) an adequate period for consultations between the regional health authority and community health councils involved in any possible merger and (b) a formal appeals machinery independent of the regional health authority to handle any appeals from community health councils with the appeals panel having powers to impose its judgment which would be binding on both parties; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Regional health authorities which propose to merge district health authorities should allow an adequate period for consultation with interested parties, including community health councils.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will not approve a proposal for merger unless she is satisfied that it commands a broad measure of support locally. In these circumstances, we do not see a need for a separate appeals panel.

Regional Secure Units

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will introduce legislation, in the light of the Reed committee's recommendations on regional provision for seriously mentally disordered offenders placed in regional secure units, (a) to separate these units from the purchaser or provider system, (b) to arrange their funding through regional health authorities and (c) to arrange for the monitoring of agreed standards of provision; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: We expect the steering committee for the review of services for mentally disordered offenders to submit its final report at the end of July. We will announce decisions when we have considered both the final report and the responses to consultation on the recommendations the committee has already made.

The performance of health authorities in achieving any standards adopted or objectives set in the light of the review will be monitored through the existing accountability arrangements.

Diabetes

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the Novopen syringe tips can be provided to diabetics free of charge under the national health service.

Mr. Sackville: Syringe tips, which incorporate needles, may be provided free of charge through hospital consultants if they are judged to be clinically necessary and the health authority, having regard to its other priorities, is able to meet the cost. We are considering authorising general practitioners to prescribe both injection pens and needles free of charge providing resources allow.

Relocation

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the number of civil servants in her Department who could be relocated to provincial centres as part of the policy of devolving and decentralising Government Departments.

Mr. Sackville: The relocation of the national health service management executive and the National Health Service Estates agency to Leeds has started. Some 1,000 posts up to the highest management levels are involved. The first moves from London took place on 6 July as planned. By October this year, over 500 posts will have relocated, with the remainder following next spring. The whole move is expected to have been completed by the summer of 1993.

Growth Hormone

Miss Joan Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she has any plans to compensate the families of victims of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease contracted from growth hormone injections extracted from cadavers.

Mr. Yeo: We have no plans for specific compensation but the full range of support services and benefits appropriate to people with disabilities and their families is available.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the breaches of the voluntary agreements on tobacco advertising reported in the third and fourth annual reports of the committee for monitoring the agreements on tobacco advertising and sponsorship occurred in Oxford.

Dr Mawhinney: The proportion reported in the third annual report was 35 per cent.—seven out of a total of 20. In the fourth report, this proportion was 77 per cent.—21 out of 27.

Community Care

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of NHS patients had written community care plans at the time of their discharge from hospital in 1991-92.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not held centrally.

Accident and Emergency Services

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average waiting time for initial assessment in accident and emergency departments in 1991-92; and what proportion of people attending accident and emergency departments had to wait (a) five minutes or more, (b) 15 minutes or more and (c) 30 minutes or more.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally.

Health Authority Amalgamations

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy towards the amalgamation of district health authorities with family health service authorities; whether consultation with the medical profession is required before proposals are submitted to her; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Merger between district health authorities and family health services authorities was identified in "Working for Patients" as a possible long-term option. However, this would require changes to primary legislation, and we have no immediate plans for taking this forward. Primary and secondary care have complementary roles in implementing the "Health of the Nation" strategy. District health authorities and family health services authorities will need to work closely together to improve health. There is substantial scope for this within the current arrangements, for example joint strategies, health investment plans, managerial and public health appointments.

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy towards the amalgamation of district health authorities in the North West Thames region; what evidence she has that larger purchasing authorities are more effective in obtaining services from NHS trust hospitals; what consideration she is giving to the need for co-terminosity in a borough such as Hillingdon; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: North West Thames regional health authority has been consulting locally on proposals for changing district health authorities boundaries to match those of family health services authorities and social services. A public meeting was held on 9 June 1992. We expect any proposals for changing the boundaries of district health authorities to have local support and to demonstrate clear benefits for patients.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proportion of NHS hospitals and trusts had published on or before 1 April their current maximum admission times for each specialty; and which hospital or trust had the longest and which one had the shortest waiting time at 1 April in each specialty;

(2) if she will list the health authorities in England which at 1 April (a) had and (b) had not published detailed information on local health services including quality standards and maximum waiting times.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally. From 1 April, under the patients charter, patients have a right to be given detailed information on local health services. Health authorities are required to publish information about local health services including national and local charter standards and maximum waiting times. From 1 April 1993, health authorities will also have to publish information about their performance in relation to national and local charter standards.

The national health service management executive will be asking regional health authorities to notify them of any instances where information as set out in the patients charter is not made freely available to the public.

Complaints Procedure

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of NHS complaints received between 1 April 1991 and 31 March 1992 were dealt with within (a) one week, (b) one month, (c) three months and (d) more than three months.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the health authorities and NHS trusts in England which at 1 April (a) had and (b) had not published a complaints procedure allowing members of the public to have any complaint investigated and to receive a prompt written reply from the chief executive or general manager; and which authorities had, at 1 April, published the number of complaints received and the time taken to deal with them.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally. However, all health authorities are required, by directions issued under the Hospital Complaints Procedure Act 1985, to make formal arrangements for dealing with complaints and for publishing these. The proper investigation of complaints is very important to patients and the national health service, and is one of the three new rights given in the patients charter. From 1 April 1992, under the patients charter, health authorities and NHS hospitals will have to publish details of the numbers of complaints received and the time taken to deal with them.

Wheelchair Accessibility

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the floor space of NHS buildings was accessible to people in wheelchairs as at 1 April.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally.

Surgery Cancellations

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients had their operations cancelled on the day they were due to arrive in hospital in 1991-92.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally.

Ambulance Service

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in what proportion of cases an emergency ambulance arrived within 14 minutes in an urban area and within 19 minutes in a rural area in 1991-92.

Mr. Sackville: The latest available figures for England for 1990-91 are given in the table.

	percentage
Emergency calls: Response times: Metropolitan authorities	—
Percentage of calls where response within 14 minutes	83·2
Emergency calls: Response times: Non-metropolitan authorities	—
Percentage of calls where response within 20 minutes	94·8

Before 1991-92, ambulance services in England were categorised as metropolitan and non-metropolitan. Figures were collected for the number of emergency ambulances arriving within 14 and 20 minutes repsectively.

Appointment System

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of NHS out-patients were given specific appointment times in 1991-92; and what proportion were seen within 30 minutes of their appointment time.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not collected centrally.

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the country of residence of women listed as overseas residents in the abortion statistics for the last year in which the information is available.

Mr. Sackville: In the publication of abortion statistics, a distinction is made between those abortions carried out on women resident in England and Wales and those on women not resident in England and Wales. Of the latter, the statistics are classified by three main areas of residence: British Isles, other European, and rest of the world. Within each of these three categories, individual countries of residence are shown where the number of abortions to residents of that country exceeds 24. Countries listed in this way are shown in table 25 of the publication "Abortion Statistics 1990", a copy of which is held in the library.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the average charge approved by his Department for a non-NHS abortion in 1990.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available in the form requested. The Department approves scales of charges.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what dates in the year preceding 15 November 1991, the South Manchester abortion clinic, Stockport was inspected by her Department; and if she will list the recommendations that were made regarding the clinic in the report produced by her inspectors.

Mr. Sackville: The South Manchester private clinic was inspected by the Department's officers on 13 March 1991, and 30 October 1991. The contents of inspection reports are not made public as they contain information which relates or could be related to individual patients.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what scale of charges she has approved for an abortion conducted in a private clinic through the use of RU486.

Mr. Sackville: Information required from places seeking approval under section 1(3) of the Abortion Act 1967 is supplied to the Department on an "in confidence" basis.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what regulations regarding care of the mother she has made concerning abortions conducted with RU486.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson), on 3 July at column 746.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made by her Department in investigating the state of the South Manchester Abortion Clinic Stockport, following the presentation of the report by Stockport health authority dated 15 November 1991 by the hon. Members for Congleton (Mrs. Winterton) and for Liverpool, Mossley Hill to her predecessor.

Mr. Sackville: Following the discovery of deficiencies contravening the requirements of the Registered Homes Act 1984, Stockport health authority set the owners of the South Manchester private clinic a strict timetable for completion of remedial work. All necessary work was completed on time.

Dentistry

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of the average waiting time for a course of dental treatment which requires prior approval because it costs more than £200.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are discussing with the Dental Practice Board the mechanisms for dealing with the likely increased numbers of applications.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether her estimate of the average dentists' annual income took account of the implications of delayed treatment plans and the other implications of the reduction in the figure for costs of treatment requiring prior approval.

Dr. Mawhinney: Yes.

Drug Dispensing

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she proposes to publish her consultation paper on the introduction of original pack dispensing; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are considering the options and will make an announcement in due course.

DEFENCE

Royal Maritime Auxiliary Service Ships

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the lifting equipment recently removed from RMAS Goosander was last subjected to a safety test; and how frequently it has undergone such safety checks in the past.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No lifting equipment has been removed recently from RMAS Goosander. All RMAS vessels, including salvage and mooring craft, are bound by the Health and Safety Act, etc. Act 1974 and the Docks Regulations 1988.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the accidents reported or recorded on board RMAS Goosander while it was stationed at Greenock.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: During 1991, the last year for which complete statistics are available, RMAS Goosander was based at Rosyth and Greenock. During that period, two reportable accidents resulting in minor injuries occurred. There has been one fatal accident in 1992.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the accidents reported or recorded on board RMAS Pochard whilst stationed at Greenock.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: During 1991, the last year for which complete statistics are available, there were two reportable accidents on board RMAS Pochard resulting in minor injuries.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the reasons RMAS Pochard was taken out of service at Greenock and RMAS Goosander deployed in its place.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In 1991, the RMAS fleet of seven salvage and mooring vessels was reduced to four. RMAS Pochard, not being in such good material condition as her sister ship RMAS Goosander, was placed in reserve.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the annual rate of accidents on (a) RMAS Pochard, (b) RMAS Goosander and (c) the average for RMAS vessels.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: In 1991, the last year for which complete statistics are available, there were 94 reportable accidents for all 412 RMAS vessels and 11 shore bases. This includes the two reportable accidents for RMAS Goosander and the two for RMAS Pochard.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how often lifting equipment used on board RMAS vessels is required to undergo safety checks; and what steps he takes to ensure that such requirements are complied with.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Statutory safety checks are undertaken in accordance with Docks Regulations 1988. All vessels are regularly inspected to ensure that lifting equipment meets these regulations.

Jet Skis

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many jet skis the Royal Navy possesses.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: None.

Fisheries Protection

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the fishery protection services currently provided by Royal Navy vessels in the waters around Scotland and the financial arrangements in force.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Royal Navy provides one vessel from the fishery protection squadron for patrols in Scottish waters. The Royal Navy ship, together with the vessels of the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency, is responsible for monitoring compliance with UK and EC fishing regulations in Scottish waters. This task is carried out on behalf of the Scottish Fishery Protection Agency from which payment of approximately £1·3 million is received annually.

Aid, Bosnia

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to which expenditure category the cost of providing and transporting humanitarian aid items to Bosnia has been debited.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Financial responsibility for humanitarian aid relief to Bosnia lies with the Overseas Development Administration which will meet the additional costs that the MOD incurs providing service assistance.

Relocation

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the number of civil servants in his Department who could be relocated to provincial centres as part of the policy of devolving and decentralising Government Departments.

Mr. Aitken: The Ministry of Defence is already a well-dispersed Department. Currently, 87 per cent. of civilian staff are based outside London and 60 per cent. are outside London and the south-east. Since 1979, some 2,500 staff have been relocated from London and the south-east to sites in Glasgow, south Wales, Sutton Coldfield, Cheadle Hulme and Swindon, amongst others. A recent review of MOD headquarters, together with the planned collocation of the procurement executive in Bristol, will result in the relocation of further 6,000 to 7,000 posts from London by the mid-1990s, leaving only about 3 per cent. of MOD civilian staff in London.

Menwith Hill

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reason it has been decided to site the Thistle and Steeplebush 2 operations centres at Menwith Hill in underground bunkers hardened against airborne attack.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are neither underground nor hardened facilities at Menwith Hill station.

Questions on Contracts

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his practice to answer questions seeking the disclosure of the amount payable for contracts between his Department and (a) the Crown Estate, (b) the Duchy of Cornwall and (c) the Duchy of Lancaster.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has held with the United States of America on alternatives to the European fighter aircraft; and how many jobs in the aircraft-building industries he expects to be created or preserved in the United Kingdom as a consequence.

Mr. Aitken: In the light of Germany's decision not to proceed with production of the European fighter aircraft, the first priority is to consider the implications for the programme jointly with Spain and Italy. The Government hope that it will not be necessary to fall back on alternatives. However, before final decisions are taken on the production of EFA, we will, as a matter of course, examine all the alternatives to ensure that the Royal Air Force operational requirement is met in the most cost-effective way.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the estimated cost of the European fighter aircraft programme prior to the German withdrawal; what estimate he has made of the cost consequence of the Germany withdrawal; and how this is calculated.

Mr. Aitken: The United Kingdom's share of the four nation EFA programme is estimated at £11·7 billion. The German Government have said that they do not intend to proceed with production of EFA but will continue to honour their obligation to complete the development phase. We are now discussing with the other EFA partners —Italy and Spain—the implications of the German decision. The cost of any revised programme will depend on the arrangements eventually agreed.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what alternatives to the European fighter aircraft have been considered; and what are the direct cash implications.

Mr. Aitken: A range of possible alternatives has been considered. The US F22 would offer better performance than EFA in the air defence role, but would not meet the RAF's requirement for a ground attack capability and is estimated to be up to three times more expensive. The US F16 and Swedish Gripen are cheaper than EFA; but have a much inferior capability. The French Rafale and developments of the US F14, F15 and F18 also fall short of the RAF requirement in significant respects, while being no cheaper—and in some cases significantly more expensive.

Merchant Navy

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to complete the detailed review, which is being conducted by his Department, of the defence requirement for British merchant ships and seamen in times of crisis; if he will list the main individual areas of the overall subject he is reviewing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The review has now been completed and a statement was made to the house by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement on 9 July, Official Report, columns 567-68.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to make public the conclusions of the Oxburgh report.

Mr. Rifkind: The report of Professor Oxburgh's working group on the safety of United Kingdom nuclear weapons has been given careful consideration within the Ministry of Defence. On the basis of this consideration, I have now decided that the report should be published—subject only to a small number of excisions required to preserve national security. Publication will take place today: copies of the report are being placed in the Library of the House.

This report provides welcome corroboration of our confidence in the safety of our nuclear weapons, and handling and transport arrangements. The report's recommendations, which we have set about implementing, will help us ensure that the high safety standards confirmed by the review are maintained for the future. The decision to publish the report reflects both the Government's emphasis on avoiding unnecessary secrecy on issues of legitimate public interest, and our belief that the report will provide substantial reassurance to those concerned with nuclear safety issues.

Hon. Members will recall that in June 1990 the US house armed services committee commissioned a panel of experts under Dr. Sidney Drell to examine the safety of US nuclear weapons. The Drell report was published in December 1990. The safety of United Kingdom nuclear weapons has long been ensured both by internal audit and control procedures, and by the scrutiny of the MOD's permanently constituted independent advisory body, the nuclear weapon safety committee (NWSC)—a body which Drell recommended the US to replicate. Nonetheless, following publication of the Drell report, the Government decided to ask MOD's chief scientific adviser, Professor Sir Ronald Oxburgh, to lead a review of the safety of United Kingdom nuclear weapons. Professor Oxburgh was supported by a group of distinguished experts drawn form both inside and outside government. The working group's terms of reference were:

"To review, in the light of any relevant aspects of the report of the Drell Panel in the United States, the safety of the present and prospective UK nuclear armoury."

The review was therefore allowed to range freely over all aspects of United Kingdom nuclear weapon safety. Like the Drell team, the United Kingdom review addressed the overall organisational aspects of the management of safety, as well as the specifics of the current and future stockpile. Whole weapon systems were considered, including associated handling and transportation arrangements.

Reviewing the safety of the United Kingdom nuclear stockpile, the working group found that "procedures have been effective, well implemented and rigorously inspected".

The group was able to identify a number of areas whre improvements could be made in the overall management of safety. However, the group "found no indication that every practicable step to optimise weapon safety at the design stage had not been taken, and once in service to make weapon handling and storage as safe as possible".

On transport and weapon handling, the review concluded that the approach to safety and security was "sensible and practical". It noted the mechanical unreliability of the current weapon transport vehicles, which are due for replacement later this year; but in all other respects it described road transport arrangements as "a well-run operation". As to the weapon systems themselves, the group found no evidence to suggest that in-service or planned weapons required any significant redesign. Discussing the Trident system, the working group concluded that Trident safety levels would be "comparable to and in some ways higher than those associated with the Polaris system."

Therefore, provided that the full UK safety case and its assessment are completed, the group saw no reason to suggest that it should not be accepted into service.

The published report contains some 20 recommendations, all of which the Government have accepted. These recommendations cover a wide range of procedural and organisational issues, from the proposal that a formal design review of each in-service weapon system should be held every seven years, to the suggestion that a "champion" of nuclear weapon safety should be established as a central auditor of the various nuclear safety functions undertaken within the MOD. The Ministry is already at work on putting the recommendations into effect, including determining the exact fashion in which the proposal for a "champion" can best be implemented. Three further recommendations, which cannot be published for security reasons, have also been accepted.

The Government would like to record their thanks to Professor Oxburgh and the other members of his team for the thorough review they have undertaken. Their report confirms the Government's confidence in the standards adopted in maintaining the safety of our nuclear weapons. We welcome the group's recommendations to ensure these standards are continued in the future.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Attorney-General if he will make a statement on the achievements of his Department and his policies in helping small businesses over the last 12 months relative to the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

The Attorney-General: The Government continue to place a high priority on helping small businesses, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and through specific programmes of support and assistance. My Department, however, does not operate any speciffic programmes in this area.

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list any public appointments by his Department since 1987 which have involved people from organisations criticised in published reports by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors.

The Attorney-General: No such public appointments have been made.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Steen: To ask the Attorney-General how many staff his Department currently employs; what are the total personnel costs; and what were the staffing levels and personnel costs in 1970.

The Attorney-General: The current numbers of civil servants and total personnel costs are:

	Number	Cost (£ million)
Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers	24·0	0·90
Treasury Solicitor's Department	464·5	15·70
Crown Prosecution Service	5,978·0	[1]122·59
Serious Fraud Office	[2]135·0	4·10

[1] 1991-92.
[2] In addition 59 temporary staff are currently employed. The number varies with operational requirements.

Details of staffing levels and personnel costs in 1970 cannot be provided without incurring disproportionate expense.

Departmental Advisers

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list any advisers retained by his Department since 1987 who have been criticised in published reports by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors.

The Attorney-General: No such advisers have been retained.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

European Year of the Elderly

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has for his Department to celebrate in 1993, the European Year of the Elderly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 13 July 1992 at columns 430-31.

Crown Courts (Witnesses)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department in what percentage of Crown court centres an information point for witnesses has been established.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information in the form requested is not available. All Crown court centres have arrangements which enable court users to make inquiries when they attend court. This duty is undertaken by a particular official in some courts and in others, particularly the larger courts, by way of a separate reception desk at the entrance to the building. The design guide for courts includes specifications to ensure that counters at which enquiries can be made are easily visible and accessible to people when they enter a court building. In line with the citizens charter, we will continue to look for means of improving the ways in which necessary information can be supplied to all those who use the courts.

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list any public appointments by his Department since 1987 which have involved people from organisations criticised in published reports by DTI inspectors.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Information on the background of individual public appointments is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. My right hon. Friend the Lord Chancellor takes all relevant factors into account when considering appointments and he knows of no person appointed by him who has been criticised in published reports of DTI inspectors.

Departmental Advisers

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list any advisers retained by his Department since 1987 who have been criticised in published reports by DTI inspectors.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Information on the background of individual advisers retained by the LCD since 1987 is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. My right hon. Friend the Lord Chancellor knows of no person retained by his Department who has been criticised in published reports of DTI inspectors.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Steen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many staff his Department currently employs; what are the total personnel costs; and what were the staffing levels and personnel costs in 1970.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The number of staff employed in the Lord Chancellor's Department on the 1 July 1992 was 11,670 and the total personnel costs for the current financial year are £216 million. 1970 pre-dates the creation of the Department, but those areas for which the Lord Chancellor was then directly responsible employed 7,416 staff and the personnel costs were at that time £12·6 million.

Recycling

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to give a tax advantage to recycled products and a tax penalty upon the landfill of waste which could be recycled.

Sir John Cope: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor has no current plans to do so.

Physiotherapy

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what circumstances physiotherapy is excluded from the scope of tax relief on premiums for health care insurance for the elderly; and what other exclusions are made.

Mr. Dorrell: Premiums on private medical insurance contracts for the over-60s may qualify for tax relief provided they offer only some or all of the treatments and medical services specified in Treasury regulations. Physiotherapy is one of the services the cost of which can be indemnified. At present it must be associated either with hospital treatment or with surgical procedures performed by a general practitioner. Regulations laid before the House of Commons on 7 July will allow insurers to include physiotherapy in an eligible contract where it is associated with other forms of general practitioner treatment, including diagnosis.

Correspondence

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the Inland Revenue's published standards for replying to taxpayers' letters in 1991-92; and to what extend these standards were met in practice.

Mr. Dorrell: 1991-92 was a transitional year. The previous system for targeting post for tax and collection offices was expressed in terms of post worked and based on post over 14 days old at the year end. This system was internally focused and provided little useful information on the service being provided to the public. A new system based on turnaround times for correspondence, which is also designed to provide customers with better quality replies to their letters, was trialled in 1991-92. It came fully into operation in 1992-93. The target for tax and collection offices is to respond to all letters within 28 days. In at least 90 per cent. of cases, the aim is to deal with the letter within that time scale. In the remaining cases, the response will tell the customer when the letter will be dealt with.

Redundancy

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the average loss to the Exchequer in income tax, employee's national insurance contributions and reduced VAT payments and excise duties resulting from a redundant Ministry of Defence worker being unemployed for 12 months.

Mr. Dorrell: The effect on the Exchequer would depend on the income and expenditure of the particular workers concerned. It is not possible to provide a meaningful average.

Insurance

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether it remains the Government's policy that Departments and non-departmental public bodies should not normally insure commercially; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government have reviewed the question whether Departments and non-departmental public bodies should insure commercially. They have decided to retain the existing general rule that decisions whether to insure with commercial insurance companies should normally be decided on value-for-money grounds. Across the Government as a whole, the cost of paying premiums could be expected to exceed the value of claims met by insurance companies. Use of commercial insurance companies is, therefore, likely to be confined to cases where there are special reasons; for example where insurance in respect of equipment such as boilers is part of an inspection/maintenance services agreement, where large volumes of claims handling work are involved, where evidence of insurance may be needed to obtain prompt medical treatment for employees abroad and, in the case of NDPBs, where there is a legal requirement to insure.

Inheritance Tax (Exemptions)

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the procedure by which his Department informs the public of works of art where inheritance tax exemptions have been agreed for granting of public access; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 3 July 1992]: Public access to works of art granted exemption from inheritance tax may be provided in a number of ways. The publicity arrangements will differ depending on the way chosen.

The owner may arrange to exhibit the object in a house or room which is open to the public for an agreed number of days each year; appropriate publicity for the opening of the house would be required. The owner may lend the object to a public collection for display on a long-term basis: publicity would then be the responsibility of the curator of this collection.

Alternatively, the owner may arrange viewing by appointment provided he is also willing to lend the object on request to a public collection. All objects which can be viewed by appointment are publicised by means of an entry in the register of conditionally exempt property held by the National Art Library in the Victoria and Albert museum in London. Copies of this register are also available for consultation in the National Library of Scotland in Edinburgh, the National museum of Wales in Cardiff and the Ulster museum in Belfast. The Inland Revenue is currently carrying out a review, with the Department of National Heritage, of ways in which improvements can be made to the publicity given to this register as well as improvements to the quality of the entries and accessibility to the register. The conclusions of this review will be announced before the end of this year.

Customs Searches

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what statistics are kept on the (a) numbers, (b) sex and (c) racial origin of persons stripped by customs officers at Heathrow airport; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Cope [holding answer 9 July 1992]: Statistics on personal searches carried out each year by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise are published in the annual report of the commissioners. Information is collated on the type of search—rub-down, strip or intimate—goods found at the time, appeals against search, and complaints but not on the sex or racial origin of persons searched.

Trust Law

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what advice he has received from the Securities and Investments Board about conflicts between the Financial Services Act 1986 and trust law.

Mr. Nelson: I have looked into the recent allegations that the Investment Management Regulatory Organisation warned the Government that it could not do its job properly because of problems over the relationship between the Financial Services Act regime and trust law. Neither the Securities and Investments Board nor I have found any evidence to substantiate these allegations. IMRO and the SIB made representations to the DTI over a number of years about the legal uncertainty they believed was created by the interaction of the Financial Services Act and trust law. However, there was no suggestion that this uncertainty posed a threat to investor protection. The SIB's conclusion is that neither legal uncertainties created by the relationship between the Financial Services Act and trust law nor the existence of IMRO's special occupational pensions scheme regime made any material difference to IMRO's regulation of the Maxwell pension fund companies.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff his Department currently employs; what are the total personnel costs; and what were the staffing levels and personnel costs in 1970.

Mr. Nelson: The average staff in post in 1991-92, the latest full year for which figures are available, was 3,192. Total pay cost were £63·1 million. In 1970 HM Treasury employed 720 full-time staff. The figure for pay costs are not available as they were not recorded separately at that time. The staff figures for 1970 and 1991-92 are not comparable due to machinery of government and other changes.

DTI Inspections

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will list any public appointments by his Department since 1987 which have involved people from organisations criticised in published reports by DTI inspectors;

(2) if he will list any advisers retained by his Department since 1987 who have been criticised in published reports by DTI inspectors.

Mr. Nelson: The information is not held centrally in the form requested. My Department takes all relevant factors into account when considering such appointments.

Bankers (Code of Practice)

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to monitor the implementation of the British Bankers Association—BBA—code of practice.

Mr. Nelson: It is for the review committee that was established under the independent chairmanship of Sir George Blunden to monitor the implementation of the banks and building societies code of banking practice. The committee reported to the BBA in May that all major retail United Kingdom banks had agreed to adhere to the code but it was concerned that a number of smaller, mainly overseas, banks which may be conducting retail business had not adopted the code. My officials are kept informed on these and other matters through regular informal contacts with the British Bankers Association.

Bank of Credit and Commerce International

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 9 July, how much money has so far been paid to ex-depositors of BCCI under the deposit protection scheme.

Mr. Nelson: I understand that up to close of business on 10 July 1992 payments have been made by the Deposit Protection Board to some 4,000 depositors of BCCI, involving total protection payments of some £22 million.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Green Minister

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will outline the priorities for future action of the green Minister in his Department (a) over the next year and (b) over this Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert Jackson: Over the next and subsequent years as green Minister for the Office of Public Service and Science, OPSS, I will have responsibility for seeing that environmental concerns are taken into account where appropriate in the policies and work of the Department. I will also be responsible for publicising environmental initiatives. The OPSS is committed to reducing its direct and indirect consumption of non-renewable resources by, for example, improving energy efficiency wherever practicable; considering the purchase of environmentally friendly products where available; minimising pollution; and adopting environmental performance as an integral part of internal audits.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the achievements of his Department and his policies in helping small businesses over the last 12 months relative to the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government continue to place a high priority on helping small businesses, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and through specific programmes of support and assistance. My Department is responsible for ensuring that the principles of the citizens charter and other public service reform initiatives are implemented. These are designed to improve the standards of service that Government Departments and other public sector organisations provide to their customers, including the owners of small businesses.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many staff his Department currently employs; what are the total personnel costs; and what were the staffing levels and personnel costs in 1970.

Mr. Jackson: The number of staff currently in my Department, excluding the agencies, is 542. The annual estimated total staff costs are £14·5 million. As my Department did not exist in its present form in 1970, it is not possible to provide any comparative staffing levels and staff costs.

Departmental Advisers

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list any advisers retained by his Department or its predecessor offices since 1987 who have been criticised in published reports by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors.

Mr. Waldegrave: None.

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list any public appointments by his Department or its predecessor offices since 1987 which have involved people from organisations criticised in published reports by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information is not held centrally in the form requested. My Department takes all relevant factors into account when considering such appointments.

Asteroid Survey

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the work of the Anglo-Australian near-Earth survey on asteroids.

Mr. Robert Jackson: I am replying as the Anglo-Australian near-Earth survey on asteroids is a civil, rather than a defence, research project.

The aim of the survey, which is being carried out at the Anglo-Australian observatory at Siding Spring, Australia, is to identify any asteroids which could possibly strike the Earth. The survey is supported by Australian Research Council funds and uses photographs from the United Kingdom Schmidt telescope there.

In the two years that the project has been under way, no asteroids posing any significant threat have been discovered.

HOME DEPARTMENT

European Year of the Elderly

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for his Department to celebrate in 1993 the European Year of the Elderly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 13 July at column 430.

Carl Bridgewater Murder Convictions

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he intends to pursue regarding the completed Merseyside police report into the Carl Bridgewater murder convictions.

Mr. Jack: The report from the Merseyside police is still awaited. Once it has been received my right hon. and learned Friend will decide as soon as possible whether any action on his part is appropriate in this case.

Contracting-out Procedures

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the extent and nature of proposed openness in relation to contracting-out procedures in his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: It has been and will continue to be the Home Office's practice to ensure fair and open competition in public procurement. My Department follows the advice given in administrative circulars issued by the central unit on purchasing in Her Majesty's Treasury. These incorporate best practice drawn from existing EC directives which in turn replicate United Kingdom best practice.

Procurement practice is however necessarily constrained by issues of commercial and contractual confidentiality.

Firearms

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what statutory or other definitions of blank ammunition are used by him in discharging his responsibilities for the regulation of firearms.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Blank cartridges of more than one inch in diameter are subject to certificate control under section 1 of the Firearms Act 1968. Blank ammunition is not defined in the Firearms Acts 1968 to 1992, but is generally understood to be ammunition which contains no projectile.

Speed Cameras

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police forces are currently co-operating with speed cameras.

Mr. Charles Wardle: A recent survey by the Association of Chief Police Officers' traffic committee indicated that 18 forces in England and Wales were actively considering acquiring speed cameras or traffic light cameras or both and that in addition three police forces expected to be equipped with speed cameras from 1 July.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average cost of installation for a speed-detecting camera and related computing equipment.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The costs vary with the type of equipment chosen. The cost for a radar speed camera is about £24,600. The related computing equipment for processing the information from the cameras costs about £5,000 to £7,000.

Prisons

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all the prisons in England, giving the number of prisoners they were designed to hold and how many prisoners they currently hold.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The table shows the certified normal accommodation—CNA—and the number of prisoners for each establishment in England on 3 July 1992.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what latest estimate he has made of the average cost of building a new prison; and if he will give the approximate number of prisoners a prison costing this amount is designed to hold.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The cost of building a new prison varies depending on the type of prisoners it is to hold, its location, the ground conditions, the level of security required and other factors. The current estimated average cost of a new local prison for 600 prisoners is about £75 million, but in any particular case the actual cost will depend on the outcome of a competitive tendering exercise.

Wolds Prison

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the contract struck between Group 4 and the French-owned private medical firm AMI for the provision of health care at Wolds prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. This is a matter for Group 4.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the prison service charges Group 4 to keep inmates from Wolds prison in custody and to provide them with food when they are delivered to Crown court.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The prison service has responsibility for guarding and feeding prisoners at the Crown court. No question of charging arises.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether Group 4 will meet the cost of damage caused by inmates as a result of the disturbance at Wolds prison on 27 June.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Yes.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to hold an inquiry into the most recent disturbance at Wolds prison; and when he expects the results to be published.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 8 July, at column 199.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons Group 4 staff delivered two sick prisoners from Wolds prison to Doncaster crown court on 29 June.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Only one prisoner from Wolds was taken ill at Doncaster Crown court on 29 June. He had been seen by medical staff at the prison for treatment to a cut arm before leaving for court. He was prescribed antibiotic tablets and pronounced fit to travel. His illness at court was diagnosed as a reaction to the antibiotic tablets, which he was advised to stop taking.

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Group 4 employees were used to deal with the disturbance which took place at the Wolds prison between Saturday 27 June and Sunday 28 June; and how many of these employees were certified prisoner custody officers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Twenty-four staff were deployed and all were certified prisoner custody officers.

Bail

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were released on bail in England in (a) 1991, (b) 1981 and (c) 1971.

Mr. Jack: Information is not yet available for 1991, and was not published in 1971. The readily available information relates to England and Wales in 1990 and 1981 and is published in table 8.5 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1990".

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will set out the current advice given to magistrates about releasing on bail someone who has been arrested for a further offence while out on bail on a previous offence;

(2) if he will set out the current advice given to magistrates on releasing persons on bail;

(3) what advice is given to magistrates as to the number of times persons should be released on bail when they have already been arrested for previous offences and been released on bail for all of those offences.

Mr. Jack: Subject to the provisions of the Bail Act 1976, as amended, the decision whether to grant bail in a particular case is a matter for the judicial discretion of the court. Decisions are taken in the light of all the available information about the defendant and the alleged offence. Magistrates have been advised about the provisions of the Act via Home Office circulars sent to clerks to justices; copies of the circulars are available in the Library. In addition, all magistrates receive training under the auspices of the Lord Chancellor's Department and this covers the bail decision-taking process. The 1976 Act specifically provides that bail may be withheld if the court is satisfied that there are substantial grounds for believing that, if released on bail, the defendant would commit an offence.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons released on bail by Harwich magistrates court, have been arrested for another offence, released on bail again, arrested for another offence, released on bail again, and been arrested and bailed for four or more offences;

(2) how many persons released on bail by Harwich magistrates court, have been arrested for another offence, released on bail, and again arrested for a third offence;

(3) how many persons released on bail by Clacton magistrates court, have been arrested for another offence, released on bail again, and arrested for a third offence;

(4) how many persons released on bail by Clacton magistrates court were arrested for another offence while still on bail in 1991, 1981 and 1971;

(5) how many persons released on bail by Harwich magistrates court, were arrested for another offence while still on bail in 1991, 1981 and 1971;

(6) how many persons released on bail by Clacton magistrates court have been arrested for another offence, released on bail again, arrested for another offence, released on bail again, and been arrested and bailed for four or more offences.

Mr. Jack: The information is available only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of the State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received about the situation in which persons on bail are arrested for a further offence and are released on bail again; and what reply he has made.

Mr. Jack: My right hon. and learned Friend has noted the publicly expressed concern of the Association of Chief Police Officers about offending on bail. He has received representations on the subject from a Lincolnshire county councillor and from nine hon. Members, five of whom wrote after the councillor's approach to them. In addition, it has been referred to in a number of letters which have been concerned with crime more generally. Replies to these representations have acknowledged the strength of the concerns being expressed and have referred to the various steps that either have been taken or are being taken to reduce the risk of offending on bail.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what current plans he has to review the situation under which persons released on bail are arrested for a further offence while on bail; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: As part of a wider programme of work to tackle the problem of offending on bail, my Department has convened a group which is widely representative of the different organisations and agencies involved in the criminal justice system. This group is currently reviewing the bail decision taking process. In a separate forum, concerns about the arrangements for police bail are also being examined.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons were arrested for another offence while on bail (a) two, (b) three and (c) four or more previous offences in (i) a 1991, (ii) 1981 and (iii) 1971, in England;

(2) how many persons were re-arrested for another offence while on bail in (a) 1991, (b) 1981 and (c) 1971, in England.

Mr. Jack: The information is not collected centrally. In February this year, the Home Office published a survey of research into offending on bail—research and planning unit paper 65—a copy of which is available in the Library.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the number of reported crimes in (a) Harwich and (b) Clacton for each of the last 20 years;

(2) if he will list the number of reported crimes in Essex in each year for the last 20 years.

Mr. Jack: Information on the number of recorded offences in the Essex police force area are published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales". The latest figures for 1991 are published in Home Office statistical bulletin 2/92. Copies of all these publications are available in the Library.

Separate figures for Harwich and Clacton are not collected centrally.

Prison Population

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the prison population in (a) England and (b) Wales, at the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On Thursday 9 July the prison population in England was 44,831 and in Wales, 920. These figures do not include the 1,367 prisoners being held in police cells on that day.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners on remand exercised their right to vote in the last general election.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No record was kept by the Prison Service of the number of prisoners who voted in the last general election.

Prison Mother and Baby Units

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many places are currently available in mother and baby units in prisons.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are 38 places currently available in prison mother and baby units.

Police Cells

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were held in police cells in each of the police forces in England and Wales on the last convenient date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The position on 9 July was as follows:

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much his Department paid each police force for holding people in police cells in 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The amounts paid to each police force holding prisoners in police cells during 1990 and 1991 are shown in the table.

Camera Technology

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the Government's estimate of the potential of new camera technology to reduce road accidents.

Mr. Charles Wardle: It is too early to evaluate from road accident statistics the contribution to any reduction that may be made by the new camera technology. But inappropriate speed is a factor in about one third of all fatal road traffic accidents and 13 per cent. of injury accidents at junctions in urban areas are associated with jumping red traffic lights. The new camera technology can be expected to have a beneficial effect in both of these areas.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he expects all police authorities to be co-operating in speed camera technology;

(2) what steps he is taking to encourage the use of speed cameras on roads.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The decision to equip police forces with speed camera equipment rests with the chief officers and their police authorities. We will be monitoring that position and ensuring that the effectiveness of the equipment is known to chief officers.

Wratness Mine Depot

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department at what price the Wratness former Royal Naval mine depot was sold earlier this year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Negotiations are still in progress with a prospective purchaser of this site.

Armley Prison

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were held under rule 43 (GOAD and own protection) in Armley prison, Leeds during May.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A total of 216 prisoners were held under prison rule 43 at Her Majesty's prison Leeds during May. Of these, 209 were held for their own protection and seven were for the maintenance of good order or discipline.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether mentally ill people are held in solitary confinement in Armley prison, Leeds.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No prisoners in England or Wales are kept in solitary confinement. This is a type of punishment designed to deprive a prisoner of all human contact and is not available under the prison rules. At HM prison Armley, Leeds all mentally ill inmates are held in the health care centre in single rooms or on an open ward. Those allocated a single room spend the normal daytime hours in association with other inmates.

Air Guns

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to increase the regulation and control of the ownership or use of air guns.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Coventry, North-East (Mr. Ainsworth) on 22 May 1992, at column 312.

Pregnant Prisoners

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners at Holloway were pregnant on the last date for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 9 July there were 25 pregnant women detained in Holloway.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were pregnant on the last date for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A survey on 10 July 1992 indicated that 52 prisoners in establishments in England and Wales were known by health care staff to be pregnant.

Speeding Offences

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many speeding offences there were in 1991.

Mr. Jack: Provisional figures for 1990 show that, in England and Wales, 633,828 alleged speeding offences were dealt with by the police. These comprise 12,285 written warnings, 448,380 fixed penalty notices and 173,163 court proceedings. Statistics for 1991 are not yet available.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what efforts are made to ensure that remand prisoners may exercise their right to vote.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Only unconvicted prisoners, including civil prisoners and fine defaulters, who are at least 18 years of age and who are registered as electors can vote, by means of a postal vote. An instruction to prison service establishments includes guidance on prisoners' eligibility to vote, and on handling applications for postal votes from prisoners. Consideration is now being given to supplementing this with a reference in the prisoners' information pack, which is given to prisoners on reception into prison, about the right of unconvicted prisoners to vote.

Custodial Sentences

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advice is given to magistrates and judges about the extent to which they should have regard to the number of places in the prison system when considering whether to impose a custodial sentence.

Mr. Jack: No such advice has been issued.

Women Prisoners

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications are outstanding from women prisoners who seek a place for their children in mother and baby units.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Applications for a place on a mother and baby unit are considered by a multi-disciplinary team at a case conference. There are seven very recent applications which are awaiting consideration.

Animal Research

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's role in the Centre for the Validation of Alternative Methods in relation to animal research.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The European Centre for the Validation of Alternative Methods is a new body established by the European Commission, and is concerned with the validation of alternatives to the use of animals in research.

The United Kingdom remains committed to the search for ways of refining, reducing or replacing the use of living animals in scientific procedures. It stands ready to play a full part in the work of the centre.

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list any public appointments by his Department since 1987 which have involved people from organisations criticised in published reports by DTI inspectors;

(2) if he will list any advisers retained by his Department since 1987 who have been criticised in published reports by DTI inspectors.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: From the information available to us, we have no knowledge of any appointments made by my Department of persons criticised by DTI inspectors.

Identity Cards

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further consideration has been given to the introduction of identity cards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Ravensbourne (Sir J. Hunt) on 18 June, at column 1022.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff his Department currently employs; what are the total personnel costs; and what were the staffing levels and personnel costs in 1970.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Home Office currently employs 46,303 non-industrial staff and 3,050 industrial staff. This includes those staff working in agencies. The forecast staffing costs for the year 1992-93 are £951,688,000.

In January 1970 the Home Office employed 16,889 non-industrial staff and 3,975 industrials. These figures are taken from the 1970 publication of "Civil Service Statistics". Figures are not available for staffing costs.

Disabled Employees

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner) of 30 June, Official Report, column 517, how many and what proportion of his Department's employees were registered disabled in 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In 1989, 143 members of staff in the Home Office were registered disabled, representing 0·3 per cent. of all staff. In 1990, the number was 147·5, again approximately 0·3 per cent. No record has been kept of staff with disabilities who have chosen not to register.

Mass Trespass

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to amend section 39 of the Public Order Act 1986 to deal with the criminal offence of mass trespass.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to his question on 10 July 1992, at column 372.

Primary Purpose Rules

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make changes in the primary purpose rules following the recent judgment of the European Court.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I see no reason to do so.

Primates

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to improve the standards set out in the code of practice for the housing and care of animals used in scientific procedures with regard to primates.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Home Office code of practice for the housing and care of animals used in scientific procedures is based closely on guidelines drawn up jointly by the Royal Society and the Universities Federation for Animal Welfare. The code of practice contains a section on the special considerations which should be taken into account in the housing and care of primates. We have no plans to amend the code.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of remand prisoners brought to trial since 30 September 1991 (a) in magistrates courts had spent more than 56 days in custody since their first appearance and (b) in the Crown court had spent more than 70 days from first appearance before magistrates to committal in the Crown court.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not readily available centrally. According to the February 1992 time interval survey of magistrates courts, 34 per cent. of custodial remands for indictable offences—that is, no bail —took more than 56 days from first listing to completion at the magistrates courts.

Criminal Justice Act 1991

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish information pursuant to section 95 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Under section 95 of the Criminal Justice Act 1991 I am required to publish each year information to enable those engaged in the administration of criminal justice to become aware of the financial implications of their decisions, and to assist them in the performance of their duty to avoid discrimination on the grounds of race, sex or any other improper ground.

To fulfil this requirement, I propose to publish in mid-September information on race and gender. In mid-October I propose to publish a third set of information on finance. In all three cases this material will be widely disseminated among the judiciary, stipendiary and lay benches and lawyers; and to members of the Crown prosecution service and magistrates courts, police and probation services.

I shall place copies of each of these publications in the Library.

The publications this year will provide broad brush information in respect of race, gender and finance issues. As required by section 95 of the Act, I will publish further material on these subjects on an annual basis. In the light of comments from the recipients of this year's information, and of improvements in our own monitoring arrangements, future publications will add more detail.

Naturalisation

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average length of time taken to process applications for (a) registration and (b) naturalisation; and how long those applying in both of those categories in December 1991 can expect to wait.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 13 July 1992]: The average time taken in June 1992 to grant applications for registration and naturalisation was 15 and 27 months respectively.

Those who applied in December 1991 for registration can expect on average to wait nine months for a decision and for naturalisation between 15 and 18 months.

Immigration

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many nationals of (a) Jamaica, (b) Turkey, (c) Morocco, (d) the USA, (e) Australia, (f) Malaysia, (g) Hong Kong, (h) Guyana, (i) Trinidad, (j) Colombia and (k) Algeria were (i) granted and (ii) refused permission to enter the United Kingdom at ports of entry in each quarter since January 1991 to the nearest available date.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 13 July 1992]: The information requested is given in the table.

Returning Residents

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people, by nationality, have requested entry to the United Kingdom as returning residents, in each quarter since May 1990; how many have been (a) readmitted as such, (b) been readmitted for a limited period and (c) been refused entry to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 6 July 1992]: The available information is given in the tables. Information is not available on persons seeking admission as returning residents who were found not to satisfy the relevant requirements of the immigration rules but who were admitted for a limited period under another category.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Select Committees

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, when the firm responsible for preparing verbatim reports of minutes of evidence taken before Select Committees was appointed; what opportunities have been given to other firms to provide this service; and on what basis the charges payable to the firm are determined.

Mr. Beith: The appointment of a shorthand writer to the Houses of Parliament is made by the Clerk of the Parliaments and the Clerk of the House of Commons pursuant to Resolutions agreed to by both Houses in 1813. The present incumbent, like her predecessors since that time, is the senior partner in the firm of W. B. Gurney and Sons. The structure of charges for parliamentary work is renegotiated periodically: such a review took place in 1989, and a further one, initiated by the Clerks of both Houses, is currently in progress. These reviews take into account the likely cost and efficiency of alternative suppliers of this service. Interim adjustments to the level of charges are made by reference to the fees negotiated by the Institute of Shortland Writers with Her Majesty's Treasury for Government work.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the achievements of his Department and his policies in helping small businesses over the last 12 months relative to the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Key: The Department of National Heritage was formed in April 1992 and covers the arts, formerly the responsibility of the Office of Arts and Libraries; broadcasting, formerly the responsibility of the Home Office; film, formerly the responsibility of the Department of Trade and Industry; tourism, formerly the responsibility of the Department of Employment; heritage, formerly the responsibility of the Department of the Environment; and sport, formerly the responsibility of the Department of Education and Science. There are, therefore, no statistics covering the Department of National Heritage for the period in question.

The Government continue to place a high priority on helping small businesses, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and through specific programes of support and assistance. Although the Department of National Heritage has no programmes aimed specifically at small businesses, the Department is fully committed to the Government's deregulation initiative and will seek to ensure that regulatory burdens within its areas of responsibility are kept to the minimum that is necessary.

Radio 3

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will raise with the chairman of the BBC his proposals for improving the reception quality of Radio 3 in the area of North Wiltshire.

Mr. Key: I will draw my hon. Friend's concern to the attention of the chairman of the BBC.

The BBC has an extensive programme for building new FM radio transmitters to extend the coverage of its national services. It has recently introduced new transmitters for Wiltshire listeners at Calne, Chippenham and Westwood and aims to bring a transmitter at Marlborough on the air early next year. But the rate and order in which the BBC proceeds with this programme is for the BBC to determine in the light of its other engineering priorities and competing demands upon its financial and technical resources.

Naze Tower

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what aspects of the Naze tower on the Naze at Walton-on-the-Naze, a listed building, he is responsible for.

Mr. Key: My right hon. and learned Friend's responsibilities in relation to listed buildings were outlined in a reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 19 May 1992, Official Report, column 110. A circular giving further details will be issued shortly.

Pitchford Hall

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) what discussions he has had with English Heritage with regard to Pitchford hall, Shrewsbury; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what action he has taken to save Pitchford hall, Shrewsbury for the nation;

(3) what discussions he has had with the National Heritage Memorial Fund with regard to Pitchford hall, Shrewsbury; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what representations he has had from the National Trust with regard to Pitchford hall, Shrewsbury; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key [holding answer 13 July 1992]: Neither my right hon. and learned Friend nor I have had any discussions with either English Heritage or the National Heritage Memorial Fund—NHMF—or representations from the National Trust specifically with regard to Pitchford hall, Shrewsbury. However, I am aware that the National Trust is in discussion with the NHMF about the substantial funds which would be needed to enable them to acquire and endow Pitchford hall, its contents and lands. It is for the trustees of the NHMF to decide on the merits of the proposal and whether they are able to offer assistance from the funds available to them.

South Yorkshire Arts

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has for encouraging the arts in South Yorkshire.

Mr. Key [holding answer 10 July 1992]: This year's allocation of central Government funding, through the Arts Council, to the Yorkshire and Humberside Arts Board is £4·5 million and represents a 13·9 per cent. increase over 1991-92.

The Government's urban programme has contributed to the cultural industries quarter in Sheffield, which is a model of urban regeneration. This has contributed to a lively arts scene, which includes the refurbished Lyceum theatre, the Crucible theatre and the Ruskin gallery.

Yorkshire and Humberside Arts is presently working with the local authority in Barnsley on the preparation of a Barnsley arts plan. Opera North's community outreach programme already has strong links with the Barnsley arts group and has undertaken several projects in the town.

EDUCATION

School Inspectors

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what formula will be used for the withdrawal of money from the standard spending assessment of local authorities to be allocated to Her Majesty's inspectorate for the inspection of schools under the terms of the Education (Schools) Act 1992.

Mr. Forth: The Government are considering the expenditure needs of local education authorities next year and are currently taking the views of the local authority associations on the range of factors bearing on local education authorities' spending, including the new arrangements for school inspection. We have estimated the funds to be transferred from local government finance for 1993-94 in respect of school inspections beginning in September 1993 at £19 million—1992-93 prices. Details of the local authority finance settlement for 1993-94, including education's share of total standard spending and individual authorities' standard spending assessments, will be announced in the autumn.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much money his Department has provided in its budget to raise awareness and advertise the new system of inspection of schools; and if he will list the actual expenditure items and any proposed expenditure.

Mr. Forth: Professor Sutherland will be responsible for the new inspection system from 1 September 1992. Budgeted expenditure in this financial year for which my Department is responsible up to that date is as follows:

National advertising campaign—£105,000;
Leaflets and related promotional material—£10,000.

The new system was announced in the citizens charter, and sample copies of the parents charter were sent to all schools in September 1991 at a cost of just under £2 million.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the achievements of his Department and his policies in helping small businesses over the last 12 months relative to the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Forman: The Government continue to place a high priority on helping small businesses through improvements in the business climate, deregulation, and specific programmes of support and assistance. My Department encourages small firms to tender for contracts; each contract also includes a requirement to pay sub-contractors promptly. In the first three months of 1992-93 the Department placed contracts with small firms amounting to 39 per cent. of total departmental expenditure on goods and services, a slightly higher percentage than for a comparable period in 1991-92.

Training Grants

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 23 June, Official Report, column 126, if he will list (a) the local education authorities who have confirmed that their claims have been based on the correct criteria and (b) those authorities who have been unable to confirm that their claims have been made on the correct criteria.

Mr. Forth: Local education authorities in list A have indicated that their claims for grants for education support and training included only eligible expenditure they themselves incurred. Those in list B have not yet responded, or have indicated that claims may have included other expenditure. The Department is seeking replies or clarification from LEAs in list B. It has issued clear guidance to all LEAs, and has asked auditors to check that claims have been prepared on the correct basis.

School Administration

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has had about the administrative burden placed on head teachers (a) under current grant-maintained school arrangements and (b) under current local management of schools arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The feedback I have received suggests that head teachers welcome the greater flexibility which the new arrangements bring and the increased responsibilities they now have. Managing budgets should not place an unacceptable burden on head teachers' time.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the current initiatives and reforms being undertaken by grant-maintained schools for raising education standards; and what legal obstacles exist which would prevent non-grant-maintained schools from undertaking similar initiatives and reforms.

Mr. Forth: The National Curriculum and assessment provisions together with the new arrangements for school inspections are designed to raise standards in all maintained schools. GM schools enjoy greater flexibility to channel expenditure away from administration and into teaching. The Government believe that this, coupled with an increased sense of independence and ownership, gives GM school heads and governors additional opportunities to raise standards.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what figures he has for the average pupil-teacher ratio during 1991-92 for schools which had achieved grant-maintained status by 1 April 1991.

Mr. Forth: The figures requested by my hon. Friend are not yet available. We hope to be able to publish figures in the spring. Recently published figures show that, in January 1991, when 50 secondary schools were GM, there were 36,450 pupils and 2,385 full-time equivalent teachers at GM schools, which gives a pupil-teacher ratio of 15.3.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is (a) the total number of ballots held on grant-maintained status, (b) in how many the proportion of parents voting yes has been more than 50 per cent. of the number of parents eligible to vote, (c) in how many the margin between the percentage voting yes and that voting no has been 60:40 or closer and (d) how many of those in (b) and (c) have been approved for grant-maintained status.

Mr. Forth: The information requested by the hon. Member is as follows:

(a) There have been 504 ballots on grant-maintained status.

(b) In 200 of these the proportion of parents voting yes has been more than 50 per cent. of the number of parents eligible to vote.

(c) In 56 the margin between those voting yes and those voting no has been 60:40 or closer.

(d) 132 of the schools detailed at (b) and 44 of the schools detailed at (c) have been approved or are currently minded to approve.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many ballots on grant-maintained status have been conducted over or during a school holiday period; and how many ballots have been held during each school term since September 1988.

Mr. Forth: The dates of school holidays vary from institution to institution. The information requested is not therefore held centrally. However, out of a total of 504 ballots on GM status to date, five have closed in the month of August.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list (a) the number of schools in each education authority which have obtained grant-maintained status and (b) the number of such applications which he is still considering.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is as follows:

There are 39 applications still under consideration.

Music

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give an estimate of the number of school hours devoted to music in state schools and the total number of music teachers for each year since 1981; and if he will make a statement on the future of music teaching in state schools.

Mr. Forth: Information is not available in the form requested.

A primary school staffing survey was undertaken in 1987 and secondary school staffing surveys in 1984 and in 1988. These surveys indicated that there were 15,200 full-time teachers with a post A-level qualification in music in maintained nursery and primary schools in England in 1987. In maintained secondary schools in England, there were 9,300 music teachers in 1984, and 7,100 music teachers in 1988. In maintained primary schools in 1987, 4·8 per cent. of time in junior classes was devoted to music. In maintained secondary schools in England in 1988, the proportion of pupil periods devoted to music varied by year group as follows:

Year group	Percentage of pupil periods devoted to music
9	3·4
10	0·9
11	0·7
12-13	0·8

A further secondary schools staffing survey was undertaken in 1992. It is hoped to publish the findings early in 1993.

The introduction from autumn 1992 of statutory attainment targets and programmes of study for music will provide a rigorous and challenging framework for the teaching of music in maintained schools, within which aspirations and standards will be raised and the range of skills, knowledge and understanding widened.

European Year of the Elderly

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has for his Department to celebrate in 1993, the European Year of the Elderly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 13 July 1992, at columns 430-31.

Primary Schools (Funding)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what representations he has received over the funding arrangements for primary schools, in connection with developments in the curriculum and teaching methods; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations commenting on the report, "Curriculum Organisation and Classroom Practice in Primary Schools", and in particular on the issue raised in the report of the current disparity between levels of funding for pupils at the upper end of primary education and pupils at the lower end of secondary education.

This is a matter for local education authorities, which may themselves suggest amendments to the age-weighted allowances in their formulae for the distribution of resources under local management of schools. I am glad to say that some authorities are examining this question, and I would encourage more to do so.

Student Rents

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what are the average rents paid by students in Wales, both on and off campus.

Mr. Forman: Information about the average cost of student accommodation in university institutions in Wales is set out in the table. This information is taken from the results of a survey carried out by the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals based on data provided by individual institutions. Comparable information for other institutions in the higher education sector and institutions in the further education sector is not collected centrally.

Academic year 1991-92	Cost per week £ exclusive of all meals

School Buildings

Sir Malcolm Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many primary and secondary schools in England and Wales were built before (a) 1914, (b) 1939 and (c) 1960; and what estimate his Department has made of renovation costs to modernise such schools.

Mr. Forth: "A Study of School Building", a report by an interdepartmental group of the Department of Education and Science and the Welsh Office, assisted by local government officers using information from a school building survey of maintained schools, was published by HMSO in 1977 and gives the latest information on the age of the school building stock. On the basis of a 10 per cent. survey of primary and secondary schools in England and 10 per cent. of primary schools and 20 per cent. of secondary schools in Wales, there were in 1976 8,300 schools built before 1903, 10,200 schools built before 1918 and 12,600 schools built before 1946. A further 10,600 schools were built between 1946 and 1976, in which one third of the places were completed by 1960.

The survey of school buildings published by the Department in 1987, based upon a survey of one in 30 county and voluntary controlled primary and one in six secondary schools in England only, reported estimated national costs, at November 1986 prices, of about £2,000 million to bring buildings up to a defined standard for 1991 projected pupil numbers. Some of these costs will have been met from recurrent expenditure and from capital investment on county, controlled and aided schools of £3,300 million since the survey.

Student Grants

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is the value of a mandatory student grant for 1992-93; and what was the value in 1972-73 at current prices.

Mr. Forman: The basic mandatory grant for students living away from the parental home and studying outside London in the academic year 1992-93 will be £2,265. Students in those circumstances will be able to take out loans from the Student Loans Company of up to £715, making a total of £2,980. In 1972-73 the value of the corresponding mandatory grant was £2,723 at 1991-92 prices.

School Examination Results

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many responses were received to his Department's letter of 10 January consulting on the further implications of the parents charter; and how many of these responses were in favour of his Department analysing data and publishing performance tables in schools' comparative examination performance;

(2) to whom the work to analyse and produce comparative tables of school examination results has been contracted out;

(3) what estimate has been made of the cost of centrally managing the task of analysing and publishing comparative tables of school examination results; and what provision was made for this expenditure in the original estimate of his Department.

Mr. Forth: Ninety-five responses were received to the consultation letter on the phased implementation of parents charter proposals. The consultation letter did not propose that the Department should itself undertake the task of producing comparative tables of schools' examination performance; that decision was taken in the light of the consultation responses.

Information respecting departmental contracts is normally treated as commercial in confidence.

We estimate that some £650,000 will be required to compile, publish and distribute the comparative tables this year. The money will be found from within the Department's existing allocation.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984 have been taken into account in determining the method by which information will be obtained in order to produce comparative tables of school examination results;

(2) by what legal authority he will be given access to personal machine-readable data being held by examination boards of individual candidates' examination results in order to produce comparative tables of school examination results.

Mr. Forth: The terms under which both the Department for Education and the examining bodies are registered under the Data Protection Act allow for the examining bodies to pass examination results data to the Department for the purpose of calculating and publishing aggregate examination results, as has been done in recent years. The comparative tables themselves will consist of aggregated data only for each school.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how a late regrading of an individual's examination paper will be taken into account in the publication of comparative tables of school examination results;

(2) what account the comparative tables he intends to publish on school examination performance will take of the differential performance of boys and girls.

Mr. Forth: All examinations data relating to pupils registered at a particular school will be sent to that school in October for checking. Schools will therefore have an opportunity to notify the contractor preparing the tables of any changes to grades on appeal which are known by the time of the deadline for return of the information.

The comparative tables will not distinguish between the performance of boys and girls. Examinations data in school prospectuses will, however, continue to show results of boys and girls separately, alongside national averages.

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list any public appointments by his Department since 1987 which have involved people from organisations criticised in published reports by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors.

Mr. Forman: The information is not held centrally in the form requested. My Department takes all relevant factors into account when considering such appointments.

Assisted Places Scheme

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many people are employed on the management of the assisted places scheme.

Mr. Forth: A total of 7·7 full-time equivalent staff are directly engaged in the management of the assisted places scheme in the current financial year.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much has been spent on the assisted places scheme and for how many pupils for each year since 1989, in cash and constant prices.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is shown in the following table and relates to England only:

Year	Pupil numbers (Academic Year)	Cash cost (£ million)	In real terms[1] (£ million—constant 1991-92 prices
1989-90	27,008	56·5	64·4
1990-91	26,740	63·4	67·2
1991-92	27,641	78·9	78·9

[1] The real terms series has been derived on the basis of the GDP deflator assumptions published in the Budget with the most recent year as the price base.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the schools involved in the assisted places scheme, with (a) the total number of pupils on rolls and (b) the number of assisted pupils, and the percentage which (b) bears to (a) in each school for the latest year which figures are available.

Mr. Forth: The information is as follows. The latest year for which complete details are available is the academic year—AY—1990-91.

[1]Numbers of pupils on roll are rounded to the nearest 10 pupils.
[2]Numbers of Assisted Pupils at start of school year 1990-91.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list, for each year since 1989, the number of assisted places available, the number taken up and the percentage of those taken up which were free places.

Mr. Forth: The information is given in the following table:

School year	Places available	Places taken up	Percentage of free places
1989-90	33,280	27,008	31
1990-91	33,289	26,740	32
1991-92	33,296	27,641	35

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what was the average cost per pupil of an assisted place for each year since 1989.

Mr. Forth: The average cost of an assisted place in the academic year 1989-90 and the two following years was £2,364, £2,691 and £3,100 respectively.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has for placing the management of the assisted places scheme in private hands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Wrexham (Dr. Marek) on 1 July 1992, at column 570.

Residential Properties

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many residential properties in the London borough of Lewisham are owned by his Department; if he will publish a list of such residential properties which are currently empty, giving the type of accomodation available, the length of time each property has been vacant, and the intended future use.

Mr. Forman: None.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many staff his Department currently employs; what are the total personnel costs; and what were the staffing levels and personnel costs in 1970.

Mr. Forman: The Department currently employs 2,723 civil servants. This figure includes 385 Her Majesty's inspectors of whom the majority together with their support staff will transfer to the office of Her Majesty's chief inspector—OHMCI—which is to be constituted as a separate non-ministerial department from 1 September. The figure also includes 323 civil servants based in the Teachers Pensions Agency. The total net running costs for the DFE and OHMCI for 1992-93 are expected to be in the region of £103 million.

On 1 July 1970 the Department employed 3,195 civil servants. The total net running costs for 1969-70 were £6,549,000.

Departmental Advisers

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list any advisers retained by his Department since 1987 who have been criticised in published reports by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors.

Mr. Forman: None of the advisers retained by this Department has been criticised in reports by DTI inspectors published since 1982.

Schools Branch 4

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many staff are now employed in schools branch 4, division B; and what was the cost of this branch in 1990-91 and 1991-92 and the budgeted cost for 1992-93.

Mr. Forth: As of 13 July, there were 69 civil servants employed in schools branch 4 division B. The running costs of the division for the years in question is as follows:

1990-91 outturn	372,000
1991-92 outturn	706,000
1992-93 budget	1,375,000

Surplus School Places

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education for each year from 1986 what has been the number of surplus school places proposed to be removed as a result of local education authority reorganisation plans (a) submitted to the Secretary of State and (b) (i) approved by the Secretary of State and (ii) rejected by the Secretary of State as a consequence of a parallel proposal for grant-maintained status.

Mr. Forth: The information requested is as follows:

[1] These figures include proposals determined by LEAs.

To date, 43 proposals have been rejected where there was an associated grant-maintained application, but it is not possible to say without disproportionate cost how many places would have been removed.

Admission Limits, Birmingham

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the primary schools in Birmingham where his Department has increased the admission limit for September; if he will detail how many will have class sizes above 30 pupils as a result; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: From September 1992 all primary schools will be required to admit children up to their "standard number", a minimum admission number designed to reflect the capacity of the school. We are aware that certain primary schools in Birmingham will have higher admission numbers in 1992 than in 1991 as a result of this requirement, by virtue of the fact that proposals by Birmingham LEA to reduce the standard numbers for these schools have been rejected by my right hon. Friend. These schools are listed in the table.

The proposals to reduce the standard numbers at these schools were rejected in each case either because the school is already accommodating the total number of pupils implied by the existing standard number or because the standard number has been set on the basis of a simple assessment of the school's physical capacity. This assessment assumes that a maximum of 30 pupils can be accommodated in each standard size classroom with an appropriately smaller number in smaller rooms.

Actual class sizes reflect decisions about staffing levels by individual schools, taken in the light of the resources available to them. The average pupil teacher ratio in Birmingham in 1990-91 was 23·5:1, slightly higher than the national average. The total budget for education set by Birmingham LEA for 1992-93 is £52 million less than the total allowed for by the Government under the standard spending assessment mechanism.

Disabled Employees

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner) of 30 June 1992, Official Report, columns 452-53, how many and what proportion of his Department's employees were registered disabled in 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Forman: The number and percentage of the Department's full-time equivalent staff who were registered disabled on 1 June in 1989 and 1990 were:

	Number of RDPs	Per cent. of total staff
1989	66·0	2·6
1990	65·5	2·6

There were other staff in the Department with disabilities who chose not to register and are not therefore included in the figures.

Local Education Authorities

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list local education authorities in rank order of expenditure per pupil on secondary education for the last year for which figures are available, giving in each case (a) the number of (i) secondary and (ii) primary schools which have held ballots on grant-maintained status and (b) the number of (i) secondary and (ii) primary schools which have voted to apply for grant-maintained status.

Mr. Forth: The tables rank LEAs by school based spending per secondary pupil in 1989-90, the latest year for which information on actual spending is available. Table 1 lists the number of secondary and primary schools per LEA which have held ballots on grant-maintained status and table 2 lists the number which have voted for grant-maintained status.

[1] Net institutional expenditure covers spending on salaries and wages, recurrent premises costs, books and equipment, and certain other supplies and services. It excludes spending on LEA administration, home to school transport, school meals and financing costs of capital expenditure.
[2] Per pupil expenditure figures are derived from LEA's returns of their spending to the Department of the Environment and their pupil numbers to the Department for Education. Figures are for 1989-90, the latest year for which actual spending information is available.
[3] Figures include all ballots on grant-maintained status up to 13 July 1992.
[4] n/a indicates that a return was not received from the LEA.

University Staff (Pay Agreement)

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will ratify the 1992 pay agreement between the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals and the Association of University Teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forman: The proposal for a pay settlement for university academic staff, made by the parties to committee A of the negotiating machinery, will be considered at a meeting of committee B—which includes officials from my Department—on Thursday 16 July. It would not be appropriate for the Government to comment on the proposal in advance of that meeting.

Access Funds

Mr. John Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what resources will be available for the access funds in 1992-93.

Mr. Forman: A total of £26·2 million will be available for the access funds in Great Britain for the 1992-93 academic year.

My Department's share will be £23·37 million. This sum is being allocated between the three access funds; allocations for the 1991-92 academic year are shown in parenthesis:

	£ million	£ million
Undergraduate Fund	13·27	(13·00)
Postgraduate Fund	5·90	(5·84)
Further Education Fund	4·20	(4·17)

Visits

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many education establishments he, the Minister of State and the Parliamentary Under-Secretary, the hon. Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth), have visited since 9th April.

Mr. Patten: I, my noble Friend the Minister of State and the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth) have visited the following schools so far during our periods in office:

17 primary schools, including one middle school;

22 secondary schools, including three grant-maintained schools;

Two special schools;

Three CTCs; and

One sixth form college.

PRIME MINISTER

Construction Industry

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Prime Minister if he will transfer responsibility for the construction industry from the Department of the Environment to the Department of Trade and Industry.

The Prime Minister: No. The Department of the Environment is also responsible for housing and planning and for property holding. The interactions between all these responsibilities mean it makes sense to leave sponsorship of the construction industry where it is.

Earth Summit

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to ensure that the "Agenda 21" agreement at the Earth summit is given equal status in legal terms to the general agreement on tariffs and trade.

The Prime Minister: Governments agreed agenda 21 as a dynamic framework for action reflecting political commitment at the highest level. It is not, however, intended to be a legally binding document. My EC and G7 colleagues have endorsed my plan for ensuring that agenda 21 and the other Rio agreements are implemented effectively, including through the preparation of national reports for the UN Sustainable Development Commission.

Homelessness

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister what consideration he has given to establishing the ministerial interdepartmental committee to address the issue of homelessness.

The Prime Minister: I am satisfied that the present arrangements provide for appropriate interdepartmental discussions of homelessness as necessary.

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list any public appointments by his Department since 1987 which have involved people from organisations criticised in published reports by DTI inspectors.

The Prime Minister: The information is not held centrally in the form requested. My Department takes all relevant factors into account when considering such appointments.

Departmental Advisers

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list any advisers retained by his Department since 1987 who have been criticised in published reports by DTI inspectors.

The Prime Minister: None.

Mr. Chazanfer Ali

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his letter to the hon. Member for Bradford, West concerning Mr. Chazanfer Ali if he will give an assurance that Mr. Ali will be given every assistance to return to the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Any entry clearance application from Mr. Ali will be considered on its merits and in accordance with the immigration rules.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister what information he has received from the British post in Islamabad about Mr. Chazanfer Ali.

The Prime Minister: On 29 June the British High Commission in Islamabad made inquiries of the Pakistan Ministry of Foreign Affairs about Mr. Chazanfer Ali's circumstances. Once a substantive response has been received I will write to the hon. Member.

Babcock and Wilcox

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 29 June, Official Report, column 593, about the European Council in Lisbon what discussions he had with the Italian Prime Minister on the letter from Babcock and Wilcox.

The Prime Minister: I am pursuing the matter with the Italian Prime Minister. The sanctions imposed by the United Nations against Libya consist of a ban on air links and an embargo on trade in arms and in aircraft and aircraft components. There has been no suggestion that Italy is not applying those sanctions. I am aware of the concern expressed in the letter from Babcock that British companies risk losing trading opportunities in Libya. But we cannot allow the promise of commercial favours to deflect us from our determination to ensure that the Libyans comply in full with United Nations Security Council resolutions 731 and 748.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 14 July.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 14 July.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Convention for a Democratic South Africa

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what are the criteria which determine with which Convention for a Democratic South Africa participants he or his officials have contact;

(2) if he will list those CODESA participants with which he or his officials have had no contact; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for this;

(3) with which CODESA participants he or his officials have had contact since the beginning of the process.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: There are 19 bodies represented at CODESA. We have had contact with many of them informally in the margins of the negotiations. Our policy on formal contacts within South Africa remains unchanged.

European Year of the Elderly

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for his Department to celebrate in 1993, the European Year of the Elderly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 13 July, at columns 430-31.

Subsidiarity

Mr. Duncan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Government policy on the use of challenges before the European Court of Justice on measures taken by the European Commission or the Council of Ministers which in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government are contrary to the principle of subsidiarity, following the treaty of Maastricht.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The Lisbon European Council conclusions invited the Commission and the Council to undertake urgent work on the procedural and practical steps to implement the principle of subsidiarity. We hope that these steps will help to ensure that measures adopted by the Community in future will fully comply with the principle of subsidiarity. When the Maastricht treaty enters into force it will be open to any member state, or the Commission, to challenge a member state, or the Commission, to challenge a measure on the grounds that it violates article 3b.

The Government anticipate that the principle will have its intended effect upon the legislative process, but do not rule out challenges before the court if necessary.

Iraq (Hostages)

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment has been made by Her Majesty's Government of the psychological and economic effects upon the British citizens caught up in Kuwait and Iraq in August 1990 and subsequently held hostage by Iraq.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Following advertisements in the national press in October 1990, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has been gathering information on loss, damage, or injury, including mental pain and anguish, suffered by British nationals and companies as a direct result of Iraq's unlawful invasion and occupation of Kuwait. The first submission of British claims will be made to the United Nations compensation commission in early August. The Maudsley and Middlesex hospitals have provided special counselling facilities.

Nuclear Proliferation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new initiatives on nuclear proliferation in European Political Co-operation are planned for the United Kingdom presidency of the European Council.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Preventing nuclear proliferation is high among our foreign policy objectives. During our presidency of EPC—European Political Co-operation—we shall work with partners to extend and reinforce the nuclear non-proliferation regime, in particular by working for further accessions to the non-proliferation treaty—NPT—and an indefinite extension to the treaty at the 1995 extension conference; a strengthened International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards regime; and stricter supplier controls on nuclear material and technology.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what new initiatives are planned by (i) Her Majesty's Government and (ii) European political co-operation under the United Kingdom presidency of the European Council, in support of the declaration made at the Munich Group of Seven summit to combat nuclear proliferation and enhance safeguards on nuclear materials.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We welcome the prominence given to non-proliferation in the political declaration of the Munich summit. During our presidency of EPC we shall work with other EC member states and with Group of Seven members to extend and reinforce the nuclear non-proliferation regime, in particular by working for further accessions to the NPT and an indefinite extension to the treaty at the 1995 extension conference; a strengthened IAEA safeguards regime; and stricter supplier controls on nuclear material and technology.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which states agreed upon the common list of nuclear goods and nuclear-related dual-use goods to be controlled by member states, when exported, referred to in paragraph 15 of the conclusions of the presidency on the European Council in Lisbon; and how long ago European Political Co-operation began its comparison of national policies on arms exports.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The 12 member states of the European Community agreed the common list of nuclear goods and nuclear-related dual-use goods. European Political Co-operation began its work on comparing national policies on arms exports during the first half of 1991.

Drapchi Prison, Tibet

Mr. Merchant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received about ill-treatment of women in Drapchi prison, Tibet in March; and what representations he has made.

Mr. Goodlad: We have no independent corroboration of these disturbing reports, though British diplomats attempted to visit Drapchi prison in May. We take every opportunity to express to the Chinese our deep concern about human rights abuses in Tibet and indeed throughout China, most recently to the Chinese Vice-Foreign Minister in London last week.

Foreign Forces (Training)

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy not to provide training to foreign forces known to be in breach of international human rights.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We see the provision of military training as an opportunity to increase awareness of the importance of good government, democracy, self-discipline and respect for human rights. Governments sending students recognise this.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in achieving accession to the non-proliferation treaty and application of International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards to nuclear materials by each of the non-Russian republics and, in particular, Kazakhstan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Following extensive lobbying by a number of countries, including the United Kingdom, all of the republics of the former Soviet Union have now undertaken to accede to the NPT as non-nuclear weapons states. Ukraine, Kazakhstan and Belarus recently made a formal undertaking in signing the protocol to the strategic arms reduction talks. We have emphasised to them that it is important that they act on these commitments as soon as possible.

Lhasa

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about demonstrations in Lhasa, Tibet, since the beginning of May, including the number of persons detained and injured, respectively, on each occasion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Much of the information of this kind comes from the findings of organisations such as Amnesty International and the Tibet Information Network. Two British diplomats visited Tibet in May. They reported that demonstrations had occurred earlier that month but were unable to obtain details.

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list any public appointments by his Department since 1987 which have involved people from organisations criticised in published reports by DTI inspectors.

Mr. Goodlad: The information is not held centrally in the form requested and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Advisers

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list any advisers retained by his Department since 1987 who have been criticised in published reports by DTI inspectors.

Mr. Goodlad: The information is not held centrally in the form requested and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Disabled Employees

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner) of 29 June 1992, Official Report, column 409, how many and what proportion of his Department's employees were registered disabled in 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Goodlad: In 1989, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office employed 45 registered disabled persons: 25 in the diplomatic wing—0·48 per cent. of its work force—and 20 in the Overseas Development Administration—1·29 per cent. of its work force. The figure for 1990 was 46·5: 23 full-time and one part-time member of staff in the diplomatic wing—0·4 per cent. of its work force—and 23 in the ODA—1·47 per cent. of its work force.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those right hon. and hon. Members who have participated in the annual visit to United Nations headquarters in each of the past five years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The following right hon. and hon. Members have participated in the annual all-party visits to the United Nations in New York in the last five years:

1987:
Mr. Robert Boscawen (C)
Mrs. Virginia Bottomley (C)
Mr. Tim Smith (C)
Mr. Michael Jack (C)
Mr. Barry Jones (La)
Mr. Frank Haynes (La)
Mr. Charles Kennedy (SD)

1988:
Mr. David Lightbown (C)
Mr. Greg Knight (C)
Mr. Jacques Arnold (C)
Mr. Tim Rathbone (C)
Mr. Allen Mckay (La)
Mr. Jim Cousins (La)
Mr. Alex Carlile (SLD)

1989:
Mr. Alastair Goodlad (C)
Mr. Peter Viggers (C)
Mr. Alistair Burt (C)
Mr. Ian Gow (C)
Mr. John Battle (La)
Mr. Tony Banks (La)

Mr. Sydney Chapman (C)
Mr. Ian Taylor (C)
Mr. Jeremy Hanley (C)
Mr. Gwilym Jones (C)
Mr. Jeff Rooker (La)
Dr. Norman Godman (La)
Rev. Martin Smyth (UUP)

1991:
Mr. John M. Taylor (C)
Mr. Michael Irvine (C)
Mr. Barry Field (C)
Mr. Phillip Oppenheim
Mr. Don Dixon (La)
Mr. Frank Haynes (La)
Mr. Archie Kirkwood (Lib Dem)

India

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement concerning human rights in India.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 13 July 1992]: As I made clear to my hon. Friend the Member for Slough (Mr. Watts) on 1 July 1992, at column 587 there are a number of areas of concern and we have regularly raised these with the Indian Government.

Cameroon

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by his Department concerning democratic elections in Cameroon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 13 July 1992]: We have consistently made clear to the Government of the Cameroon our support for the introduction of a multi party democracy. As a result of constant pressure, President Biya agreed to multi-party national elections which took place in Cameroon on 1 March 1992, contested by 32 of the 48 registered opposition parties in Cameroon. Presidential elections are to be held in April 1993.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid and Human Rights

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy on the relationship between the provision of United Kingdom aid and the recipient country's human rights record.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Respect for human rights is a part of good government and therefore among the important factors which we take into account in providing aid.

UN Agencies

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list Overseas Development Administration contributions to United Nations agencies for the years 1979 to 1991 in real terms.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: Contributions at 1991 prices were as follows:

United Nations University Endowment Fund
United Nations Drug Control Pakistan
United Nations Fund for Volunteers
United Nations Conference on Trade and Development
United Nations Development Fund for Women
United Nations Centre for Human Settlements
United Nations Border Relief Operation
United Nations Education and Training Programme (South Africa)

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer by the President of the Board of Trade to the hon. Member for Altrincham and Sale (Sir F. Montgomery) of 24 June, Official Report, column 237, if he will make a statement on how (a) the recommendation of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the Commonwealth Development Corporation that its financial structure be changed and (b) the other recommendations, will affect his Department's quinquennial review of the Commonwealth Development Corporation.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: All the recommendations of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the Commonwealth Development Corporation will be considered as part of the quinquennial review.

Iraq

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how he intends to respond to the representations he has received from Save the Children concerning the situation in Iraq.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development has written to Save the Children on this matter. We deplore threats to the safety of United Nations personnel and other relief workers in Iraq, and my right hon. and noble Friend raised our concerns with the United Nations in New York last week. We will continue to monitor events in Baghdad and New York very closely. We support the United Nations in its efforts to negotiate a new memorandum of understanding.

Population Control

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 578, what steps he has taken to ensure that grants given to the International Planned Parenthood Federation and the United Nations Population Fund do not result in the encouragement of forced abortion or sterilisation in (a) China and (b) Tibet.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 13 July 1992]: Neither the UNFPA nor the IPPF nor the British Government support population activities in which there is any element of coercion of individuals to practise family planning, or to accept any particular type of contraception. The UNFPA and IPPF provide no support for forced abortion or sterilisation in China or Tibet. It is the established policy of both agencies that their programmes fully accord with the human rights principles set out in the world population plan of action, that "population policies should be consistent with internationally and nationally recognised human rights, and that all couples and individuals have the basic right to decide freely and responsibly the number and spacing of their children and to have the information, education and means to do so".

The ODA is an active member of UNFPA's governing council and participates fully in the IPPF's annual donors meeting. These fora enable donors to examine closely the policies and activities of both organisations. Through such bodies and regular contacts with UNFPA and IPPF officials, the ODA and other donors satisfy themselves that the UNFPA and IPPF continue to maintain the principles of the world population plan of action.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Investment Companies

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what representation has been made to the Government of the Irish Republic to protect future investors from Northern Ireland who invest in companies in the Irish Republic which have links with investment companies in jurisdictions outside the United Kingdom and the Irish Republic;

(2) what discussions have taken place with the authorities of the Irish Republic about International Investments Ltd. (Gibraltar);

(3) whether he will request the Government of the Irish Republic to investigate the International Investment Ltd. fraud.

Mr. Mates: No discussions have taken place with, or representations made to, the Government of the Irish Republic in respect of International Investments Limited. As I understand the position, this company was registered in Gibraltar and not in the United Kingdom and is now in liquidation. The liquidation is, therefore, a matter for the Gibraltar authorities and the responsibility for making representations to other Governments regarding International Investments Ltd. does not lie with Her Majesty's Government.

Prison Population

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the prison population in Northern Ireland at the latest available date.

Mr. Mates: The total prison population in Northern Ireland on 8 July 1992 was 1,834. This figure was compiled as follows:

HM prison, Belfast—511 prisoners
HM prison, Maghaberry—351 prisoners, including 42 females
HM prison, Magilligan—311 prisoners
HM prison, Maze—483 prisoners
HM young offenders centre—178 inmates including 28 on remand

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list any public appointments by his Department since 1987 which have involved people from organisations criticised in published reports by DTI inspectors.

Mr. Mates: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Departmental Advisers

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list any advisers retained by his Department since 1987 who have been criticised in published reports by DTI inspectors.

Mr. Mates: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

WALES

Special Needs

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications for placements have been made by people with special needs to each training and enterprise council in Wales in each year since the establishment of the councils; and how many have successfully received placements in each instance.

Sir Wyn Roberts: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to issue guidelines to local education authorities requiring them to issue specific statements for children with special educational needs.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Welsh Office circular 54/89 and its addendum issued in March 1992 give detailed guidance to local education authorities on the form and content of statements of special educational needs. These advise that, if an authority considers a statement to be warranted, it should specify in detail each of a child's needs and the appropriate provision to meet those needs.

The Government have announced their proposal to issue further guidance on the criteria to which authorities should have regard in considering whether to start assessment procedures which may, in the light of the information received, lead to a statement.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to issue guidelines requiring all training and enterprise councils in Wales to establish special needs advisory groups.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Training and enterprise councils in Wales have established a variety of mechanisms for consulting their local communities about special training needs. Training and enterprise councils are required to set out in their corporate and business plans how they will cater for people with special needs.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what improvements he will initiate to enhance access to schools by children who suffer disabilities.

Mr. David Hunt: Local education authorities are responsible for educational buildings, and for questions of access to them by disabled persons. Advice and guidance is available to authorities in Design No. 18 "Access for Disabled People to Educational Buildings" and in Building Bulletin 61 "Designing for Children with Special Educational Needs" issued by the Department for Education.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what initiatives he proposes to cater for special educational needs in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My right hon. Friend the Minister of State will be making an announcement very shortly.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he intends to introduce proposals for shortening the procedure in Wales for assessing special educational needs; what is the average cost of producing a statement of special educational needs in Wales; and what is the average length of time it takes to produce a statement of special educational needs in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The responsibility for carrying out assessments and preparing statements of special education needs rests with individual local education authorities. Information on the time taken on these processes and the associated costs is not available centrally; practice varies between authorities. The Government have announced proposals to ensure that these procedures are conducted within specific timescales, which will extend to Wales as well as England.

Dentistry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many salaried dentists there are in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The latest figures available, as at 30 September 1990, show that there were 292 salaried dentists employed by district health authorities in the hospital and community service.

There are no salaried dentists employed by family health service authorities in Wales at present.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what advisory criteria his Department issues to family health service authorities in Wales by which cross-infection rates in dental surgeries are measured in both absolute and selective terms.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None. The Department issues guidance on cross-infection control from time to time and I refer to the answer given to the hon. Gentleman on 10 July 1991, Official Report, column 388.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning NHS dental patients in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government are committed to maintaining a comprehensive NHS dental service. It is for family health services authorities, in consultation with district health authorities, to manage general dental services in their areas. Should a family health services authority experience difficulty in securing adequate NHS provision from independent contractors to meet the needs of local residents, it can apply to my Department for approval to employ salaried dentists.

Any unregistered patient seeking NHS dental treatment can contact the local family health services authority for advice and assistance. Community dental services also provide a safety net for those patients who are unable to obtain treatment under the general dental services.

Trainees

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of trainees currently on (a) youth training schemes and (b) employment training schemes in Wales; and, of these trainees, how many are in receipt of (i) communication services for deaf or blind people, (ii) essential taxi fare payments, (iii) adaptations to premises and equipment and (iv) loans of special equipment as part of their traineeships.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The number of trainees at 24 May 1992 on youth training schemes and employment training schemes in Wales was:

Training scheme	Number
Youth	15,906
Employment	9,585

Support for people with disabilities is provided as an integral part of the Government's training programmes. Separate figures are therefore not available on the numbers of people with disabilities in receipt of special assistance.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many sheltered training places are offered to trainees with special needs by each training and enterprise council in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Support for people with disabilities is provided as an integral part of the Government's training programmes.

The detailed information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to issue guidelines requiring all training and enterprise councils in Wales to offer further assessment programmes and pre-vocational training facilities to trainees with special needs.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Training and enterprise councils are under a contractual obligation to ensure that individual needs are assessed prior to entry to training programmes and that people receive training that is tailored to those needs. They are also under a specific obligation to ensure that suitable high-quality training shall be available for all trainees who are shown by assessment to have special training needs. Guidance has been issued to training and enterprise councils highlighting best practice in assessment and pre-vocational training. There are no plans to issue further guidelines at this stage.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total cost of providing (a) communication services for deaf or blind trainees, (b) essential taxi fare assistance, (c) adaptation of premises and equipment and (d) loans of special equipment for trainees on (i) youth training schemes and (ii) employment training schemes for each training and enterprise council in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: Support for people with disabilities is provided as an integral part of the Government's training programmes. Separate figures for the cost of such support is not held centrally.

General Medical Practitioners

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will ask general medical practitioners in Wales to seek to place their annual reports in the local public library.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The terms of service for doctors require GPs to provide family health services authorities (FHSAs) an annual report relating to the provision of personnel medical services. This is a confidential report to the FHSA which is not empowered to disclose its contents to any other person.

I see no merit in seeking an amendment to this arrangement which would, in any case, require to be negotiated with the representative body of the profession.

Caravan Sites

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to ensure that grant aid given to councils which have yet to fulfil obligations under the Caravan Sites Act 1968 are not reclaimed by his Department.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No, if the circumstances require recovery, then grant will be reclaimed.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what is the total cost to each district council in Wales of abortive attempts to locate gipsy sites within the council area during each of the last five years;

(2) what was the total cost incurred by West Glamorgan county council in the abortive attempt to locate a gipsy site at Velindre.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which district councils in Wales have yet to fulfil their obligations under the Caravan Sites Act 1968.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Section 6 of the Caravan Sites Act 1968 places a continuing obligation on county councils to determine the need for gipsy sites and so far as may be necessary to provide adequate accommodation for gipsies residing in or resorting to their area.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many district councils have been designated under the Caravan Sites Act 1968 concerning travellers.

Mr. David Hunt: One—Arfon borough council.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes to review the Caravan Sites Act 1968; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Brecon and Radnor (Mr. Evans) on 30 June, Official Report, column 498.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local authorities in Wales are considering designation matters in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not held centrally. No applications for designation under section 12 of the Caravan Sites Act 1968 are before me at this time.

Housing Development, Clwyd

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received from residents concerning a proposed housing development at Drury, Clwyd.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received representations from one resident regarding a proposed housing development on land at Drury new road, Drury.

Green Belts

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the need for green belts in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received letters from various organisations about the need for green belts in Wales.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the effectiveness or otherwise of green barriers as opposed to green belts as they might apply to Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: I am not aware of any monitoring or evaluation of the effectiveness or otherwise of green barriers as opposed to green belts. I have invited the Assembly of Welsh Counties, as part of its review of strategic planning guidance in Wales, to consider the potential contribution of green belts to the proper planning and development of Wales. When I receive its advice later this year, I will give it careful consideration.

Psychotherapy

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, further to his answer of 22 June, Official Report, column 68, if he will publish details of the numbers of staff allocated for the provision of psychotherapy in Gwynedd and their location.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There is no specified psychotherapy service available in Gwynedd. However, a number of experts within the various mental health disciplines are able to provide psychotherapy as part of the NHS's general psychiatric services in Gwynedd.

Valleys Initiative

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list all the projects which have been funded to date through the valleys initiative; how much funding has been provided in each case; and which projects have been brought to an end prematurely.

Mr. David Hunt: The detailed information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what monitoring procedures are used by his Department to ensure that money allocated to local authorities under the valleys initiative to fund local authority-led initiatives is actually spent on such initiatives; and if he will list the incidents where money has been allocated to local authority-led schemes under the valleys initiative but the local authority has later withdrawn from the scheme.

Mr. David Hunt: Funding for projects which contribute to the programme for the valleys is channelled to local authorities through various grant schemes, each of which is subject to monitoring arrangements. In some cases, funding has been switched from one project to another. The achievement of objectives is monitored at six-monthly intervals. Reports are published regularly, most recently on 19 February 1992.

Breast Feeding

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to provide additional ring-fenced allowances to midwives to help them attain set targets on numbers of breast-feeding mothers.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No, but it is our policy aim that pay arrangements for all NHS staff groups should become more flexible and more explicitly related to performance as measured in terms of deliverable objectives and quality of service to patients.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the current targets set by midwives in Wales for numbers of mothers undertaking breast feeding; and what financial support is currently granted by his Department to assist in the attainment of such targets.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I am aware of no targets set by midwives in Wales for numbers of mothers breast feeding. However, one the health gain targets of the "Protocol for Investment in Health Gain: Maternal and Early Child Health", published in August 1991 by the Welsh Office's NHS directorate, was that each district should reduce to 20 per cent. by 1997 the failure rate among women choosing to breast feed and to 5 per cent. by 2002.

The Government are committed to encouraging mothers to breastfeed. In the current financial year, the Welsh Office is giving a grant of £16,400 to fund a Welsh co-ordinator for the joint breast-feeding initiative. The aims of the initiative are to improve support for breast-feeding mothers and to stimulate a wish to continue breast feeding.

Tobacco

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the effects upon health of smoking and tobacco advertising.

Mr. David Hunt: I am very concerned about the damage that smoking can do. This has been reflected in the protocols for investment in health gain in the areas of cancers, cardiovascular disease and respiratory diseases and in the Health Promotion Authority for Wales' strategy documents which I have endorsed. I am determined that we should reach the targets proposed in these documents.

The Government have consistently taken the view that the best way to control the promotion and advertising of cigarettes is through a continuation of the successful and recently enhanced system of voluntary agreements between the Government and the tobacco industry. Although complex, the system is comprehensive in its coverage. It is designed to ensure that tobacco advertising is not aimed specifically at the young and, combined as it is with a total ban on television advertising of all tobacco products, the Government believe it is effective.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make it his policy to set a target for Wales of a 40 per cent. reduction in the number of people who smoke by the year 2000.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Health Promotion Authority for Wales has recently published targets for reductions in smoking in its document "The Agenda for 1992-94".

This includes a target reduction of 43 per cent. in adult women smokers—from 30 per cent. in 1985 to 17 per cent. by the year 2000—and a reduction of 43 per cent. in adult men smokers—from 35 per cent. in 1985 to 20 per cent. by the year 2000.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the cost to date of preparing the application for trust status by (a) Clwyd community and mental health services, (b) Glan Clwyd district general hospital and associated hospitals and (c) Wrexham Maelor hospital; and, in each case, who is meeting the cost of the application.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not held centrally, but the Department has made a financial contribution towards the costs incurred in the application process.

Health Authority Chairmen

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will name his nominee for the posts of chairmen of the Clwyd, Mid Glamorgan, South Glamorgan and West Glamorgan family health service authorities from 31 August together with the qualifications and experience of each candidate that is relevant to the post;

(2) if he will name his nominees for the posts of chairman of the East Dyfed, Gwynedd, Mid-Glamorgan and South Glamorgan health authorities from 31 July, together with the qualifications and experience of each candidate that is relevant to the post.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The names of individuals nominated for public appointment are private and confidential: the information requested cannot therefore be given. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State hopes to announce shortly the names of those who have accepted invitations to serve as chairmen of the eight authorities to which the hon. Gentleman refers.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 9 July, Official Report, column 328, if he will specify the form of the congratulation that he has bestowed on the chairman of the South Glamorgan health authority for the professionalism of presentation of waiting times policy; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Secretary of State applauded South Glamorgan's efforts to involve the public in eliminating its two-year waiting list at his meeting with chairmen on 7 July.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many staff his Department currently employs; what are the total personnel costs; and what were the staffing levels and personnel costs in 1970.

Mr. David Hunt: In 1991-92 the average number of staff employed by my Department was 2,399, at a total pay cost of some £40 million. In 1969-70 the average number of staff in post was 766: the total pay cost cannot be disaggregated from departmental running costs for this period.

The staff numbers are not directly comparable due to machinery of Government changes which have occurred in the intervening period.

Education White Paper

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to issue a White Paper on education in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Shortly.

Pupil Testing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the streamlined package of tests for seven-year-olds in schools in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: This year's national tests for seven-year-olds have recently been conducted in all schools in Wales. Results for individual pupils will be made available to parents as part of the pupil's annual school report. National aggregate data for each subject covered by the tests will be published in the autumn. As with the 1991 tests, this year's exercise will be fully evaluated by the School Examinations and Assessment Council.

Commonwealth Games

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 6 July, Official Report, column 8, if he will list (a) the 12 recommendations contained in the Sports Council for Wales report on the management and administration of the Welsh team in Auckland in 1990 which have not been implemented in full and (b) the three recommendations which have been implemented in full.

Mr. David Hunt: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 7 July, Official Report, column 136. This is a matter for the Sports Council for Wales.

Obesity

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make it his policy to set a target for Wales to reduce the proportion of overweight people to 6 per cent. of men and 8 per cent. of women by the year 2005.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The English strategy has set targets for the small number of people who are clinically obese. However, in Wales we have concentrated on the larger number of people who are either overweight or obese, and have set targets for reducing the mean body weight of the population as a whole as well as addressing the numbers of those overweight or obese.

Education Funding

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the levels of resourcing for education in Wales; and if he will make it his policy to establish guaranteed minimum levels of funding to assist in the establishment of the national curriculum and local management of schools.

Mr. David Hunt: The local government finance settlement for 1992-93, approved by the House on 12 February, enables all local authorities in Wales to maintain and develop services for which they are responsible to an acceptable standard. The settlement is supplemented by the grants for education, support and training and Welsh language grant programmes under which specific grants are available to local education authorities for the support of the national curriculum and local management of schools.

Religious Education

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many schools feature religious education for the 14 to 16-year-olds' timetables; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Under the Education Reform Act 1988 the curriculum for every maintained school must include provision for religious education for all registered pupils at the school.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to obtain the advice of the Audit Commission on the restructuring of local government in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: The Audit Commission has received copies of the consultation papers I have issued, and has submitted comments.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has asked the Audit Commission to undertake a full assessment of the costs and benefits of all the different options in regard to the reorganisation of local government in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Independent consultants have made an assessment of the financial implications of a unitary authority structure in Wales. A copy of their report is in the Library of the House. An Audit Commission representative attended meetings between my officials and officials representing the Assembly of Welsh Counties and the Council of Welsh Districts at which the methodology for this work was considered.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish all the responses he has received on the subject of the internal management of local authorities in Wales since November 1991.

Mr. David Hunt: Copies of these responses were placed in the Library of the House last February.

Disabled Employees

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester West, (Mr. Janner) 30 June, Official Report, columns 498-99, (a) how many of his Department's employees and (b) what proportion of his Department's employees, were registered disabled in 1989 and 1990.

Mr. David Hunt: The details, based on staff in post at 1 June, are given in the table:

	Number of registered disabled people	Percentage of Departmental total
1989	26	1·2
1990	32	1·3

Notes:
(1) Includes equivalent and professional grades.
(2) Includes industrial staff.
(3) Part-time staff count as one unit.

Health Service Data Collection

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 9 July, Official Report, column 328, if he will place in the Library a copy of the letter DGM(90)123 regarding the commencement of separate data collection on patient episodes, inclusive of separate enumeration of tertiary and cross-specialty referrals.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I have placed a copy of the letter DGM(90)123 in the Library of the House.

Health Gain Protocols

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will publish the protocols for health gain during 1992 as promised in his Department's "Agenda for Action 2".

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The protocols for cancer; cardiovascular diseases; maternal and early child health; physical disability and discomfort: physical and sensory disability; and respiratory diseases have already been published. The remaining protocols are those for injuries; learning disabilities; physical disability and discomfort: discomfort and pain management; physical disability and discomfort: oral health; mental distress and illness; emotional health and relationships; and healthy environments. All but the last two should be published during 1992. The last two will be published in early 1993.

Departmental Appointments

Mr. Frank Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list any public appointments by his Department since 1987 which have involved people from organisations criticised in published reports by DTI inspectors;

(2) If he will list any advisers retained by his Department since 1987 who have been criticised in published reports by DTI inspectors.

Mr. David Hunt: I will write to the hon. Gentleman.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Port Talbot Office

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will quantify the savings arising from the transfer of processing staff from his Port Talbot office to Bridgend for each of the next three years.

Mr. Burt: The resourcing of offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security why the visit of Sir Michael Partridge to the Port Talbot offices of the DSS was cancelled; and what cost was incurred, directly or indirectly, in the cancellation.

Mr. Burt: Sir Michael Partridge had to defer his visit to the Department of Social Security office in Port Talbot because he was required by his other duties to remain in London on that day. No direct costs were incurred. Indirect costs are estimated to be in the region of £10.

European Year of the Elderly

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for his Department to celebrate the European Year of the Elderly in 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 13 July at column 430-31.

Benefit Take-up Rates

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what figures are available on the proportion of social security benefits actually claimed by people eligible to receive them; and what are the comparable figures for the previous years for which information is available.

Mr. Burt: The latest available information is contained in the estimates of take-up of income-related benefits for 1987; these relate to housing benefit, family income supplement and supplementary benefit. Comparisons with previous years are included. Copies are available in the Library.

Post Office Payments

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what is his latest estimate of the number of persons receiving payment of child benefit through the Post Office;

(2) what is his latest estimate of the number of pensioners receiving their pensions through the Post Office.

Mr. Burt: The administration of child benefit, widows benefits and retirement pensions are a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Residential Care Homes

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will indicate the extent to which his Department's budget will be altered to reflect the transfer to local councils of responsibility for people in nursing and residential homes.

Mr. Burt: The transfer of responsibility will be matched by a transfer of resources from this Department for distribution to local authorities. The amount of the transfer has not been decided.

Mortgage Interest Payments Information

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the provisions by which information on benefit recipients affected by the consequences of the Social Security (Mortgage Interest Payments) Act 1992 is exempted from the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mr. Burt: Disclosure is required by the Social Security (Mortgage Interest Payments) Act 1992 which provides for income support for mortgage interest to be paid direct to qualifying lenders. The consequential regulations also specify information about income support recipients' mortgages to be provided by qualifying lenders in order to ensure that the correct amount of benefit is paid direct to them.

These enactments provide exemption from the non-disclosure provisions through section 34(5) of the Data Protection Act 1984.

The Department of Social Security registration under the Data Protection Act in respect of its benefits provides for disclosure of information to qualifying mortgage lenders.

Pensioners (London Weighting)

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will introduce proposals to amend the Social Security Pensions Act 1975 to introduce London weighting for pensioners.

Miss Widdecombe: We have no plans to introduce London weighting to the state retirement pension. Retirement pensions and other contributory benefits are part of a national scheme of contributions and benefits.

Benefit Recoupments

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much money has been recovered by his Department in the first year of the recoupment of benefits under section 22 and schedule 4 of the Social Security Act 1989.

Miss Widdecombe: In the year to 31 August 1991 the compensation recovery unit recovered £11·4 million.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the cost to his Department of recouping benefits under section 22 and schedule 4 of the Social Security Act 1989.

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 15 June at col. 387.

Benefits Service Targets

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what national targets for benefits services have been published since July; and what reports have been published by the Benefits Agency on how it performed against these targets.

Mr. Burt: The publication of national targets for benefits services and reports on performance against them are matters for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Local Offices (Hours)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of benefits offices have adopted more flexible opening hours since July 1991.

Mr. Burt: The opening hours of Benefits Agency offices is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Contributions Agency Conference

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the Social Security Contributions Agency held its 1991-92 annual conference; how national insurance contributors were informed of this event; and how many national insurance contributors attended it.

Miss Widdecombe: Questions concerning the Contributions Agency's annual conference are matters for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive of the Contributions Agency. She will write to the hon. Member and copies will be placed in the Library and the Public Information Office.

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list any public appointments by his Department since 1987 which have involved people from organisations criticised in published reports by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors;

(2) if he will list any advisers retained by his Department since 1987 who have been criticised in published reports by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors.

Mr. Burt: Information is not held centrally in the form requested. The Department takes all relevant factors into account when considering such appointments.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many staff his Department currently employs; what are the total personnel costs; and if he will calculate the staffing level of the Social Security section of the former Department of Health and Social Security and the associated personnel costs, immediately before its separation.

Mr. Burt: The information is in the table:

	DHSS 1988-89 £ million	DSS 1991-92 £ million
Staff in Post	[1]84,667 (March 1989)	78,277 (April 1992)
Personnel Costs	923·570	1,117·481

Notes:
1. Included in personnel costs are salary costs of both permanent and casual staff, overtime as well as employers National Insurance costs.
2. The 1991 figures are the latest available as personnel costs for 1992-93 are not yet available.
3. The staff in post data is based on manual returns.
4. Separation of the Departments of Health and Social Security took place April 1989.
[1] DSS staff only

Pension Age

Mr. Rooney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to publish the outcome of the discussion document, "Options for Equality in State Pension Age."

Miss Widdecombe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Canterbury (Mr. Brazier) on 2 July at column 700-1.

Pension Funds

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will propose legislation under which the administrator of a pension fund would be required to (a) send a summary of the fund's accounts, as soon as they are available, to all beneficiaries and (b) notify all beneficiaries as to how to obtain a copy of the latest year's accounts;

(2) what plans his Department has to make the Occupational Pensions Board the main supervisory body for the pensions industry;

(3) if he will draw up proposals under which pension fund investment assets would (a) be held by independent custodian trustees and (b) have their ownership clearly designated upon them;

(4) what proposals he has to strengthen the role of the Occupational Pensions Board to enable it to carry out the task of running any pensions compensation scheme that may be recommended by the pensions law review committee;

(5) if he will draw up proposals under which letters of representation obtained in pensions fund audits would be required to leave the directors and trustees of those funds in no doubt as to their responsibilities with regard to the ownership, appropriateness, valuation and custody of investments;

(6) if he will make it Government policy to ensure that beneficiaries of pension funds have an annual opportunity of questioning the trustees on their administration of those funds;

(7) if he will propose legislation which would establish a pension compensation fund;

(8) whether the pensions law review committee under the chairmanship of Professor Goode QC intends to examine the practicalities of the idea that each pensioner should have the annual right of transferring his entire assets from his pension scheme into another recognised financial institution;

(9) if he will make it his policy to ensure the Occupational Pensions Board monitors (a) the appointment of pension fund trustees, (b) the winding-up of pension funds and the division of their assets and (c) the annual reports and accounts of pension funds lodged with the board;

(10) if he will issue guidelines codifying (a) the specific obligations of pension fund trustees to maintain proper accounting and (b) the form which auditors' reports to pension fund trustees should follow so that future areas of risk are qualified and explained;

(11) if he will make a statement as to how the Government consider the Inland Revenue can best fit in the work of the superannuation funds office in monitoring pension funds with the work of the Occupational Pensions Board in policing those funds;

(12) if he will make it his policy to issue guidelines to actuaries of pension funds advising them on what is their role in ensuring the nation's pension funds are safe, secure and run in a fit and proper manner;

(13) if he will instruct the Occupational Pensions Board to begin urgent discussions with the Investment Management Regulatory Organisation to discover how many pension funds entrust assets to managements whose ultimate control lies outside the jurisdiction of Great Britain;

(14) what steps he intends to take to bring about a co-ordination of (a) pensions industry regulatory bodies and (b) the checks carried out on pension funds by the different professional advisers.

Miss Widdecombe: In accordance with their manifesto promise the Government set up a Pension Law review committee on 8 June under the chairmanship of Professor Goode QC. The wide terms of reference given to the review committee will enable it to look at the overall framework of occupational pensions. The recommendations will form the basis for the Government to bring forward any detailed changes which are found to be necessary in order to give added protection to occupational pension schemes. The conclusions of the Select Committee report and points raised by the hon. Member and others will be among the issues the review committee will wish to take into account in deciding on its recommendations.

Working Hours Rule

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many new claimants have been disallowed income support because the weekly working hours regulation has been reduced from 24 hours to 16 hours;

(2) if he will review the regulation that disallows claimants income support and therefore mortgage interest payment because their partner works more than 16 hours per week;

(3) how many claimants have been refused income support and mortgage interest payments from his Department because their partners work between 16 and 24 hours per week; and how many have subsequently re-applied and been allowed benefit because (a) their partners have stopped work or (b) work less than 16 hours per week;

(4) how many home owners are (a) having their homes repossessed or (b) in arrears of more than two months with their mortgage because they are not in receipt of mortgage interest payments from his Department because their partners work more than 16 hours per week.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not available. The change in the income support hours rule from 24 to 16 hours a week was made in April 1992 as part of a package of measures aimed at helping working families with children, and lone parents in particular. By reducing the number of hours it is necessary to work in order to qualify for family credit, many more families are able to claim that benefit and many will be better-off than they would have been on income support, even after paying for their mortgage.

Those people who were working, or whose partners were working, between 16 and 24 hours a week and receiving income support at the point of change were able to continue to receive income support including any help with their mortgage interest.

It is too soon to say how the rule is working in practice but we are monitoring its effects.

Disabled Employers

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner) of 30 June, Official Report, column 503, how many and what proportion of his Department's employees were registered disabled in 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Burt: The information for the Department and its executive agencies is in the tables:

Grade	Total	Registered disabled	Percentage
As at 1 June 1989
1 to 7	703·0	1·0	0·1
Others	81,751·0	1,262·0	1·5
TOTAL	82,454·0	1,263·0	1·5
As at 1 June 1990
1 to 7	730·5	2·0	0·3
Others	79,377·0	1,374·5	1·7
TOTAL	80,750·5	1,376·5	1·7

Notes:

1. The figures do not include staff with disabilities who choose not to register or chose not to disclose their registration.
2. The figures do not include registered disabled people employed under the sheltered placement scheme.
3. For each grade, all non-industrial staff in equivalent grades are included.
4. The figures for grades 1 to 7 have been grouped together as the numbers of registered disabled staff in these grades are very small and they risk identifying an individual.
5. All figures are full-time equivalents.

Social Fund

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 29 June, Official Report, column 433, of the 65 applications for discretionary social fund awards which were refused by the Lewisham and Brixton office, how many applicants lived in Lewisham, Deptford.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the members of the disability living allowance advisory board; how often the board has met; whether it has yet given any advice to Ministers; when it expects to issue its first report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The names of the members of the disability living allowance advisory board are in the table. It has met four times in full and nine times in quorum. So far, the board has given Ministers valuable advice on the content of the disability handbook—all of which has been acted upon. The board is due to produce its first report in April 1993.

Members of the disability living allowance advisory board

Professor J. Marshall CBE, DSc, MD, FRCP, DPM
Mrs. J. Allen-King MBE
Mrs. J. Ashcroft
Mrs. P. Case CBE, BA
Dr. A. K. Clarke BSc, MBBS, FRCP
Miss E. Fanshawe OBE, DipCOT
Mrs. J. Franklin CQSW
Mr. S. R. Gallop MA
Mrs. C. Henry RGN
Dr. C. F. Herridge MA, MB, BChir, FRCPsych, DPM
Dr. J. A. Hunter BSc, MBChB, FRCP
Miss S. Knibbs CQSW
Mr. P. Large CBE
Dr. I. McKinlay BSc, MBChB, FRCP
Dr. T. J. G. Phillips MBBS, FRFPS, MRCP, MFOM
Mrs. S. A. Philbrook
Dr. M. Piper MB, BS, FRCP
Dr. M. Richards BSc, MB, BCh, FRCGP
Professor H. Simpson MD, FRCP, DCH, DRCOG
Mr. A. Williamson LLB, MA(Ed), CQSW

Industrial Injuries

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the number of claims for A8 and A4 prescribed diseases for each of the last five years.

Mr. Scott: I understand from Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency, that the information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to implement the recommendation of the May 1992 report of the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council (Cm. 1936).

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Erewash (Mrs. Knight) on 21 May at column 241.

Unemployment

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the average cost to the Exchequer over 12 months of an unemployed former civilian Ministry of Defence employee in unemployment benefit, income support, mortgage interest payments or housing benefits, free dentistry and prescriptions and poll tax rebates.

Mr. Burt: A reliable estimate is not possible.

SCOTLAND

DNA Information

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy on the provision of DNA information about patients to insurance companies.

Mr. Stewart: Information obtained from DNA testing is confidential and should be treated in the same way as other personal health information. It should not be disclosed to insurance companies without the prior consent of the patient.

Genetics

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what policy conclusions have been drawn in relation to genetic therapy and genetic counselling from the conference "Our Genetic Future" held at BMA house on 30 June.

Mr. Stewart: The conference was an important contribution to the debate about the issues surrounding developments in genetic research. The Government recognise the importance of counselling for both sufferers and their families and are currently considering their response to the report of the Committee on the Ethics of Gene Therapy, Cm 1788.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) doctors and (b) nurses are currently trained in the detection and treatment of genetic disorders; and what plans he has to increase the numbers.

Mr. Stewart: (a) The information collected centrally records only the main specialty of a doctor. The numbers —whole-time equivalent—of doctors in the specialty of medical genetics at 30 September 1991, the latest date for which information is available, are given in the table.

	Whole time equivalent
Consultants	4·2
Associate specialists	1·0
Senior registrars	3·2
Registrars	4·4
Total	12·8

(b) Information on nurses trained in medical genetics is not available centrally.

The numbers of doctors in the training grades of registrar and senior registrar reflect health boards' plans for staffing the specialty.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans he has to promote the early adoption of new techniques of diagnosis management, and treatment of the effect of genetic disease, including proven gene therapy;

(2) what strategy he has to use new molecular knowledge in surgery and treatment; and what training is given to those who use manipulative techniques in this field.

Mr. Stewart: The Government consider that it is important that applications of new molecular biological techniques to the diagnosis, management and treatment of patients should be subjected to stringent evaluation before they are adopted for use in clinical practice. In Scotland, new techniques are kept under close review by the Scottish Molecular Genetics Consortium, established in 1984, one of whose purposes is the co-ordination of approaches towards the diagnosis of genetic disorders.

The committee on the ethics of gene therapy was set up in 1989 to provide advice to the United Kingdom Health Ministers on scientific and medical developments which have a bearing on the safety and efficiency of human gene modification. The committee's report was published in January this year and a public consultation on its recommendations ended on 18 May. The Government are currently considering their response to the report.

Each of the royal colleges and faculties takes the lead on professional training within its own speciality. Training in molecular biological techniques is available for clinicians in training programmes organised by the Medical Research Council, the Wellcome Trust and other bodies.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what provision he is making to provide genetic counselling for (a) individual patients, (b) family groups and (c) relatives of victims of genetic disorders.

Mr. Stewart: Specialist genetic counselling is provided by clinical geneticists based in the four genetic advisory centres in Edinburgh, Glasgow, Dundee and Aberdeen. In addition, other clinicians, including obstetricians, paediatricians and GPs play an important role in counselling those suffering from genetic disorders, their families and those whose future children may suffer from such disorders.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what study he has made of the practice of payment from one health authority to another in paying for tests relating to genetic disorders.

Mr. Stewart: No such study has been undertaken.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the need of central laboratories for clinical geneticists.

Mr. Stewart: A review last year of the four laboratories which comprise the Scottish Molecular Genetics Consortium identified a need for two additional consultant clinical geneticist posts. Both should be filled in the near future. The need for any further increase is under discussion with the consortium.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for the provision of genetic registers, and enabling such registers to play a role in the elimination of potential carriers of disease.

Mr. Stewart: The first computerised genetic register in the United Kingdom, RAPID—Register for the Ascertainment and Prevention of Genetic Disease—was developed and established in the department of human genetics at Edinburgh university in 1970. All four of the major medical centres in Scotland now have such registers.

Thalassaemia

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what provision is made for those suffering from thalassaemia.

Mr. Stewart: Thalassaemia can be detected by pre-natal tests, and the Scottish Molecular Genetics Consortium offers such a service. Individuals suffering from thalassaemia major are treated mainly by blood transfusion coupled with iron-reducing drugs.

Community Charge

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discretion local authorities have over the collection of small amounts of outstanding community charge debt where costs of collection are greater than the amount due.

Mr. Stewart: Local authorities must consider each case on its merits and be prepared to explain the reasonableness of their approach to their auditors if necessary.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will give figures showing, for each local authority, the number of cases of community charge collection where the amount collected was less than the costs of collection;

(2) if he will give figures showing the costs for each Scottish local authority of enforcement action for the recovery of community charge debt and the amounts so recovered;

(3) if he will give figures showing the costs for each Scottish local authority of enforcement action for the recovery of community charge debt in cases where the costs of collection are greater than the amount due.

Mr. Stewart: The information is not held centrally.

Speech Therapy

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how much of the speech therapy provision announced on 24 February is to be distributed to (a) under-fives, (b) children in mainstream education and (c) children with mental handicaps;

(2) what is the estimated cost of speech therapy provision for children with records of needs in each of the regional council areas; and how many such children there are in each.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As soon as the information is available I will reply to the hon. Member in writing.

Sheriff Ewen Stewart

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has now considered the findings of the investigation undertaken by the Lord President and Lord Justice Clerk of the fitness for office of Sheriff Ewen Stewart; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make a decision on the case of Sheriff Ewen Stewart before 16 July.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 7 July 1992]: As I announced last year, following representations, including representations from Members of this House, and in the light of the observations of Sheriff Principal R. A. Bennet QC in a particular case, I concluded that it would be appropriate for an investigation to be undertaken of the fitness for office of Sheriff Ewen Stewart. I therefore asked the Lord President and Lord Justice Clerk to carry out such an investigation under the provisions of section 12 of the Sheriff Courts (Scotland) Act 1971. I received their report on 10 February 1992.

In the report, their lordships noted that this was the third occasion that an investigation had been undertaken into the fitness for office of Sheriff Stewart. Their lordships concluded that a general investigation would be appropriate into the sheriff's conduct since the date of the last report. Following preliminary inquiries, their lordships provided Sheriff Stewart with a list of the cases relevant to his conduct which they were to investigate and invited him to answer specific questions relating to these cases as well as to offer any general observations which he cared to make. On receipt of the sheriff's responses, further inquiries were made and their lordships interviewed Sheriff Stewart before completing their report.

The conclusion of their lordships' very detailed report was that Sheriff Stewart was unfit for office by reason of inability to perform the judicial functions which are expected of a sheriff by virtue of his office and in terms of his judicial oath. On receipt of their lordships' report I arranged for a copy to be sent to Sheriff Stewart and invited him to comment on its findings. I have given very careful consideration to Sheriff Stewart's detailed response which he submitted to me on 4 May 1992, but I have decided, in all the circumstances, to bring forward an order removing him from office.

I am arranging, to be placed in the Library of both Houses of Parliament, their lordships' letter of 10 February 1992, together with appendix A and appendix C thereto, under deletion from appendix A of two cases which their lordships decided, having considered Sheriff Stewart's response, did not merit further investigation. Appendix B, which contains Sheriff Stewart's responses to their lordships, has not been placed in the Library. As indicated by their lordships in appendix C to their letter, much of what is said by Sheriff Stewart is irrelevant to the cases which were under investigation. In addition, some parts of appendix B appear to be potentially defamatory.

DEFENCE

Sexual Harassment and Assault

Ms. Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the number of complaints by British service women of alleged sexual harassment and sexual assault against British service men for the latest year for which information is available; what action was taken as a result; and what procedures exist for reporting and investigating such instances.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The number of complaints made by British service women about alleged sexual harassment and assault involving British service men could be provided only at disproportionate cost. All complaints by service personnel of harassment of any nature are dealt with under normal redress of grievance procedures and, if substantiated, appropriate action would be taken against the offender. Normally, a complaint is dealt with by the commanding officer, but if it cannot be resolved at that level or the complainant is dissatisfied, it may be referred up the chain of command and ultimately to the Navy, Army, or Air Force board.

If a service woman wishes to make a complaint of sexual assault, she should report the incident to her superior officer for action through the chain of command.

Depending on the seriousness of the offence, the matter would then be dealt with by the military authorities or civil police.

Port of Dartmouth Royal Regatta

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the guardships which attended the Port of Dartmouth royal regatta in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement as to which ship will be present at the 1992 regatta, to be held between 26 and 30 August.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is as follows:

1982—HMS Alfriston
1983—HMS Achilles
1984—HMS Euryalus
1985—HMS Diomede
1986—HMS Hermione
1987—HMS Plymouth
1988—HMS Avenger
1989—HMS Cardiff
1990—HMS Active
1991—HMS Battleaxe

HMS Sirius is currently scheduled to attend the 1992 regatta.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will arrange for (a) HMS Alacrity or (b) HMS Gloucester to attend the 1992 Port of Dartmouth royal regatta as guardship between Wednesday 26 August and Sunday 30 August.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The provision of a guardship for the Dartmouth royal regatta depends on the availability of a suitable vessel after taking account of operational training commitments which must take precedence. Neither HMS Alacrity nor HMS Gloucester will be available; HMS Sirius is currently scheduled to attend the regatta.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department will be represented at the session on restoration of militarily contaminated lands of the United Nation's conference on indigenous peoples in Geneva at the end of July.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No.

Korea

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current United Kingdom military commitment in Korea, its present annual cost and the cost for each year since it began, both in actual and current prices.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United Kingdom's military presence in Korea comprises two defence attaches, a first secretary (defence supply) and their supporting staff in the British embassy in Seoul; members of the Commonwealth Liaison Mission to the United Nations Command, headed by the British defence attache; and a platoon of infantry as part of the United Nations honour guard. The full costs of the commitment are not normally separately identified within the Defence budget, but it is estimated that in 1991-92 they amounted to £1·9 million at 1991-92 outturn prices. Figures for previous years could not be made available without disproportionate effort.

Armaments (Dumping at Sea)

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make it his policy to set a target date for the banning of the practice of dumping armaments at sea around the coast of the United Kingdom;

(2) if he will publish a list of all the sites utilised for dumping surplus armaments in the sea around the coast of the United Kingdom at present;

(3) what mechanisms are utilised by his Department to monitor sites used for the dumping of armaments at sea, including environmental effects;

(4) if he will publish a list of the materials contained in surplus armaments dumped around the coast of the United Kingdom over the last 10 years.

Mr. Aitken: Ministry of Defence will terminate all sea dumping of redundant ammunition and explosive stocks by 1 January 1993. This is in line with the Government's general policy that where safe and practicable waste should be disposed of on land, in preference to dumping at sea. Dumping is carried out in a strictly controlled manner to ensure that it does not cause damage to the marine environment, or interfere with fishing, or other legitimate uses of the sea. Preparation of stores for dumping includes the removal of components containing toxic heavy metals which are not permitted to be disposed of in this manner. There has been no sea dumping of redundant ammunition and explosive stocks around the coast of the United Kingdom during the last 10 years. The only dump site in use is some 400 miles off Lands End in the Atlantic at a depth of some 4,500 m. The depth of this site precludes effective monitoring but there is no evidence to suggest that controlled dumping of conventional ammunition and explosives in this manner constitutes a risk to the marine environment.

Overseas Equipment Sales

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role British military attaches play in the sale of British defence equipment overseas.

Mr. Aitken: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to his earlier question on British military attaches, Official Report column 671.

Expenditure

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 1 July to the hon. Member for Clackmannan (Mr. O'Neill), Official Report, column 656, what additional costs are incurred by his Department from preparing separate forms of statistics on defence expenditures for the annual statement on the defence estimates and the United Nations report on military expenditures.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information on defence expenditure provided to the United Nations and that contained within the annual statement on the Defence estimates are both based on information collected within the MoD for financial management purposes. It is not possible to quantify any additional costs.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a table of expenditure on equipment purchased by his Department, cross-referenced to standard regions, showing Greater London as a separate region, for each year since 1987-88 (a) at current prices and (b) at 1987-88 prices.

Mr. Aitken: My Department's expenditure on equipment between 1985-86 and 1990-91 broken down by region, together with estimates of the associated direct employment, is published in table 1.11 of the 1992 edition of "Defence Statistics". Separate figures for Greater London could be provided only at disproportionate cost and effort. The published figures may be recast to the price base desired by the use of published indices.

Residential Properties

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many residential properties in the London borough of Lewisham are owned by his Department; if he will publish a list of such residential properties which are currently empty, giving the type of accommodation available, the length of time each property has been vacant, and the intended future use.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence currently owns 12 residential properties in the London borough of Lewisham, all of which are occupied.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff his Department currently employs; what are the total personnel costs; and what were the staffing levels and personnel costs in 1970.

Mr Aitken: Following is the information:

Full time equivalent Civil servants (Number)

	United Kingdom	Locally employed overseas	Cost at 1991-92 price £ million
1 April 1970	257,906	68,400	4,140
1 April 1992	139,454	27,000	2,853

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list any public appointments by his Department since 1987 which have involved people from organisations criticised in published reports by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors;

(2) if he will list any advisers retained by his Department since 1987 who have been criticised in published reports by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors.

Mr. Aitken: The information is not held centrally in the form requested. My Department takes all relevant factors into account when considering public appointments and the engagement of advisers.

RAF Brawdy

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest estimate of the number of civilian employees who will lose their jobs when fast jet training ceases at RAF Brawdy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have issued 42 redundancy notices so far, with a further four to follow. In addition, a total of 10 employees are to be transferred either to other Government Departments or within MoD.

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total cost to his Department of redundancy and other linked payments to those civilian employees who will lose their jobs when tactical weapons training ceases at RAF Brawdy.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The total cost to the Department is estimated to be in the region of £440,000.

Redundancy

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his best estimate of the average cost to the Exchequer for redundancy and related payments including any enhancements and payments in lieu of notice for a civilian Ministry of Defence employee.

Mr. Aitken: Civil service redundancy payments are paid under the compulsory early retirement terms of the principal civil service pension scheme and are based on an individual's age, length of service and rate of pay at the time of leaving. It is, therefore, not possible to give a meaningful average figure.

Disabled Employees

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 2 July, Official Report, column 688, to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner), (a) how many of his Department's employees, and (b) what proportion of his Department's employees, were registered disabled in 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Aitken: The Ministry of Defence employed 1,202 and 1,210 registered disabled persons in 1989 and 1990 respectively. This represented 1 per cent. and 0·9 per cent. of the total civilian work force.

Departmental Property (Extensions)

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on consultations with the appropriate local parliamentary representatives when extensions to his Department's property are proposed which may have detrimental consequences for the area concerned.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Except where security considerations are over-riding, it is my Department's policy to consult fully with local planning authorities (or, in Northern Ireland, the planning service) about any development proposals. Only in exceptional circumstances would it be our practice to notify the constituency MP.

RAF Regiment

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has for the future organisation of the RAF regiment.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As part of our programme to create a more efficient structure for the RAF, studies have been made into the future size and shape of the RAF regiment.

The restructuring of RAF Germany removed the requirement for two of the United Kingdom based RAF regiment light armoured squadrons (LAS), which in time of war would have provided ground defence of forward operating bases in Germany. Following the disbandment of 58 squadron LAS at Catterick earlier this year, 51 squadron LAS—also at Catterick—will disband with effect from 31 March 1993. This will leave the RAF regiment with three light armoured squadrons and a field squadron. Further economies will be achieved by replacing the armoured vehicles with soft-skinned wheeled vehicles, scaled with mortars for fire support. The new field role for the squadrons will provide them with greater operational flexibility than hitherto. The Queen's Colour squadron will also assume additional operational duties as a war-roled field squadron.

These changes, together with the reduction in the number of Rapier squadrons from 10 to eight earlier this year, will reduce the need for the existing level of the RAF regiment's headquarters organisations. With effect from 1 October 1992, therefore, HQ 3 wing at Catterick and HQ 33 wing at Gutersloh will be disbanded.

Our studies have looked carefully into rationalisation of the RAF regiment bases in the United Kingdom. The results have shown that cost savings and greater efficiency can be achieved through the maximum degree of collocation possible of the regiment's activity in the United Kingdom. In early 1994, HQ 6 wing RAF regiment, No. 66 sqn RAF regiment and the Rapier training unit will move from RAF West Raynham to Honington, involving the relocation of just over 200 service men. This is in line with the rationalisation measures announced in the 1991 Defence White Paper. No final decision has yet been made about the West Raynham base. Apart from a short term requirement for married quarters and domestic accommodation, the RAF has no future requirement for the base. Other possible defence uses for West Raynham are being considered.

It is further proposed that the RAF regiment depot and No. 2 sqn RAF regiment will move from Catterick to Honington. The move is planned to take place in late 1993/early 1994 and would involve the relocation of about 500 service men.

Everything possible would be done to avoid redundancies of the civilian work force employed at the bases affected by these changes. Army use of RAF Catterick could provide job opportunities for the existing civilian employees. There may also be opportunities for alternative employment at Catterick garrison. In the absence of a future defence requirement for West Raynham some redundancies are likely to be necessary. Anyone made redundant would be compensated under the terms of the appropriate pension scheme. The MoD would establish close contact with employers in the areas affected, including other Government Departments, and any staff leaving prematurely under voluntary or compulsory redundancy terms would be eligible for the services provided by the MoD counselling and outplacement service. The trade unions will be consulted in the usual way.

Army Static Workshop Organisation

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the future of the Army Static Workshop Organisation.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The changes in the size and shape of the Army following from "Options for Change" will result in a considerable reduction in the volume of repair work undertaken by the Army's base and district workshops. Accordingly, a wide ranging review has been undertaken to assess the numbers and locations of workshops which will be required to support the Army in the future from the financial, engineering and operational viewpoints.

The main recommendations of that review are that 39 district workshop, Bridgend, 41 district workshop, York, and 42 district workshop, Liverpool, should close by 31 March 1993; and that 23 base workshop at Wetter in Germany should close by 31 March 1994. These closures will remove surplus capacity from the organisation and they will also lead to a substantial increase in the volume of contract repair undertaken by British industry. Overall, they are expected to achieve savings in operating costs of some £7 million per year.

The German authorities have been informed of our intention to close 23 base workshop. We will consult with them fully throughout the closure process and we will follow normal procedures with the Works Council. In the United Kingdom we are about to start a full period of consultation with the relevant trade unions over all the proposed closures. A final decision will be taken in the light of any representations.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fish Catches

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the figures showing the landings in tonnes of (a) cod, (b) sole and (c) haddock in each year from 1970 onwards.

Mr. Curry: The information requested relating to all landings into the United Kingdom is given in the table.

Landings into the United Kingdom by British and foreign fishing vessels (tonnes landed weight). The figures include landings from fishing grounds in the North Atlantic which have, over the period, been closed to British fishermen

Year	Cod	Sole	Haddock

[1] The figures for 1990 have not yet been published but have been finalised.

Source: Sea Fisheries Statistical Tables.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what efforts are currently being undertaken by his Department to eliminate the practice of discarding unwanted fish by fishermen.

Mr. Curry: The increase in mesh sizes and the use of square mesh panels which formed important parts of the EC and United Kingdom conservation measures introduced on 1 June 1992 are designed to lead to a reduction in discards by allowing more juvenile fish to escape from nets. Following discussion in the Community the EC Commission are preparing detailed proposals to tackle aspects of the problem further. In addition most of the gear research work funded by United Kingdom fisheries departments is concerned with gear selectivity.

Fisheries

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what figures he has of the number of fisheries inspectors employed, at the latest available date, by each relevant European Community country, apart from the United Kingdom;

(2) what figures he has of the number of fishing protection vessels deployed at the latest available date in each relevant country in the European Community, other than the United Kingdom; and how many personnel were engaged on such vessels of each such authority.

Mr. Curry: The Commission's report on the common fisheries policy, dated 6 December 1990—reference SEC(90) 2244 final—includes the following information

	Number of land based inspection staff	Inspection vessels longer than 15 metres
Belgium	3	6
Denmark	200	7
Germany	20	10
Spain	12	23
France	20	9
Ireland	7	7
Netherlands	180	12
Portugal	12	26

The report notes that the resources which some member states devote to control and enforcement are inadequate, and the Government will be pressing for improvements as part of the mid-term review of the common fisheries policy.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 25 June, Official Report, column 387, if he will set out the information available to his Ministry on the performance by private contracted vessels of the maritime fishery protection service in Scotland.

Mr. Curry: Surface fishery protection duties in Scotland are carried out partly by the Royal Navy and partly by the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency using civilian vessels. The SFPA will shortly publish its first annual report. This will analyse performance and the effectiveness of the fisheries protection services provided. A key indicator of fisheries protection performance is the number of boardings achieved. The number of boardings of fishing vessels by civilian-manned vessels of the SFPA has increased from 1,125 in 1985-86 to 2,100 in 1991-92.

Renderers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the number of licensed renderers in each year since 1987.

Mr. Soames: The statutory requirement for renderers to register their premises with this Department was introduced in 1989 in the Processed Animal Protein Order 1989.

The number of renderers premises registered under that requirement in each year since then has been:

	Number
1989	67
1990	63
1991	67
1992	57

Bare Fallow Option

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether a bare fallow option will be allowed to farmers, under the set-aside rules, so as to cultivate weeds out.

Mr. Curry: We will consider the scope for some form of bare summer fallow once the Commission implementing regulations, on which national scheme rules must be based, have been adopted, are, however, likely to require a winter green.

Fish Quotas

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what latest estimate he has made of the percentage of United Kingdom fish quotas which are caught by vessels on the United Kingdom fishing register which are beneficially non-British owned; and if he will list such percentages by fish stock.

Mr. Curry: I regret that the information requested cannot be extracted except at disproportionate cost.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has about the percentage cut in the number of fishing vessels to be required of all relevant European Community countries, other than the United Kingdom, under the same requirement as requires the United Kingdom to cut its number by 30 per cent; and if he will make a statement on what requirements each relevant European Community country, other than the United Kingdom, is placing on its fishing fleet parallel to the measures proposed in the Sea Fish (Conservation) Bill.

Mr. Curry: Negotiations between member states and the Commission on the targets to be set in the 1993-96 multiannual guidance programme are not yet complete. The Commission has, however, indicated that targets will be comparable between member states and will involve a combination of capacity and effort reductions. Targets will also be segmented with more severe reductions set for those sections of the fleet prosecuting the more heavily exploited fisheries and the lighter reductions for sectors where the stock position is relatively satisfactory. No figure has been agreed yet for the United Kingdom.

Drift Nets

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what efforts have been undertaken by his Department to enforce the United Nations ban on the use of large-scale drift nets.

Mr. Curry: From 1 June 1992 the United Kingdom, in common with other European Community states, applied Communitywide measures which, with certain exceptions not relevant to the British fishing fleet, prohibit the use by EC vessels of drift nets longer than 2·5km wherever they fish. These measures go further than the United Nations resolution which only dealt with drift nets used on the high seas.

Sea Mammals

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what efforts are currently being undertaken by his Department to monitor the number of dolphins and other non-target animals killed in fishing gear, and to control fisheries with a high incidence of kills; and if he will make it his policy to set a target date for the reduction of by-catch non-target species to zero.

Mr. Curry: A voluntary reporting scheme was introduced on 1 January 1992. On information available whilst accidental catches occur in our waters these are limited and not of the substantial numbers as have been seen in the east Pacific yellow fin tuna fishery. Our policy is that accidental catches should be avoided as far as possible. Further research to assist this is in hand.

The Naze

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list what European Community financial aid, under what headings, will be available for the prevention of erosion of the Naze at Walton-on-the-Naze.

Mr. Curry: Essex is not an area eligible for assistance from the European regional development fund. However, actions to protect soil damaged by coastal erosion may be eligible for support under EC's LIFE programme, the Community's financial instrument for the environment.

Earth Summit

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what matters arising from the decisions taken at the United Nations Conference on Environment and Development are due to be discussed at the European Agriculture Council on 13 and 14 July.

Mr. Curry: None at this Council. However, the integration of environmental considerations into agricultural policy will be a priority for the United Kingdom presidency in line with UNCED conclusions.

Livestock (Minerals)

Sir David Steel: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment has been made of the impact of the withdrawal of calcium, magnesium, phosphate and dextrose on the welfare of livestock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: A number of medicinal products containing calcium in combination with these other substances are currently being examined by the Veterinary Products Committee as part of a review of pharmaceutical products licensed before 1 January 1984, to ensure that they meet modern day standards of safety, quality and efficacy. It is for the individual pharmaceutical companies involved to make a commercial decision whether or not to provide the data to support their products through the review process. If such data demonstrates that the necessary scientific criteria have been met, then a licence may be granted.

Such calcium combination products continue to be available, but the Veterinary Medicines Directorate maintains regular contact with the British Veterinary Association and the National Office of Animal Health, to ensure that it receives an early warning where a loss of products in any group might lead to a problem with animal welfare.

Badger Culling

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consideration he has given to ordering an immediate moratorium on badger culling as a way of eradicating cattle tuberculosis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: This idea has been closely examined, notably within the Ministry's consultative panel on badgers and tuberculosis. There are at present no plans to introduce a moratorium.

Departmental Advisers

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list any advisers retained by his Department since 1987 who have been criticised in published reports by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors.

Mr. Curry: The information is not held centrally in the form requested. The Department takes all relevant factors into account when considering such appointments.

Organic Foods

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to make representations to the European Commission calling for a postponement of any decision relating to the EC directive on organic foods at the Commission's meeting on 23 July.

Mr. Curry: The Council of Agriculture Ministers agreed at its meeting on 13 and 14 July to postpone the effective starting date of the regulation on organic foods, from 23 July 1992 to 1 January 1993.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to seek amendments to the European directive on organic foods to ensure that permanent safeguards for small shops and operators are built into the directive.

Mr. Curry: The EC regulation on organic foods applies to anyone engaged in the growing, processing and importing from countries outside the Community, of food to be labelled as "organic". The regulation will provide safeguards to consumers, as well as to bona fide growers and processors, that food sold as organic has been grown according to a recognised standard. We have no plans to seek special arrangements for any group.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will outline Government funding of organic farming and conversion schemes for the last two years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: No specific schemes are currently available for organic farmers although of course they can make full use of support schemes available to farmers generally. The agri-environment part of the CAP reform agreement will provide a framework within which aid could be given to existing organic farmers and those wishing to convert. Proposals for such scheme are currently under consideration.

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list any public appointments by his Department since 1987 which have involved people from organisations criticised in published reports by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors.

Mr. Curry: The information is not held centrally in the form requested. The Department takes all relevant factors into account when considering such appointments.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many staff his Department currently employs; what are the total personnel costs; and what were the staffing levels and personnel costs in 1970.

Mr. Curry: The total staff employed by the Department is as follows:

	Number
1 April 1970	16,246
1 July 1992	10,583

The total pay provision for 1992-93 is £210·7 million. The comparable figure for 1970 could be determined only at disproportionate cost.

Cormorants

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 19 June, Official Report, column 683, if he has yet obtained figures from his Ministry's north-east regional service centre regarding the number of licences for the killing or taking of cormorants in each of the past five years.

Mr. Soames: I have now received the required details from the Ministry's north-east regional service centre. No applications have been received and no licences issued for the killing or taking of cormorants in this region in the last five years. The table provided in my previous reply therefore remains unchanged.

Year	Applications received	Licences issued
1987	6	3
1988	4	2
1989	3	2
1990	9	4
1991	8	3

Milk Marketing

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy that all interested buyers of milk and dairy products, including secondary users, will be fully consulted on proposals to change the current United Kingdom milk marketing arrangements and to supply details of the planned timetable for consultations.

Mr. Curry: The Government are currently considering the milk marketing boards' proposals for its transformation into non-statutory structures. We intend to introduce legislation to facilitate this change this parliamentary Session. We are committed to full consultation of all interests affected beforehand.

Lobsters

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made to European Commissioner Marin to challenge the imposition on British shell fishermen of an EC change in the method of measuring lobsters from carapace length to overall length, resulting in a reduction in minimum landing size; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Our industry was consulted about the change in the EC rule for measuring lobsters, designed to remove ambiguity in the original EC regulation and to help fishermen by generally only requiring one measurement. We have already alerted the Commission to our concerns and have now prepared data to press the case for further and urgent modification of the rule to remove the inadvertent effect of allowing smaller lobsters to be landed than under the original regulation.

Disabled Employees

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner) on 1 July, Official Report, column 643 (a) how many of his Department's employees, and (b) what proportion of his Department's employees, were registered disabled in 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Curry: Counting part time staff as half units, MAFF and its agencies employed 140·5 registered disabled staff in 1989 and 139·5 in 1990. These figures represent 1·4 per cent. of total staff, but do not take into account staff with disabilities who have chosen not to register.

Apple and Pear Research Council

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has completed his consultation on the future of the Apple and Pear Research Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I am pleased to announce that, having consulted the council and representative organisations in England and Wales, I have decided that the Apple and Pear Research Council should continue with its present constitution and functions for a further five years.

Our consultations with the industry have clearly demonstrated that the Apple and Pear Research Council is held in high esteem by it and that it commands a high level of confidence from the levy paying growers. This unequivocal response from the industry ensures that the council will be in the strongest possible position to take forward the research and development role which is so vital to the industry's needs.

I have decided that when a suitable opportunity occurs one change should be made to the Apple and Pear Research Council Order 1989 which has been endorsed by the council and the industry's representative bodies. The maximum levy the council is empowered to collect will be increased from £25 to £30 per hectare of orchard area. Although the current levy rate is below the permitted maximum, I believe that it is sensible to allow for developments over the new life of the council.

EMPLOYMENT

Special Needs

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many applications for placements have been made by people with special needs to each training and enterprise council in England in each year since the establishment of the councils; and how many have successfully received placements in each instance.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information requested is not held centrally.

Wages Councils

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will publish a range of estimates of the economic effects of wages councils on levels of payment, employment, unemployment and economic activity.

Mr. McLoughlin: A number of studies which estimate the economic effects of wages councils have been published. They are based on differing research methods and have been conducted at different times, so their results may not be directly comparable. For this reason it is not sensible to present a range of estimates.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether she proposes to issue a consultation paper on the roles, functions and operations of wages councils.

Mr. McLoughlin: No.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she has commissioned a survey of opinion on wages councils among (a) employers and (b) employees in wage council industries.

Mr. McLoughlin: There are no plans to carry out a further consultation exercise. Full public consultation took place in 1988.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the cost to her Department of (a) wages councils and (b) enforcement of minimum pay rates.

Mr. McLoughlin: For the financial year ended 31 March 1992 the cost of administering the wages councils was £197,000 and the cost of enforcement of minimum pay rates was £2,080,000.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment who has been consulted on the future of wages councils.

Mr. McLoughlin: Full public consultation took place in 1988.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the Government last announced a reassessment of their policy on wages councils; and when it became her policy to abolish all wages councils.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. and learned Friend, the previous Secretary of State, announced on 6 March 1990 that, following the last consultation exercise, the wages councils' system has no permanent place in the labour market and their operation would be kept under close review. This remains the Government's policy.

European Year of the Elderly

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans she has for her Department to celebrate in 1993, the European Year of the Elderly; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 13 July 1992 Official Report, columns 430-31.

Job Vacancies (Wages)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether jobcentres accept vacancies from employers where the wages offered fall below the relevant wages council minimum.

Mr. McLoughlin: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred this question for reply.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what guidance has been given to training and enterprise councils to enter into short-term contracts, and on what basis, and with what criteria, that guidance is to be applied.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend has not issued any guidance to training and enterprise councils about entering into short-term contracts.

Employment Service

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what proportion of Employment Service local offices displayed an up-to-date list of all services offered by their office on 1 April;

(2) what percentage of the population was served by an Employment Service one-stop shop; and what percentage was served by separate employment and benefit offices at 1 April;

(3) what percentage of local offices offered freephone services for job seekers on 1 April.

Mr.McLoughlin: Questions on operational matters in the Employment Service executive agency are the responsibility of the agency's chief executive, to whom I have referred these questions for reply.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many staff her Department currently employs; what are the total personnel costs; and what were the staffing levels and personnel cost in 1970.

Mr. McLoughlin: The total number of staff employed by the Department at 1 July 1992 was 59,684 at a total salary cost provision for 1992-93 of £1,037·2 million. The staffing level in 1970-71 was 27,872 at an annual salary cost of £41·8 million.

DTI Inspections

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if she will list any public appointments by her Department since 1987 which have involved people from organisations criticised in published reports by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors;

(2) if she will list any advisers retained by her Department since 1987 who have been criticised in published reports by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors.

Mr. McLoughlin: The information is not held centrally in the form requested. The Department takes all relevant factors into account when considering such appointments.

Residential Properties

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many residential properties in the London borough of Lewisham are owned by her Department; if she will publish a list of such residential properties which are currently empty, giving the type of accommodation available, the length of time each property has been vacant, and the intended future use.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department does not own any residential properties in the London borough of Lewisham.

Hazardous Substances

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employers have been prosecuted under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988 since 1 January 1989.

Mr. McLoughlin: Prosecutions under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988 may be taken against employers, employees or the self-employed. Details of the number of employers prosecuted are not held centrally. However, during the period 1 April 1989 to 31 March 1991 the Health and Safety Executive's factory and agricultural inspectorates initiated proceedings which resulted in 55 informations laid or complaints taken in England, Wales and Scotland during this period. This is the latest figure available.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many incidents of exposure to or contact with harmful substances occurred in workplaces registered with (a) the factory inspectorate, (b) the quarries inspectorate, (c) the agricultural inspectorate, (d) the nuclear inspectorate and (e) the mines inspectorate in each year since 1989;

(2) how many incidents of exposure to or contact with harmful substances occurred in workplaces registered with the railway inspectorate in each year since 1989;

(3) how many people were reported to have been exposed to or in contact with a harmful substance in each year between 1986 and 1991;

(4) how many fatal accidents have been associated with exposure to or contact with hazardous substances in 1989, 1990 and 1991.

Mr. McLoughlin: Fatalities arising from accidents involving contact with or exposure to a harmful substance reported to all Health and Safety Commission enforcing authorities under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations, 1985 for 1989-90 and 1990-91 are given in the table:

	[1] 1989-90	[1] 1990-91
Employees	7	8
Self-employed	1	3
Members of public[2]	3	1
TOTAL	11	12

[1] Years commencing 1 April.
[2] Members of the public killed as a result of someone else's work activity.

Occupational injuries arising from exposure to, or contact with a harmful substance reported to HSE's factory and agricultural inspectorates and to local authorities, for years[1] between 1986 to 1991 are given in the table.

Year[2]	Fatal	Major[3]	Over 3 day[4]	Total
1986-87	7	535	1,198	1,740
1987-88	11	421	1,307	1,739
1988-89	7	397	1,167	1,571
1989-90	11	452	1,312	1,775
1990-91[5]	12	499	1,250	1,761

[1] Injuries at work to employees, self-employed persons and members of the public injured as a result of someone else's work activity reported under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations, 1985 (RIDDOR).
[2] Years commencing 1 April.
[3] As defined under RIDDOR.
[4] An injury causing incapacity for work for more than three days and reportable for employed persons only.
[5] Includes reports made to the HSE's Quarries Inspectorate.

Apart from a small number of specific dangerous occurrences, the RIDDOR require injuries rather than incidents to be reported. Information on the number of incidents involving exposure to or contact with a harmful substance is therefore not available.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment she has made of the quality of the suppliers' information on hazardous substances; and what measures the Health and Safety Executive is planning to improve the quality of manufacturers' data sheets.

Mr. McLoughlin: Manufacturers are required to provide information on hazardous substances under section 6 of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. Compliance with this requirement is routinely monitored by inspectors of the Health and Safety Executive during visits to manufacturers and their customers. A special survey, by HSE's inspectors, on compliance with section 6 was carried out during 1991-92. Information on this will be available by the beginning of 1993.

I am pleased to be able to say that on 13 July the Health and Safety Commission published proposals for new regulations dealing with the provision of information on hazardous chemicals. Among other requirements the proposed Chemicals (Hazard Information and Packaging) Regulations will, for the first time, oblige suppliers of dangerous chemicals to provide the recipient with a safety data sheet. The standard of the safety data sheet is specified in the draft regulations and is based on an EC directive. A code of practice will accompany the regulations and give advice on the completion of the safety data sheet.

I have made arrangements for the hon. Member to be provided with a copy of the consultative document.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what groups are exempt from the requirements of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988.

Mr. McLoughlin: The duties imposed by the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988 do not extend to normal shipboard activities carried out by a ship's crew under the direction of the master, nor do they apply to work outside Great Britain: for example, extractive work in the North sea.

Regulations 6 to 12, which protect persons against risks to their health, do not apply to work underground in a mine.

The self-employed are exempt from the requirements for monitoring exposure and health surveillance, regulations 10 and 11.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employers have been prosecuted under regulation 12 of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations for not providing adequate employee training in each year since 1989.

Mr. McLoughlin: Details of the number of employers prosecuted under regulation 12 of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988 are not held centrally. The only details available are for informations and complaints initiated by the Health and Safety Executive's factory and agricultural inspectorates. Their records show no informations were laid in England and Wales nor any complaints taken by procurators fiscal in Scotland under regulation 12 during April 1989 to March 1990. During April 1990 to March 1991, nine informations were laid in England and Wales or complaints taken by procurators fiscal in Scotland under this regulation.

These are the latest figures available.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average fine levied on employers in breach of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988 for each year since 1 January 1989, including the latest figure for 1992.

Mr. McLoughlin: Details of the number of employers prosecuted under the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations (COSHH) 1988 during the period April 1989 to March 1991 are not held centrally. However, the average fine levied per information in England and Wales or complaint taken by procurators fiscal in Scotland for breaches of COSHH during April 1989 to March 1990 was £600. During April 1990 to March 1991 the figure was £648. Figures are not available for 1992.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many different substances hazardous to health are estimated by the Health and Safety Executive to be at use in the workplace.

Mr. McLoughlin: Health and Safety Executive officials estimate that 20,000 to 30,000 pure chemicals and 50,000 to 100,000 proprietary mixtures would be hazardous to health. An accurate estimate of the number of substances hazardous to health cannot be given except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when regulation 6 of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations 1988 came into force; and what action the Health and Safety Executive is taking to ensure employers comply with the regulation.

Mr. McLoughlin: Regulation 6 of the Control of Substances Hazardous to Health Regulations (COSHH) come into force on 1 October 1989, but compliance with the requirement for employers to make a suitable and sufficient assessment—regulation 6.1—was deferred until 1 January 1990.

The Health and Safety Executive has committed substantial resources to promoting awareness and understanding of the regulations throughout Great Britain. It has produced a wide range of guidance material, given lectures, held seminars and made site visits to promote COSHH. The HSE surveys show that over 80 per cent. of people in Great Britain work for companies aware of the regulations.

Where it has been necessary, enforcement action for breaches of the regulation 6 of COSHH has been initiated by the HSE.

Disabled Employees

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 633 to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner) (a) how many of her Department's employees, and (b) what proportion of her Department's employees, were registered disabled in 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows. 1,464·5—2·7 per cent.—at 1 June 1989; and 1,544 at 1 June 1990—3·2 per cent.

Note

1. Staff working fewer than 10 hours per week are not included.
2. Staff working between 10 and 30 hours per week are counted as half staff units.

Shell Oil, Merseyside

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if she will place in the Library a copy of the Health and Safety Executive report on the toxic emissions at Shell Oil on Merseyside.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Health and Safety Executive has not prepared a report for publication on any toxic emissions at Shell Oil, Merseyside.

Factory Inspections

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many premises registered with the factory inspectorate have not been inspected in the last 10 years.

Mr. McLoughlin: Information about the number of fixed premises registered with the Health and Safety Executive's factory inspectorate that have not been inspected in the last 10 years is not readily available. I will write to the hon. Member.

Mining Accidents

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information she has available about accident and injury rates in the deep mining industry broken down into those directly employed by British Coal and those employed by sub-contractors; if she will arrange to collect information on accident and injury rates which will allow comparison to be made of the relative safety of employees in the industry on an up-to-date basis; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The following information has been supplied to the Health and Safety Executive by the British Coal Corporation for the year 1991-92.

	Accident rate per 100,000 manshifts
	British Coal "Men on Colliery Books"	Contractors
Fatal injuries	0·07	0·06
Major injuries	2·60	5·62
Plus 3 day injuries	18·52	23·23

Contractors normally work in the higher risk areas of the mine. A comparison between underground workers employed by British Coal Corporation and contractors' employees in similar occupations shows a major injury accident rate per 100,000 manshifts of 5·83 for contractors and 5·71 for BCC employees.

The Health and Safety Executive will continue to collect or receive information which will allow the effective direction of resources to safeguard the health and safety of all workers in the mining industry.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to her answers of 8 July, Official Report, column 243, whether the information given for 1992-93 in her answers of 9 June, Official Report, column 139, and of 23 June to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, Central, (Mr. Cousins) Official Report, column 164, is subject to the same degree of commercial confidentiality as the comparable information for each TEC.

Mr. McLoughlin: Yes. All TECs need the assurance of commercial confidentiality to safeguard their negotiations with their providers.

Upper Limb Disorder

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, if she will list, for the most recent year for which figures are available, and for each of the five years before, the number of working days lost due to work-related upper limb disorder.

Mr. McLoughlin: The data requested is not available. However, the accident and ill-health trailer to the 1990 labour force survey will provide estimates of the number of cases for different categories of work-related illness, and of work days lost, based on individuals' reports. The results of the survey are currently being analysed and will be published later this year.

ENVIRONMENT

Derelict Land Grant

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a table of expenditure on derelect land grant, cross-referenced to standard regions, showing Greater London as a separate region, for each year from 1987-88 (a) at current prices and (b) at 1987-88 prices.

Mr. Robin Squire: Derelict land grant expenditure in the period, by Department of the Environment administrative regions, is shown in the table.

(a) Derelict land grant expenditure by DOE region since 1987-88 (prices at date of approval) £ million

Pollution Control

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the number of process applications received by local authorities under (a) block one processes, (b) block two processes and (c) block three processes to date, pursuant to the requirements of part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990; and what evaluation he has made of the adequacy of resources available to local authorities to carry out their new pollution control responsibilities under the Act.

Mr. Maclean: The provisional total number of block one applications made to local authorities under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 up to 31 March this year is 3,049, according to the statistical returns sent to my Department by local authorities. The total of block two applications received by local authorities up to that date will be available soon and I will write to the hon. Member with that figure as soon as I can.

The period for applications for block three processes began on 1 April this year; no statistics are yet available for these. The cost recovery charging scheme set up under section 8(2) of the Act is intended to recover the local authorities' relevant expenditure attributable to authorisations.

In reviewing the level of fees and charges for 1992-93, my Department took into account the written submissions of the local authority associations on the charging scheme, as well as the views of industry. The Department has asked the local authority associations to submit evidence on the charging scheme again for this year's annual review of the scheme.

Environmental Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to update pollution paper No. 23, 1986, on public access to environmental information.

Mr. Maclean: My Department will be consulting shortly on draft regulations and guidance to implement EC directive 90/313/EC on the freedom of access to information on the environment.

Ozone-depleting Substances

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals Her Majesty's Government are putting forward at the current discussions at the United Nations in Geneva to tighten the Montreal protocol on substances damaging to the ozone layer.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to press for a specific target date for the introduction of HCFCs to be included within the Montreal protocol at the forthcoming conference on the revising of the Montreal protocol in Geneva.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom, together with the EC, is proposing that the phase out dates in the Montreal protocol be brought forward to the end of 1995. This is an advance on the current phase out schedules of four years for CFCs, halons and carbon tetrachloride and nine years for 1,1,1 trichloroethane. We are also proposing that HCFCs should be included in the protocol with strict controls on their areas of use, a quantitative limit on their total consumption and a final phase out date. The details of the controls will be decided by the parties during the review of the protocol in November.

New Houses, South-West

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each year since 1986 the number of houses built in each of the districts of Somerset, Devon and Cornwall (a) by local authorities and (b) by housing associations.

Mr. Baldry: Estimates of housebuilding completions by local authorities and housing associations for each local authority area in Somerset, Devon and Cornwall are shown in the publications "Local Housing Statistics" and "Housebuilding in England by Local Authority Areas". Figures for 1986 to 1988 are in tables 1·7 to 1·9 of "Housebuilding in England by Local Authority Areas: 1980 to 1989". Revised 1989 figures are in table 1(b) of the April 1991 edition—issue No. 97—of "Local Housing Statistics" and figures for 1990 and 1991 are in tables 1(a) and 1(b) of the April 1992 edition—issue No. 101. Copies of all these publications are in the Library.

European Year of the Elderly

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for his Department to celebrate in 1993, the European Year of the Elderly; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him yesterday by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, [Official Report, columns 430-31].

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he intends to review his policy of uniform business rate with respect to outdoor advertising companies;

(2) what representations he has received regarding the effect of the uniform business rate on outdoor advertising companies.

Mr. Robin Squire: I have received a number of representations on this subject since April 1990. Hoardings and other advertising stations constitute non-domestic property and will continue to be rateable, as they have been since the last century.

Policy Formulation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to increase the transparency in environmental policy formulation in the European Community during his presidency of the Environment Council.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom welcomes in principle proposals in the fifth environment action programme to improve consultation with environmental groups, business and others during the formulation of draft legislation. We will be asking the Council to endorse the programme during the United Kingdom presidency.

Draft EC Legislation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress made in draft environmental legislation inherited by the United Kingdom presidency of the European Council.

Mr. Maclean: The United Kingdom assumed the presidency on 1 July. Since then the Council's environment working group has had preliminary discussions on various matters. The first meeting of the Environment Council under the United Kingdom presidency will be on 20 October.

Coalite Plant, Derbyshire

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether HM inspectorate of pollution will publish the results of air sampling in and around the Coalite plant in Derbyshire.

Mr. Maclean: Yes. The results of the air sampling being commissioned by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will be published.

Ozone Depletion

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will acquire for his Departmental library a copy of the articles on ozone depletion and ultra-violet radiation, details of which had been sent to him.

Mr. Maclean: The Department of the Environment Library already acquired a copy of the article when it was first published.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the level of essential use attributed to CFCs and HCFCs.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I have given today to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith) and to the answer I gave on 16 June to my hon. Friend, the Member for Bury, South (Mr. Sumberg), Official Report column 443, in which I explained that the Department has commissioned a study on CFC use within the United Kingdom refrigeration and air conditioning industry. The study will identify areas of CFC use which need to continue and for which alternative technologies are not yet available. The Department of Trade and Industry has commissioned a similar study into the use of CFCs as solvents.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to quantify the use of CFCs in the United Kingdom and the extent to which current demand can be met by recycling rather than from existing production.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 16 June to my hon. Friend, the Member for Bury, South (Mr. Sumberg), Official Report column 442. In that answer I announced that the Department has commissioned a study of the use of CFCs by the United Kingdom refrigeration and air conditioning industry. This will seek to quantify the level of CFCs that the industry will need until the year 2000 and the extent to which this can be met from recycled material. The Department of Trade and Industry has commissioned a similar study into the use of CFCs as solvents.

Homelessness

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to extend the rough sleepers initiative beyond 1992-93.

Mr. Baldry: We are currently considering the future of the initiative. My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing has had a number of useful meetings with voluntary organisations and others.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total level of poll tax arrears outstanding at the end of 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Robin Squire: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Local Government and Inner Cities on 7 July to the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett), Official Report column 163.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how council tax arrears will be treated within local authority financial arrangements; and whether he has any plans to treat such arrears or interest incurred on them as expenditure for the purpose of calculating capping levels.

Mr. Robin Squire: It will be the responsibility of each billing authority to collect its arrears of council tax; we intend that any costs of collection and associated interest charges incurred in a year by the authority should fall to be met from its budget for the year, which under the Local Government Finance Act 1992 will be subject to any capping regime.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all measures which a local authority may take to collect poll tax and arrears of poll tax.

Mr. Robin Squire: Once it has obtained a liability order from a court an authority may collect unpaid community charges by any of the following methods: an attachment of earnings order; distress; deductions from income support; charging orders (for collective community charges only); bankruptcy and winding up. An authority may not pursue more than one of these remedies at the same time.

If, having attempted to levy distress, an authority is unable to find any or sufficient goods to distrain, it may seek to have the chargepayer committed to prison.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the measures which a local authority may take to collect council tax and any arreas of council tax.

Mr. Robin Squire: Once it has obtained a liability order from a court an authority may collect unpaid council taxes by any of the following methods: an attachment of earnings order; distress; deductions from income support; charging orders; attachment of councillors' allowances; and bankruptcy and winding up. An authority may not pursue more than one of these remedies at the same time.

If, having attempted to levy distress, an authority is unable to find any or sufficient goods to distrain, it may seek to have the chargepayer committed to prison.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of poll tax arrears which will exist at the end of 1992-93.

Mr. Robin Squire: My Department has not made any estimate of the level of community charge arrears at the end of 1992-93.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how poll tax arrears, outstanding at the end of 1992-93 and interest incurred on them, will be treated in future financial years; and whether he has any plans to treat outstanding arrears or interest incurred on them as expenditure for the purposes of calculating capping levels.

Mr. Robin Squire: It is the responsibility of each billing authority to collect its arrears of community charges outstanding at the end of 1992-93; we intend that any costs of collection and associated interest charges incurred by the authority in 1993-94 and subsequent years should fall to be met from its budget for the year, which under the Local Government Finance Act 1992 will be subject to any capping regime.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria his Department uses to determine a council's standard spending assessment.

Mr. Robin Squire: The method by which standard spending assessments are calculated for all authorities is set out in the "Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England)" as amended by subsequent amendment reports. These are debated and approved by the House annually and copies are available in the Library.

Housing

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for private rented properties by type of housing for the last 10 years (a) the average rent levels, (b) the level of housing benefit paid, (c) the average benefit paid per property and (d) the number of properties at the year end.

Mr. Baldry: The information available is as follows:

Year	Average weekly rent		Private and Housing Association

The source of the rent information is the "Family Expenditure Survey" (FES). The rents relate to the nearest calender year to each financial year—1983 rents are shown for 1983-84, etc. As the FES is a sample survey the estimates of rent are subject to sampling error.

Information on housing benefit is available for tenants of private landlords and housing associations together but not separately.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to seek to amend legislation or regulations relating to the transfer of homes from local authority to other forms of ownership and the terms and conditions under which such transfers took place.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning on 21 May 1992 to my hon. Friend the Member for Havant (Mr. Willets), Official Report, column 198. The consultation paper will be published shortly.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for housing association properties for each of the last 10 years (a) the average rent levels, (b) the total housing benefit paid, (c) the average benefit paid per property and (d) the number of properties at the year end.

Mr. Baldry: The information available covering rent levels and stock is set out in the table. Housing benefit statistics do not identify payments to housing association tenants separately.

BNFL, Sellafield

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent information he has received from the Health and Safety Executive following its completion of its report on the Health and Safety Executive investigation into the safety and status of radioactive waste management at British Nuclear Fuels' Sellafield plant.

Mr. Maclean: No further information has been received from the Health and Safety Executive following the publication of its report and its receipt by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Council Tenants

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of council tenants have transferred their tenancy away from local authority control since July 1991.

Mr. Baldry: Approximately 7,700 local authority dwellings in England are known to have been transferred from local authority control to housing associations and other bodies between July 1991 and March 1992, the latest date for which detailed information is available. This represents about one fifth of one per cent. of local authority housing stock in England. In addition a further 14,800 dwellings were transferred in two block transfers in April 1992.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list for council housing for each of the last 10 years (a) the average rent levels, (b) the total housing benefit paid, (c) the average benefit paid per property and (d) the number of properties at the year end;

(2) if he will list for properties transferred by agreement with the tenant to other forms of ownership for all years since transfers began (a) the average rent levels, (b) the total housing benefit paid, (c) the average benefit paid per property and (d) the total number of payments at the year end.

Mr. Baldry: The available information is as follows:

(a) Year	(b) Average weekly unrebated rent £	(c) Total housing benefit paid £ million	(d) Average weekly benefit per property £	(e) Number of properties at 31 December 000s
1983-84	14·03	1,659	6·66	4,788

[1] Provisional.

Corresponding information on properties transferred by agreement to other forms of ownership is not available.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new rights have been introduced for council tenants since July 1991 to simplify and strengthen their ability to get minor repairs affecting health, safety or crime prevention carried out by their landlord.

Mr. Baldry: Subject to enactment of the necessary legislation, we propose to introduce a new right to repair scheme. Details will be published later this year. The new scheme will enable council tenants to get small urgent repairs, affecting health, safety and security, done quickly.

Departmental Properties

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many residential properties in the London borough of Lewisham are owned by his Department; and if he will publish a list of such residential properties which are currently empty, giving the type of accommodation available, the length of time each property has been vacant, and the intended future use.

Mr. Baldry: No residential properties in the London borough of Lewisham are managed by the Department of the Environment. Information in respect of any of residential properties in the borough held and managed by other Departments as part of their departmental estate is for Departments themselves to list.

Home Energy Efficiency Scheme

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many households in the network installer area containing the Bridgend constituency have benefited from home energy efficiency scheme grants since 1991.

Mr. Maclean: Within the network installer area which contains the hon. Member's constituency, 2,341 homes have benefited from home energy efficiency scheme grant since 1 January 1991.

City Challenge

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement regarding the decisions on city challenge applications before 16 July.

Mr. Robin Squire: No.

Leeds Task Force

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Leeds, North-West (Dr. Hampson), 6 July, Official Report, column 79, if he will list the businesses assisted by the task force and show whether the assistance was (a) financial aid, (b) advice, (c) provision of information of (d) other.

Mr. Robin Squire: A list of the individual businesses assisted by the Government's former Leeds task force is maintained by the bodies providing the assistance and no central record is kept. Businesses in the task force area were assisted on over 417 occasions. Assistance took the form of advice (350 occasions), financial help (241 occasions), use of premises either purchased or refurbished by the task force (172 occasions) and help to attend or exhibit at events such as trade fairs (71 occasions). The figures total more than 417 because, in some instances, the assistance given covered more than one of the categories.

International Bible Students Association

Mr. Gorst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received expressing opposition to the proposal by the International Bible Students Association to make further developments to the site on which the Watchtower House, Mill Hill, is located; whether these proposals infringe the Government's green belt policy; and if he will order a public inquiry for the purpose of collecting local objections before making any decision on matters relating to any International Bible Students Association appeal.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend has received four representations and one petition.

The applicants have appealed to my right hon. Friend who will appoint an inspector to examine the merits of the case.

The principle parties to an appeal are normally consulted about whether to hold a public inquiry or to proceed on the basis of written representations. In this case they have opted for written representations but the local residents will have an opportunity to make their views known in writing to the inspector.

London Forum

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the London Forum.

Mr. Howard: In the Conservative Manifesto for the general election the Government undertook to convene a private sector forum to promote London internationally. I can now announce the Government's proposals in more detail.

The members of the forum will be drawn from the private sector. We intend to convene a first-class chairman and members, totalling about 12 in all, who can bring their entrepreneurial and presentational expertise to the business of promoting London.

The key functions of the forum will be to promote London internationally with a view to maximising business investment and growth in the capital, and to expanding London's role as a centre for tourism and culture. The forum will also wish to become involved in significant developments to maintain its position as one of the world's leading capital cities.

To drive this work forward, the forum will need to be supported by a strong chief executive backed by a small but high calibre team of staff. Private enterprise in London will benefit from the activities of the forum, and it will be appropriate for the forum to look to the private sector for its funding.

The forum will need to establish strong working relationships with business organisations in London, with training and enterprise councils and with existing bodies charged with arts and tourism responsibilities, particularly the London tourist board and the British Tourist Authority. It will also need to co-operate closely with local authorities and other public sector bodies in London. As well as informal links with all these bodies, it will need to establish a formal mechanism for consulting key organisations on a regular basis. A consultative group comprising all the key bodies will be set up for this purpose.

I will be taking forward these proposals for the forum over the summer, in consultation with key organisations with an interest in promoting London. A further announcement will be made in the autumn.

Pollution Information

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those categories of information in regard to pollution that his Department or predecessor Departments have asked to be withheld from public disclosure under section 5(1) of the Public Records Act 1967.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 30 June 1992]: None.

Second Hand Cars

Mr. Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to prohibit the use by organisations of the highway outside residential properties for displaying second hand cars for sale.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 8 July 1992]: I have been asked to reply.

Part III of the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1982 already enables district councils to take powers to control the selling, exposing or offering for sale, of any article on any road or footway.

Where the display of cars for sale on the highway takes place in association with off-highway land which is being used for the sale of second-hand cars in breach of planning control, local planning authorities have adequate powers to take enforcement action under the Town and Country Planning Act 1990. The parking of such vehicles on the highway may also constitute an offence if waiting restrictions apply or if the vehicles are parked dangerously or obstructively; in such circumstances, action would be a matter for the police or traffic wardens, as appropriate.

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for South Down (Mr. McGrady) on 9 June, Official Report, columns 146-47, if he will set out the methods by which the Government intend to carry out the option to return radioactive waste from British Nuclear Fuels Ltd.'s reprocessing activities for overseas customers; and whether reprocessing contracts signed by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority with overseas customers contain parallel return-to-sender options for nuclear waste arising from reprocessing.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

Since 1976, all contracts signed by British Nuclear Fuels plc (BNFL) and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority for reprocessing overseas spent fuel have contained options for the return of wastes. As envisaged in the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) on 2 May 1986 at columns 500-01, the option of substituting for less radioactive wastes an equivalent quantity, in radiological terms, of higher level wastes is being considered. BNFL has put forward proposals on these lines and the Radioactive Waste Management advisory committee has been asked for its views on the likely radiological and environmental impact for the United Kingdom.

TRANSPORT

Shipping

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the main financial and other advantages to the owners of beneficially (a) British owned and (b) non-British owned vessels of registering in the United Kingdom register, as opposed to the registers of the Crown dependencies, of registering in Crown dependencies as opposed to the United Kingdom register, of the Crown dependencies registers as opposed to the British dependent territories registers, of the British dependent territories registers as opposed to the Crown dependencies registers, of the United Kingdom register as opposed to British dependent territories registers, and of the British dependent territories register as opposed to the United Kingdom register.

Mr. Norris: The advantages which shipowners receive from any particular register will depend to a great extent upon the individual circumstances under which each shipowner is operating.

The United Kingdom aims to ensure that all British shipping registers are operated under similar rules and conditions and, in particular, that all comply with proper safety standards. The advantage of high-quality operation, plus access to British consular services and protection form the Royal Navy, apply to vessels registered on any British register.

Within this framework, the dependent territories and Crown dependencies are largely free to make such fiscal arrangements as they consider appropriate in relation either to companies generally or specifically to companies operating vessels on their registers.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what comparative examination he has made of the British tax regime as it affects (a) the Merchant Navy and (b) seafarers relative to the tax regimes of (i) France, (ii) Germany, (iii) Greece, (iv) Norway and (v) Denmark; if he will list the main differences; and what conclusion he has reached as to, respectively, the advantages and disadvantages to the British Merchant Navy of each difference;

(2) what latest comparative examination he has made of the requirements and the consequences of merchant ships registered in the (a) French, (b) German, (c) Greek, (d) Norwegian and (e) Danish registers as opposed to the United Kingdom register; if he will list the main economic and other differences for merchant ships in both requirements and consequences; and if he will list the main economic and other advantages and disadvantages in each case.

Mr. Norris: We monitor the different forms of direct and indirect subsidies granted by other countries and it is our policy in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development and EC to press for the removal of any forms of subsidy which have the effect of distorting competition.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the continuing reduction in the number of vessels on the British register; and what further action he has in mind to increase the size of the British Merchant Navy.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 13 July 1992]: My Department is constantly monitoring the state of the British shipping industry and, in close liaison with the industry itself, is prepared to consider any measure to encourage and facilitate registration in the United Kingdom which falls within its remit.

The Merchant Shipping (Registrations etc.) Bill which is to come before this House early in 1993 offers opportunities to simplify ship registration law and make provision for the registration of vessels on bareboat charter. Subject to the precise provisions of this private Member's Bill, the Government will wholeheartedly support this important measure. My Department is also participating with the industry in a thorough review of the structure of United Kingdom maritime examinations and certificates of competency. In international fora, we continue to press strongly for the removal of subsidies, restrictions on trade, and poorly enforced safety standards, in order that British shipping is given greater opportunity to compete on a fair and equal basis.

Fishing Vessels

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many fishing vessels have been registered in, respectively, England, Wales and Harwich for each of the last 20 years;

(2) how many vessels from Northern Ireland have been registered in the United Kingdom fishing vessel register each year for the last 20 years.

Mr. Norris: The Department maintains records of the registration of United Kingdom fishing vessels only since 1989 and not in the form that can readily provide the information requested. I will write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as the information has been extracted.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the number and the percentage of fishing vessels on the United Kingdom register of fishing vessels which are beneficially non-British owned; and if he will list such vessels by the country of beneficial ownership.

Mr. Norris: The information requested is as follows:

	Number
Spain	56
Holland	18
Denmark	2
Belgium	1
Total	[1]77

[1] Less than 1 per cent. of the total registered fleet.

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on how many persons have been employed as (a) skippers, (b) second hands and (c) engineers on registered United Kingdom fishing vessels in (i) England and (ii) Harwich, for each year since 1972.

Mr. Norris: The Department does not maintain such statistics.

Orange Badges

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review the regulations which apply to the issuing of orange badges with a view to enabling hospital consultants to issue a dated, temporary sticker to patients who in their medical opinion require such a facility.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Under the existing legislation, only local authorities are empowered to issue badges. The possibility of issuing temporary badges was considered during the recent review of the scheme. It was rejected in the light of representations received and difficulties that would have arisen in the successful operation of the scheme.

M25

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transort, pursuant to his answer of 2 July, Official Report, column 664, (1) if he will list the addresses of the 2,300 properties which received brochures about his plans to enlarge the M25 between junctions 12 and 15;

(2) if he will list the addresses of the 24 residential and eight commercial properties that would need to be demolished if his plans to enlarge the M25 between junctions 12 and 15 go ahead.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state what is the maximum volume of traffic he expects the M25 and the new proposed feeder roads together to take.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle [holding answer 13 July 1992]: My Department has produced forecasts of traffic flows on the M25 between junctions 12 and 15 for the year 2015. On the basis of high growth assumptions, the volumes of traffic expected to use this section of the motorway and the proposed new link roads expressed as average annual daily traffic, are as follows:

Junctions 12-13—210,000
Junctions 13-14—228,000
Junctions 14-15—220,000

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library the paper outlining the different options for solving the congestion on the M25.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I will write to my hon. Friend.

Catalytic Converters

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider making catalytic converters compulsory on all new cars.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: To meet the stricter EC emission limits that will come into force on 31 December, virtually all new petrol-engined cars first used from that date will need to make use of three-way catalytic converters, whereas new diesel-engined cars will not. EC directive 91/441, which prescribes the limits, does not specify the technology by which those limits are met.

European Year of the Elderly

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has for his Department to celebrate in 1993, the European Year of the Elderly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Throughout the Year of the Elderly, the Department of Transport will continue to work with the transport industry to plan and provide for the increasing numbers of elderly people, and those with disabilities, and to introduce measures of positive benefit to them.

Vehicle Fire Resistance

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to improve the fire resistance of car and bus interiors as outlined in the non-statutory regulations issued by the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders to car manufacturers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The European Commission has recently published a proposal for a directive relating to the burning behaviour of materials used in the construction of certain categories of motor vehicles. The proposal has not yet been considered by the Council. Although it does not cover the full range of vehicle interiors, it would be premature to act nationally before discussions have taken place.

Railway Stations (Accidents)

Mr. Merchant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents there were in the last five years involving persons falling down the gap between train and platform on railway stations.

Mr. Freeman: The information is not readily available as the Health and Safety Executive's annual report on railway safety does not classify accidents in this way.

Transport Supplementary Grant

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the level of transport supplementary grant in (a) Wiltshire and (b) Thamesdown in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The figures for Wiltshire county council are:

Year	Transport Supplementary Grant (£ million)
1983-84	1·399
1984-85	2·488
1985-86	1·391
1986-87	1·448
1987-88	1·429
1988-89	0·361
1989-90	0·109
1990-91	2·985
1991-92	2·688
1992-93	1·493

Transport supplementary grant has not been paid to Thamesdown. It is paid to local highway authorities. The local highway authority for Thamesdown is Wiltshire county council.

Network SouthEast

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in 1991-92 what proportion of Network SouthEast trains (a) arrived within five minutes of the published time, (b) arrived within five minutes of the published time within the morning and evening peak and (c) were cleaned inside and out each day.

Mr. Freeman: The answer is:

(a) 91 per cent.
(b) 85 per cent.
(c) 79 per cent.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in 1991-92 what proportion of Network SouthEast passengers were served by booking offices (a) within three minutes and (b) within five minutes in the peak.

Mr. Freeman: In 1991-92, British Rail estimates that 97·4 per cent. of passengers were served by booking offices within three minutes and within five minutes during the peak.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in 1991-92 what proportion of telephone inquiries about Network SouthEast trains were answered within 30 seconds.

Mr. Freeman: In 1991-92, British Rail estimates that 91 per cent. of telephone enquiries about Network SouthEast trains were answered within 30 seconds, an improvement of 3 per cent. on the previous year.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cardiff, Central (Mr. Jones) of 3 July, Official Report, column 729, what is the source of the data his Department provided to the International Atomic Energy Agency on the shipments of nuclear materials in 1990.

Mr. Norris: Information supplied by British Nuclear Fuels plc., Nuclear Transport Ltd., Nuclear Electric, Scottish Nuclear and AEA Technology.

Life Jackets

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to make the wearing of life jackets compulsory for all users of pleasure craft under 10 m, when under way.

Mr. Norris: Her Majesty's Coastguard has issued a brochure which states that life jackets for all on board are essential and should be worn at all times.

National Travel Card

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will establish a national travel card allowing pensioners to travel at concessionary rates on different forms of public transport without having to make arrangements with separate local or transport authorities.

Mr. Freeman: We have no plans to change the present arrangements for travel by pensioners on local bus services. Both British Rail and long-distance coach operators have their own commercial travel concessions for elderly people.

Light Dues

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conclusions he has reached following the publication of the British Ports Association study on extending light dues to pleasure craft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) on 2 June, Official Report, column 512.

Greater Crested Newts

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his discussions with English Nature about the future of great crested newts at Barnfield pond in the Huntingdon constituency, in relation to land construction.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: A meeting was held with English Nature on 23 June to discuss proposals for protecting the newt colony at Barnfield pond. Although the Department's preferred option is translocation of the newts, English Nature asked for an assessment of whether it would be possible to realign the road locally. Our consultants are to make the assessment and further discussions will take place.

British Rail Performance

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of British Rail stations display daily figures for their performance on punctuality and reliability of local services.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail does not publish daily figures for punctuality and reliability. However, in keeping with the passengers charter commitment to keep passengers informed of how services perform, "TrackRecord" displays showing details of punctuality and reliability are displayed at major stations. These are updated every four weeks.

London Underground

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on London Underground (a) what percentage of scheduled mileage was run in April, (b) what percentage of passengers had to wait more than one and a half times the scheduled interval in April, (c) what percentage of trains were cleaned internally every day and externally every three days in April and (d) what percentage of passengers had to wait more than three minutes for their tickets in April.

Mr. Norris: In the four week period up to 25 April, London Underground operated 98 per cent. of scheduled train mileage, 6 per cent. of passengers waited longer than one and a half times the scheduled interval for an underground train, 97 per cent. of underground trains were cleaned internally every service day and 82 per cent. were cleaned externally every three service days, and 1 per cent. of passengers waited longer than three minutes to purchase a ticket. In May, the Government set the Underground a new series of quality of service objectives for the next two years.

Driving Tests

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of people taking their driving test in March had waited more than six weeks for their test.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have asked the chief executive of the Driving Standards Agency to reply to the hon. Member direct.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many motor vehicles have been checked for dirty emissions during 1991; how many prosecutions resulted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Annual roadworthiness tests of cars, goods vehicles and buses, of which there are some 19 million a year, include an emissions check. Such checks were introduced for cars and light goods vehicles in November 1991. Vehicles fail tests if emissions exceed the relevant limits. In addition, in 1991-92 the vehicle inspectorate checked smoke emission during inspections of 313,781 heavy goods vehicles and 32,441 public service vehicles, and 4,778 heavy goods vehicles were subject to smoke-only checks. The inspectorate's policy is to prohibit a vehicle which is smoking excessively, although separate figures for prohibitions for this defect are not available. The police also have the power to inspect vehicle emissions and to prosecute if they see fit.

Plastic Waste

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what statutory provisions relate to the disposal of plastic waste at sea; and if he has any plans to review current legislation.

Mr. Norris: The Merchant Shipping (Prevention of Pollution by Garbage) Regulations 1988 prohibit the discharge of plastics into the sea; these regulations are amended as necessary to implement any new MARPOL —marine pollution—73/78 convention requirements.

Accidents at Sea

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many accidents have been reported for each of the last five years in British waters, involving professionally qualified crews.

Mr. Norris: The statistics maintained do not distinguish between accidents within and outside United Kingdom territorial waters.

The number of reported accidents worldwide involving United Kingdom registered merchant vessels over 100 gross tonnes or fishing vessels for the period 1987 to 1992 is:

Year	Accidents to vessels	Accidents to crew
1987	471	709
1988	641	680
1989	786	690
1990	799	718
1991	577	729

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many pleasure craft are registered to use British waters; and how many accidents have been reported for each of the last five years involving such pleasure craft.

Mr. Norris: There are 73,000 pleasure craft currently registered in the United Kingdom.

The Merchant Shipping (Accident Investigation) Regulations 1987 define, among other things, the term "pleasure craft" as a vessel primarily used for sport or recreation. The regulations do not require such vessels to report accidents.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the events surrounding the discovery of an empty fishing boat Springbok off the north Devon coast on 8 July, with particular reference to the role of the coastguard.

Mr. Norris: The empty fishing dory Springbok was reported to Swansea Coastguard on the morning of 8 July 1992. Swansea Coastguard immediately initiated the standard course of search-and-rescue action based on the initial information.

By late evening on 8 July, it was established that on 5 July Milford Haven Coastguard had received a report by the owners that the Springbok had gone missing.

Watch officers at Milford Haven did not however associate this information with the request by the marine rescue co-ordination centre, Swansea on 8 July that record be checked for reports of missing craft.

HM Coastguard, while satisfied that MRCC Swansea acted correctly in this incident, accepts that a mistake was made, and has carried out an internal inquiry to determine the reasons why the recorded information was not identified and passed on by MRSC Milford Haven on 8 July. Action has been taken in the light of this inquiry to remind officers of the correct procedure.

Rail Maintenance Grant

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the grant for permanent way maintenance and replacement on British Rail for the last financial year; and how much was actually spent.

Mr. Freeman: British Rail estimates that total permanent way maintenance and replacement costs were some £620 million for the last financial year, including £249·7 million for the public service obligation (PSO) grant supported sectors, Network SouthEast and regional railways. PSO grant is paid as a total to the board by the Government to compensate BR for maintaining its loss-making passenger services. The latest BR annual report shows that PSO grant for 1991-92 totalled £890.7 million.

Empty Housing

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many residential properties in the London borough of Lewisham are owned by his Department; if he will publish a list of such residential properties which are currently empty, giving the type of accommodation available, the length of time each property has been vacant, and the intended future use.

Mr. Norris: My Department owns 22 residential properties acquired for a trunk road improvement and all are currently let. In addition, five residential properties were transferred to the Department from the National Bus Company on its dissolution in 1991. These five are currently vacant. Three are to be demolished to enable a housing development to take place. The other two are required for the trunk road improvement scheme and consideration is being given to the possibility of letting them in the meantime. It is not my Department's practice to release publicly the address of vacant properties.

The Department also owns 14 commercial properties, with integral living accommodation, all acquired for the trunk road scheme. Twelve of these are let on a commercial basis and attempts are being made to find suitable commercial tenants for the other two.

DTI Inspections

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list any public appointments by his Department since 1987 which have involved people from organisations criticised in published reports by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors.

Mr. Norris: Such information is not available centrally but my right hon. Friend takes account of all relevant factors in making appointments.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list any advisers retained by his Department since 1987 who have been criticised in published reports by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors.

Mr. Norris: The devolved nature of my Department means that no central record of advisers is maintained. However, full account is taken of all relevant factors when the employment of advisers is being considered.

Ferry Tariffs

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to meet other EC representatives to discuss policy on ferry tariffs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: I have no such plans.

Disabled Employees

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 29 June to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner), Official Report, column 393 (a) how many of his Department's employees and (b) what proportion of his Department's employees were registered disabled in 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Norris: The numbers and proportion of registered disabled staff employed in the Department in 1989 and 1990 are:

Year
1989
Number	188
Percentage	1·35
1990
Number	186
Percentage	1·28

Nuclear Fuel Rods

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 26 June, Official Report, column 343, which Government Department keeps records of the import by air of nuclear fuel rods into the United Kingdom; and whether this information is published.

Mr. Eggar: I have been asked to reply.

Her Majesty's Customs and Excise keeps records of such imports into the United Kingdom and compiles aggregated trade statistics which are published monthly by the Central Statistical Office—overseas trade statistics of the United Kingdom: MM20 of the business monitor series. The safeguards office of the Department of Trade and Industry receives information on imports of safeguarded nuclear material, including fuel rods, and forwards this to Euratom. Information for safeguards purposes is supplied in confidence. Neither the overseas trade statistics nor the information held by safeguards office identifies separately movements by air.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Wilson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the nuclear power stations in the United Kingdom, by type, giving the radius of the emergency planning zone in each case.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is as follows:

Nuclear power station	Type	Emergency planning zone (Km)
Chapelcross	Magnox	2
Calder Hall	Magnox	2
Torness	AGR	3
Hunterston A	Magnox	2·4
Hunterston B	AGR
Dounreay	Prototype fast reactor	5
Hartlepool	AGR	1
Heysham 1	AGR	1
Heysham 2	AGR
Wylfa	Magnox	1·6
Trawsfynydd	Magnox	2·5
Berkeley	Magnox	1
Oldbury	Magnox	1
Hinkley A	Magnox	3·5
Hinkley B	AGR
Sizewell A	Magnox	2·5
Bradwell	Magnox	2·4
Dungeness A	Magnox	2·4
Dungeness B	AGR

The distances quoted are the radii of the detailed emergency planning zones around each nuclear power station in the United Kingdom. The size of these zones, formally approved by the Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate, is based on a "reference" accident for the reactor type in question. The reference accident is the maximum size of an accident that can reasonably be foreseen. On this basis, the size of the detailed emergency planning zone for steel pressure vessel Magnox stations is larger than for concrete pressure vessel Magnox and AGR stations. In the case of steel pressure vessel Magnox stations which have been de-fuelled—for example, Berkeley—the zone has been reduced. Some distances have also been extended where necessary to take into account local circumstances, topography and population distribution. This is particularly the case in Scotland.

Pottery and Ceramics

Ms. Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will identify the posts and locations of officers dealing with the pottery and ceramics industry.

Mr. Eggar: Depending on the subject matter, officers in various parts of my Department will have dealings with the pottery and ceramics industry. Further details of the restructuring of the Department, including the revised sponsorship responsibilities, will be available soon.

British Nuclear Fuels Ltd.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proportion of the purchase cost around the Sellafield reprocessing plant owned by British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. was met from public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Land acquisition by British Nuclear Fuels plc is a commercial matter for the company. The Government have made no grants to BNFL for this purpose.

Wearmouth Colliery

Mr. Mullin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give the value of capital investment at Wearmouth colliery for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation.

Power Demand

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his Department's estimate of the current demand for power set against supply (a) currently, (b) by 2000 and (c) by 2010; and how the future estimates are reached.

Mr. Eggar: The latest estimates of electricity supply and demand are available in my Department's publication

"Energy Trends". Provisional 1991 figures for total electricity available for consumption, from both public distribution and other generators, in the United Kingdom amounted to some 315 TWh which, after transmission, distribution and other losses, provided for some 290 TWh of electricity consumption.

The Department does not produce specific estimates of future energy demand, although some analysis of the energy market is carried out in order to produce scenarios for United Kingdom carbon dioxide emission. Details of the revised scenarios, including their underlying assumptions, are being prepared for publication.

Export Controls

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to increase his Department's export control office to support the agreement made at the G7 summit in Munich to extend co-operation between the G7 member states on sensitive export controls and to tighten existing arrangements on export licensing.

Mr. Needham: I am confident that the resources currently allocated to export controls are adequate. However, I would consider increasing them in the future if the United Kingdom's international export control obligations made it necessary to do so.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 3 July, Official Report, column 761, on safeguarded withdrawals of nuclear materials, if he will set out (a) how many of the 41 withdrawals were permanent, (b) what was the type of nuclear material involved in each case and the purpose of each withdrawal, (c) which nuclear facilities were involved and (d) whether Euratom and the International Atomic Energy Agency, respectively, were informed in advance about each withdrawal.

Mr. Eggar: Details of withdrawals of material from safeguards under the tripartite safeguards agreement are supplied in advance to the IAEA and Euratom on a confidential basis. It would not be in the public interest to publish this information.

Blue Arrow plc

Mr. Duncan-Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the nature of the representation which caused his predecessor to delay publication of the inspector's report on Blue Arrow plc; and in what circumstances publication will now be appropriate.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I refer to the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 30 June, Official Report, column 527. It would be inappropriate for me to indicate the nature of the representations or to comment further.

Company Accounts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what proposals he has under which public limited companies would be required to file their accounts at Companies house within three months of year end;

(2) if he will draw up proposals under which all private companies would be required to file their annual accounts at Companies house within six months of year end.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no immediate plans to reduce the period allowed for laying and delivery of accounts from the present 10 months for private companies and seven months for public limited companies. My priority has been to improve levels of compliance with the existing requirements.

Prior to the introduction of late filing penalties for accounts on 1 July, over 91 per cent. of active companies, that is, those not in liquidation or in course of dissolution, had provided Companies house with the latest accounts due. I shall, however, be seeking further improvements.

Market Values

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will propose legislation under which all large companies would be required to show market values of their assets in the balance sheet.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have no plans to do so.

Accounting Standards Board

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has for increasing the full-time membership of the Accounting Standards Board.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Membership of the Accounting Standards Board is a matter for the Financial Reporting Council.

Financial Reporting Council

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give details of the financing arrangements for the Financial Reporting Council currently in place and the arrangements which will apply from 1993-94.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: At present, broadly one third of the funding of the Financial Reporting Council is provided by the Government, one third by the accountancy profession through the Consultative Committee of Accountancy Bodies and the final third by bodies representing City interests. The chairman of the FRC is currently engaged in setting up the arrangements for 1993-94 onwards.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much is his contribution to the Financial Reporting Council's costs (a) in 1991-92 and (b) proposed for 1992-93.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Department's contribution to the costs of the Financial Reporting Council and its associated bodies in 1991-92 was £907,793. Its contribution for 1992-93 is expected to be £620,000. The figure for 1991-92 included an element towards the financial reporting review panel's legal costs fund, for which no further contribution is required in 1992-93.

Auditing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what date he first became aware that the going concern auditing guideline urged auditors to be passive.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I have noted, but do not necessarily accept, the hon. Member's view, from which I assume that he welcomes the exposure draft on this subject issued by the Auditing Practices Board on 12 May.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade under which parts of the Companies Acts company auditors owe a duty of care to individual shareholders.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The question whether auditors owe a duty of care in respect of their functions under the Companies Acts, and to whom, is a matter for the common law. I refer the hon. Member to the judgment of the House of Lords in Caparo Industries plc v Dickman and others.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will produce proposals to amend the Partnership Act 1890 to require auditing firms to publish information about their affairs.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will appoint an independent commission to investigate the handling of auditor regulation by the recognised supervisory bodies.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which parts of the Companies Acts require auditors to inform shareholders on the effectiveness of internal controls.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The expression "internal controls" does not appear in the Companies Acts. So far as company accounts are concerned, however, the duties of auditors set out in section 237 of the Companies Act 1985 include a requirement to report if they are of opinion that proper accounting records have not been kept by the company.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will propose legislation under which a company's auditors would be prevented from acting as receivers for that company.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy that his Department will offer no consultancy work to any auditing firm criticised in the inspectors' report for a period of at least five years after that report.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No. However, in considering the appointment of auditing firms any criticisms which may have been made in this way will be taken into account.

Recognised Supervisory Bodies

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will propose legislation under which unelected persons would not be able to sit on the councils of the recognised supervisory bodies under the Companies Act 1989.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: No.

The Bestwood plc

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he will be in a position to publish his Department's inspectors' report relating to The Bestwood plc.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My right hon. Friend will consider whether to publish the inspectors' report when criminal proceedings relating to the conduct of the affairs of The Bestwood plc have been concluded.

Interests (Capitalisation)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which sections and schedules of the Companies Acts refer to or require the capitalisation of interests; and whether he has these matters under review.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Paragraph 26(3)(b) of schedule 4 to the Companies Act 1985 permits interest to be included in the production cost of an asset. I have no plans to review this sub-paragraph which implements a provision in the EC fourth directive.

Petrol Market

Sir David Steel: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his response to the Petrol Retailers Association's representations concerning the review of oil company undertakings in the United Kingdom retail petrol market by the Office of Fair Trading.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The Director General of Fair Trading will in due course be advising the President on whether any changes should be considered in the existing undertakings given by the oil companies following earlier MMC reports on the supply of petrol. When such advice is received, the President will consider it very carefully.

DTI Inspections

Mr. Dobson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if he will list any public appointments by his Department since 1987 which have involved people from organisations criticised in published reports by his Department's inspectors;

(2) if he will list any advisers retained by his Department since 1987 who have been criticised in published reports by his Department's inspectors.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The information is not held centrally in the form requested. My Department takes all relevant factors into account when considering such appointments.

Consumer Organisations

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he will take, during the United Kingdom presidency of the EC, to establish the right of United Kingdom and other EC consumer organisations to play an active role in EC trade and anti-dumping procedures.

Mr. Needham: It is for the European Commission to seek the views of consumer organisations on particular cases being considered under EC trade policy instruments. Commission proposals put to the Council of Ministers should include an assessment of the impact on consumers. During its presidency the United Kingdom will ensure that the views of member states, including any views on consumer aspects, are taken into account when considering Commission proposals. My Department has regular contact with consumer organisations in the United Kingdom on trade policy matters.

Disabled Employees

Mrs. Roche: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner) of 29 June, Official Report, column 405, how many, and what proportion of his Department's employees, were registered disabled in 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Eggar: The figures for the Department, including the Business Statistics Office, 1989 only, its executive agencies and the former Department of Energy are:

Date	Number of registered disabled staff	Percentage of staff
1 June 1989	165	1·2
1 June 1990	153	1·2

Departmental Staff

Mr. Steen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many staff his Department currently employs; what are the total personnel costs; and what were the staffing levels and personnel costs in 1970.

Mr. Eggar: A total of 12,214 staff were employed in the Department of Trade and Industry on 1 June 1992. The planned expenditure on pay for 1992-93 is £254·2 million.

Details of the staffing levels of the Department of Trade and Industry at its creation on 15 October 1970 are not readily available. The manpower provision of the Department's constituent parts six and a half months earlier, at 1 April 1970, totalled 26,483 with a pay provision for 1970-71 of £53·5 million.

Radio Spectrum Reviews

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if the series of radio spectrum reviews is to continue.

Mr. Leigh: My colleagues in the Home Office, Ministry of Defence and the Scottish Office and I are pleased to announce that an independent committee, chaired by Sir Colin Fielding, will review the radio spectrum in the range 28MHz to 470MHz. This frequency range is one of the most intensively used parts of the radio spectrum and demand for access is increasing. The aim of the review, which will be the third in the current series of reviews, is to examine existing and planned use of the radio spectrum within the review range and make recommendations on that use in the light of national and international developments in radiocommunications. The committee intends to consult widely. The previous two reviews produced reports which have been widely welcomed as making major contributions towards our commitments to make more efficient use of the spectrum and my colleagues and I look forward to the report of the committee on this key frequency range.

Post Office

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the Post Office's performance against the financial and efficiency targets set for the three years 1989-90 to 1991-92.

Mr. Leigh: On 18 January 1990 the Secretary of State, in agreement with the Treasury announced profit targets for the Post Office.

The targets were set as an annual average percentage return on mean capital employed—ROCE—for the three-year period to 1991-92. The returns are determined before taxation and interest receivable on accumulated past surpluses.

The targets are flexed if the actual interest rates differs significantly from that assumed when targets were set.

The overall targets were an expression of a Government requirement that each of the Post Office businesses and the Post Office Group as a whole should be in 1991-92, work up to a profitability consistent with a real rate of return of 8 per cent. in line with Government policy on the rate of return that public sector industries should achieve on their investment. Yearly group and business targets on this basis were set and announced to the House on 18 January 1990. The Post Office achievement against these annual targets has been:

	Group	Royal Mail	Parcelforce	PO Counters
1989-90
Target percentage
As announced	2·4	1·0	2·5	6·0
After interest flexing	2·4	1·0	2·5	9·4
Actual percentage	3·7	2·2	0·6	10·0
1990-91
Target percentage
As announced	6·3	6·3	5·0	7·0
After interest flexing	6·3	6·8	4·8	11·0
Actual percentage	1·5	8·2	(67·5)	12·0
1991-92
Target percentage
As announced	10·6	11·8	10·0	8·0
After interest flexing	11·0	12·2	10·0	9·5
Actual percentage	11·8	17·5	(10·6)	10·5

The annual average percentage return for the three-year period—the actual averages being calculated on the same basis as the targets—was:

	Three-year period average to 1991-92
	Target as announced Per cent.	Target after interest flexing Per cent.	Actual Per cent.
Group	6·4	6·6	5·7
Royal Mail	6·4	6·7	9·3
Parcelforce	5·8	5·8	(25·8)
PO Counters	7·0	10·0	10·8

The three-year group achievement reflects the consequences of plans formulated in 1990-91 to change significantly the geographical and administrative structures of the Royal Mail and Parcelforce businesses, thereby focusing more sharply on the customer. Future costs of restructuring and development together with accelerated depreciation, in total amounting to £106 million, were provided for in that year. If these exceptional items are ignored, the average performance over a three-year period to 1991-92 at group level was 7·4 per cent. against a 6·6 per cent. target.

Also in 1990-91 the basis of apportioning stamp and meter income between Royal Mail and Parcelforce was revised. A new methodology using direct measurement of parcel volumes transacted at Post Office Counters resulted in an income transfer from Parcelforce to Royal Mail and revised charging arrangements for costs. While this did not affect group results, Royal Mail and Parcelforce ROCE were affected.

If the changes had not been made the ROCE results for 1990-91 would have been:

1990-91
	Target performance (per cent.)	[1] Actual performance (per cent.)
Royal Mail	6·8	4·9
Parcelforce	4·8	(35·8)

[1] Before income transfer and revised charging arrangements for costs.

Because there was a change of methodology in one year, it is not possible to produce data on a comparable basis for 1989-90 and 1991-92.

The Secretary of State also announced on 18 January 1990, following consultation with the Post Office, real unit cost—RUC—targets for Royal Mail and Post Office Counters. These businesses were targeted to achieve in 1991-92 a 1 per cent. and 2 per cent. reduction respectively in RUC against a 1988-89 base. Counters target was flexed to a 2·4 per cent. reduction to reflect movement in interest rates. No RUC targets were set for Parcelforce or for the Group.

Actual achievement against target is:

	1991-92
	Real unit cost achievement per cent.	Reduction target per cent.
Royl Mail	1·0	1·0
PO Counters	2·7	2·4

If the improve method for apportioning stamp and meter income between Royal Mail Letters and Parcelforce introduced in 1990-91 had not been effected, Royal Mail Letters' RUC performance to 1990-91 would have been different:

	Reduction/ (Increase)[1]
Interim Target	(0·5)
Result before exceptional items
Without change in measurement system	2·0
After change in measurement system	3·5
Result after exceptional items
Without change in measurement system	0·5
After change in measurement system	2·1

[1] Against a 1988-89 base

Because relevant data are not available for 1988-89 and 1991-92, no reliable assessment can be made of the effect of the changes in the measurement system on the achievement reported for RUC for 1991-92.

Insurance Company Agents

Mr. Madden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what complaints he has received alleging insurance companies are refusing to appoint agents in the United Kingdom who are of ethnic minority origin; what inquiries are being conducted into these allegations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 2 July 1992]: No complaints have been received by the Department.

Bicycles

Mr. Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the level of duty on the import of cycle components by the British cycle industry; what is the level of duty on the import of finished bicycles from China; and if he will make it his policy to equalise the treatment of British manufacturers and their Chinese competitors.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 13 July 1992]: The European Community's common external tariff on bicycle components is currently 8 per cent. The tariff on finished bicycles is currently 17 per cent. Following representations earlier this year from the United Kingdom, supported by other member states, duty was reimposed on finished bicycles from China under the generalised system of preferences—GSP—scheme, for the remainder of 1992.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy to seek the automatic enforcement of a 17 per cent. tax on the import of Chinese cycles to Britain once their quota is exceeded.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 13 July 1992]: There are agreed Community procedures for requesting the reimposition of duty on products which would otherwise be entitled to duty-free treatment under the generalised system of preferences scheme. The operation of the GSP scheme is due for review this year and the concerns of the bicycle manufacturers, along with those of other sectors of industry, will be considered during discussions in the Community.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received from the cycle industry about dumping practices in Britain.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 13 July 1992]: The Department has received a number of representations from the United Kingdom bicycle industry about the alleged dumping of bicycles from China and Taiwan. The European Commission, which is responsible for investigating anti-dumping complaints, is currently investigating one from the European Bicycle Manufacturers' Association which also represents United Kingdom firms. We are currently waiting for the Commission to consult us on the preliminary findings of its investigation.

Public Bodies

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which non-departmental public bodies are sponsored by his Department; which of these are audited by the National Audit Office; which firms of private accountants audits each of the others; by what method of tendering contracts to such firms are awarded; and for what duration.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 10 July 1992]: Details of non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department, including audit information, are set out in "Public Bodies 1991", a copy of which is in the library of the House.

Audit arrangements for the bodies which are not audited by the National Audit Office are:

Public Body	Auditor
British Hallmarking Council	BDO Binder Hamlyn
National Consumer Council	Coopers & Lybrand
Gas Consumers' Council	Coopers & Lybrand
English Industrial Estates Corporation	Ernst & Young
Hearing Aid Council	Grant Thornton
Policyholders' Protection Board	Touche Ross & Co.

Appointments to audit are made after a competitive tender except where the size of the audit and the likely fee is small. Reappointments are usually on an annual basis. Performance of the auditors is regularly reviewed and a new competition would be held if the findings indicate that there would merit in again testing the market.

Gas and Electricity

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the impact of European Community-wide transparency in gas and electricity markets on United Kingdom gas and electricity consumers at (a) domestic tariff levels, (b) medium-sized commercial consumers and (c) heavy industry.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 13 July 1992]: The European Community directive on the transparency of gas and electricity prices—Council directive 90/377/EEC—covers only prices charged to industrial end-users. A commentary on the prices charged at 1 July 1991 was included in the May 1992 issue of "Energy Trends", copies of which are available in the Library.

Electricity Prices

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the change in real terms in electricity prices paid by industry as a whole between 1986 and 1991.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 13 July 1992]: Average electricity prices paid by industry fell in real terms by 15·6 per cent. between 1986 and 1991.

Iraqi Funds

Mr. Beggs: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what proposals he has received for the release of blocked Iraqi funds for the purposes of funding trade in goods not embargoed under United Nations Security Council resolutions 706 and 712; and what advice his Department has given to United Kingdom firms on such trade.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 13 July 1992]: I have received several inquiries concerning the release of Iraqi funds from restricted accounts in the United Kingdom to pay for the supply of humanitarian goods to Iraq.

Responsibility for administering restricted Iraqi accounts is delegated by Her Majesty's Treasury to the Bank of England.

When my Department considers whether to grant a licence to export humanitarian goods to Iraq, such as foodstuffs and medicines, the question of means of payment is not one of the criteria which is necessary for that decision. How the goods will be paid for is a matter for the exporter and the customer, bearing in mind the restrictions imposed by United Nations sanctions against Iraq.

Pyramid Selling

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will reconsider the use of the term "legal pyramid selling scheme", with regard to multi-level marketing companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Leigh [holding answer 8 July 1992]: This term "legal pyramid selling scheme" is not used in the Pyramid Selling Schemes Regulations 1989, and it is not for me to prescribe when it should or should not be used. In common use, the terms "pyramid selling", "multi-level marketing" and "network marketing" appear to be interchangeable. The promoter may choose how to describe his own scheme.

Deregulatory Unit

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the progress his deregulatory unit has made during 1992.

Mr. Neil Hamilton [holding answer 7 July 1992]: A report on progress under the deregulation initiative for the period up to 30 June 1992 is currently in preparation. A copy will be placed in the Library of the House when it has been completed. A report of the achievements under the initiative over the past 18 months is planned. for publication in the autumn.

Sellafield

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the total discharges of radioactivity, in terms of total activity, from the Sellafield plant in each year since 1985; and if he wil make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I have been asked to reply.

The data requested by the hon. Member are in British Nuclear Fuel's annual report of "Radioactive Discharges and Monitoring of the Environment", copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Bankers Charter

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he proposes to adopt the bankers charter proposed by the EC Competition Commissioner into his own citizens charter proposals.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply.

No. As I told the House on 3 June at column 927, while the Government fully support the intention of improving the speed and efficiency of cross-border payments, which lie behind the EC Commission's proposed charter, we believe that the emphasis—as stressed in the Commission's report—should be on the banks introducing their own initiatives in this sector.

HEALTH

Dentistry

17. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she next proposes to meet the British Dental Association to discuss dentists' contracts.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My Department is in frequent contact with the British Dental Association on a range of issues. The principles of the dental contract are firmly in place, but we have always been prepared to make changes where necessary.

20. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the current situation regarding dentists' fees and remuneration.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government remain firmly committed to dentistry within the national health service and we shall take whatever steps are necessary to ensure that the NHS dental services remain available. For the future, we are looking to the fundamental review to produce a system which will more fairly and more effectively remunerate all NHS dentists for the important work they do.

21. Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will pay an official visit to south Cumbria to discuss provision of dental treatment within the national health service.

Dr. Mawhinney: We are keeping in touch with all parts of the country about the provision of dental treatment within the national health service.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the consequence for children's dental health of (a) the reduction in orthodontic multiband fees and (b) the lowering of the limit on prior approval.

Dr. Mawhinney: We do not believe there will be any consequence for children's dental health. The range of treatments available to children under the national health service remains the same, and the changes to the prior approval requirement will not significantly increase total treatment time.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many additional staff will be employed at the Scottish and English dental practice boards to process prior approval estimates following the introduction of the £200 limit;

(2) how many days, on average, it will take to process prior approval requests for dental treatment.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) on 13 July. Information relating to Scotland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of orthodontic courses of treatment, excluding examination, diagnosis and retention will be subject to the new prior approval restriction.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Dental Practice Board has estimated that some 30 per cent. will require prior approval.

NHS Building Projects

18. Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many national health service building projects have been completed in England since 1979; and how many are under way.

Dr. Mawhinney: More than 600 capital schemes, each costing more than £1 million, have been completed in the national health service since 1979. A further 400 such schemes are in various stages of planning, design and construction, of which 105 are currently under construction.

Learning Disabilities (Trusts)

19. Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the appropriateness of granting trust status to hospitals caring for persons with learning disabilities.

24. Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the appropriateness of granting trust status to hospitals caring for persons with learning disabilities.

Mr. Yeo: All units applying for national health service trust status are carefully assessed by a stringent set of criteria. These include:

identifying the benefits and improved quality of service;
ensuring the management has the skills to run the trust;
ensuring that senior professional staff, including consultants are involved in the management of the trust; and assessing the financial viability of the trust.

Patients Charter

22. Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what further improvements in waiting times the Government intend to make under the patients charter.

Mr. Sackville: On 12 May 1992, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, announced our intention to follow up the successful introduction of the two year guarantee with a new and additional guarantee that, from 1 April 1993, no-one should have to wait more than 18 months for a hip or knee joint replacement, or a cataract operation.

Life Expectancy

23. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average life expectancy in the United Kingdom; and what figures she has for (a) life expectancy in 1979 and (b) the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development average.

Mr. Sackville: In 1990 the average life expectancy at birth in the United Kingdom was 72·8 years for men and 78·5 years for women. This compares with 70·1 and 76·2 years respectively in 1979.

Due to lack of information for certain countries an average figure for all OECD countries is not available. However, in 1989 the average life expectancy for men across 19 OECD countries was 72·8 years, and for women 79·2 years.

AIDS

25. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by how much specific grants to local authorities for spending on AIDS and mental illness services will increase in 1992-93; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The specific grant available nationally to local authorities for people with AIDS/HIV increased by £5·1 million, or 43·5 per cent. in real terms, between 1991-92 and 1992-93. The grant for people with mental illness increased by £10·4 million, or 43·1 per cent. in real terms, over the same period.

Community Care

26. Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she last met the Association of Directors of Social Services to discuss the implementation of the community care reforms.

Dr. Mawhinney: I last met with the Association of Directors of Social Services on 8 June.

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has had from home owners, residents and local authorities about the funding to be made available for the implementation of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Many representations about community care funding have been received from individuals, home owners, local authorities and representative organisations. Announcements about funding for the personal social services in 1993-94, including resources for community care and their distribution, will be made in the context of this year's local authority expenditure settlement.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of social services clients had an individual care plan on 1 April.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not available.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will take steps to ensure that the provision of care for the highly dependent client remains the statutory responsibility of district health authorities; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The role of health authorities in providing services for highly dependent people was reaffirmed in "Caring for People". As purchasers of health care, health authorities have a duty to secure the best possible services for all their residents, including highly dependent people, taking into account local circumstances, priorities and available resources.

Junior Doctors

27. Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the average hours worked in any week by a junior hospital doctor in 1979 and the most recent year available; and what plans she has to reduce the figure.

Dr. Mawhinney: In 1979 junior hospital doctors in England and Wales were contracted to be on duty for an average of 89 hours per week. At 30 September 1990, the latest date for which information is available, this average had fallen to 79 hours per week.

Following the launch of the new deal for junior doctors in June 1991 we have an agreed timetable for reducing the hours of duty of doctors and dentists in training. Our target is to reduce maximum average contracted hours of duty to 83 per week for those working on-call rotas, 72 per week for those working partial shifts and 60 per week for those working full shifts by 1 April 1993. They are to be reduced further by 31 December 1994, to 72 per week for those working on-call rotas in hard-pressed posts, 64 hours per week for those working partial shifts and 56 hours per week for those working on full shifts. Subject to review, our aim is to reduce the maximum average contracted hours of junior doctors working on-call rotas in posts which are not considered to be hard-pressed to 72 per week by 31 December 1996. However in certain circumstances higher specialist trainees may continue to contract for up to 83 hours after this date. These measures will further reduce the average weekly contracted hours of junior doctors.

Regardless of the contracted hours of duty for individual posts we intend that from 31 December 1994 junior doctors should not normally be expected to work for more than an average of 56 hours per week.

Complaints Procedure

28. Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the effectiveness of the national health service complaints procedure.

Mr. Sackville: We keep the hospital and family health service complaints procedure under review, and are encouraging management and staff to respond more positively to oral and written complaints. The procedure was last updated by the patients charter, which introduced the right to have any complaint about NHS services investigated and to receive a full and prompt written reply from the chief executive or general manager. Authorities will also have to record the number of complaints received and the response time. We are looking at ways to make complaints procedures more friendly and responsive to the needs of individual patients.

Smoking

29. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what new initiatives she intends to introduce to reduce illnesses and deaths caused by smoking.

Dr. Mawhinney: The "Health of the Nation" White Paper commits us to ambitious targets to reduce smoking further. It sets out a comprehensive strategy to achieve these targets, including action on price, health education, ensuring effective controls on advertising and a greater national health service role in reducing smoking.

Health Service, London

30. Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on progress on the Tomlinson inquiry into London's health service.

Dr. Mawhinney: Sir Bernard Tomlinson and his team are making excellent progress and are due to report to my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Health and for Education in the autumn.

Metabolic Disease

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will make it her policy to maintain the symbiosis of research and service provision in the detection of inherited metabolic disease;

(2) if she will make it her policy to establish mandatory quality assessment schemes to ensure adequate standards of service for the detection of inherited metabolic disease;

(3) what representations she has received from the British Inherited Disease Group concerning the SAS system; and if she will make a statement on the operation of the SAS system and its relevance to regional services for the detection of inherited metabolic disease.

Mr. Sackville: We have received no such representations. The supra regional assay service (SAS) contracts with purchasing authorities to provide rare or infrequently requested laboratory tests. It is for purchasing authorities to ensure that they specify in contracts, and monitor, the quality elements which they require.

The national health service management executive is currently reviewing issues arising from contracting for specialised services, including genetic services.

Infant Medication

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of whether enough information is now available to the public to justify the introduction of the 5ml dilution of infants' medication.

Dr. Mawhinney: The 5ml dilution convention ended on 1 July. Where a dose of less than 5ml is prescribed the patient will be supplied with an oral syringe. We are satisfied that sufficient information is available to the public to explain the change.

GP Fund Holders

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps she has taken to ensure that there is adequate monitoring of general practitioner fund holders by family health service authorities where they provide services other than general medical services including (a) ophthalmology and (b) physiotherapy services; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she will impose on family health service authorities an obligation to monitor the standards of all services provided by general practitioner fund holders, including services other than primary care; and if she will arrange for the results of such monitoring to be publicly available locally.

Dr. Mawhinney: The National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 gave family health service authorities a duty to monitor the expenditure of general practitioner fund holders (for whatever purpose) and to institute audit and review where appropriate. Publication of the outcome is for local decision. Additionally, regional health authorities must ensure compliance with the terms of recognition of a general practitioner as a fund holder, including fund holders' obligation to satisfy themselves that the provider of any service they purchase is competent and has appropriate qualifications, training and experience.

Regional Funding

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will reassess the method chosen to allocate funds to regions and districts in England so as to implement a different method of allocation which reflects more closely the differing health needs of each of those regions and districts; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The principle of funding health authorities in proportion to the number of people for whom they are responsible is well-established. The Department keeps under review the details of the method by which population figures are weighted to allow for differences between populations of the same size. This method rests on a statistical analysis of census and national health service data. The 1991 census will provide the opportunity for reassessment when the results are available in a suitable form in 1993.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will increase levels of staffing and resources for community health councils to meet the increased demands on its service resulting from the citizens and patients charters.

Mr. Sackville: Regional health authorities are responsible for allocating resources to community health councils (CHCs), and for determining the appropriate staffing levels. The deputy chief executive of the national health service management executive wrote to regional general managers on 6 March about the role of CHCs and reminded them to ensure that CHCs were properly resourced.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to review cases where a community health council considers that its observers are being unreasonably excluded from (a) trust, (b) district health authority and (c) regional health authority meetings; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Community health councils (CHCs) have the right to attend any national health service authority or trust meetings which are open to the public. It is matter for decision by authorities and trusts whether CHCs will be invited to attend meetings which are otherwise closed to the public. We have no plans to change these arrangements.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action her Department is currently carrying out to increase the public's awareness of community health councils; and if she will make it her policy to fund a campaign for this.

Mr. Sackville: Community health councils (CHCs) are independent statutory bodies and are responsible for their own publicity.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will reconsider extending the current terms of office of community health councils to three four-year terms; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Members of community health councils (CHCs) are ineligible for reappointment after the completion of two consecutive four-year terms of office. We believe that this encourages a combination of experience and fresh enthusiasm among the membership of CHCs. We have no plans to change these arrangements.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will introduce legislation to improve the statutory rights of community health councils in their relationship with (a) purchasers, (b) improved access to information, (c) automatic observer status on district and regional health authorities public and closed meetings and (d) membership of appropriate health authority working groups.

Mr. Sackville: Legislation is not necessary. My hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and the deputy chief executive of the national health service management executive have both written to regional health authorities to remind them of the importance of ensuring that community health councils play a full part in the reformed NHS.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy for community health councils to have full responsibility for their non-staff budget with full details of budgets being submitted in annual reports of the community health councils; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Regional health authorities are responsible for allocating resources to community health councils. The detailed arrangements for managing community health council budgets are for local decision.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will amend the Community Health Council Regulations 1985 to provide those councils with the right of inspection of those parts of general practitioners' premises where minor surgery is performed under general practitioners' contracts; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Community health councils do not have a statutory right of access to general practitioners' premises, and we have no plans to change these arrangements.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will issue immediate guidance to health authorities regarding their relationship with community health councils.

Mr. Sackville: Existing guidance was issued in 1990. In addition, my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and the deputy chief executive of the national health service management executive wrote to health authorities in February and March about the role of community health councils in relation to health authorities.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what action she is taking to ensure that community health councils have sufficient knowledge of the terms of the relevant contracts covering patients who are placed with national health service funding under trusts or privately-run services; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she will issue guidelines to health authorities encouraging them to supply community health councils with the relevant terms of contracts so as to facilitate accurate monitoring by them of the care of patients being treated by a particular service; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Contracts between health authorities and providers are public documents available to community health councils. The deputy chief executive of the national health service management executive wrote to health authorities in March emphasising the importance of community health councils having access to district health authority contracts with providers.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will introduce legislation so that community health councils could nominate specific members to monitor the national health service purchaser/provider split in local planning and purchasing functions with different specified members to monitor the providing process; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Existing legislation enables community health councils (CHCs) to monitor all services purchased and provided by the local district. It is for individual CHCs to decide how to deploy their members on different tasks.

Creuzfeldt-Jakob Disease

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will launch an investigation into the circumstances under which a number of height-deficient children were injected with Creuzfeldt-Jakob disease during clinical trials conducted by the national health service.

Mr. Yeo: The background to this problem is already well documented in medical journals: the article "Friendly fire in medicine: hormones, homografts and Creuzfeldt Jakob disease" in The Lancet (vol. 340: July 4 1992) includes a history and a full list of references. We are supporting research into the origins and transmission of CJD and keep all relevant developments under review.

A copy of The Lancet is available in the Library.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her latest estimate of the extent of the contamination of human growth hormone with Creuzfeldt-Jakob disease.

Mr. Yeo: So far six cases of Creuzfeldt-Jakob disease (CJD) have been confirmed among the 1,908 patients treated with human derived pituitary growth hormone and two more are suspected, one of them a patient who has recently died. I am advised that further cases are possible, but no reliable estimates of the extent of the problem can be made until we know more about the origins of CJD and its transmission.

Human Growth Hormones

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received about the indiscriminate removal of pituitary glands by mortuary technicians for human growth hormone processing.

Mr. Yeo: None.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the need for guidelines on the safe selection of glands used to make human growth hormone was first identified; when the guidelines were issued; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The need for selectivity in the collection of pituitaries was recognised from the time the treatment was first used. At the start of its trial, in 1958, the Medical Research Committee issued a direction that diseased pituitaries should not be collected. In 1977 it issued more specific criteria which excluded the collection of pituitaries from donors believed to have been suffering from various communicable or degenerative diseases. In 1981 the Department, which by then had taken over arrangements for the supply of the growth hormone, issued a new direction which specifically mentioned Creuzfeldt-Jakob disease among the exclusion criteria.

Treatment Assessments

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment has been made of the expected demand for hospitals or community-based health service treatment over the next decade in Dewsbury, Huddersfield and Calderdale;

(2) what assessment has been made of under or over capacity in the provision of hospital-based care over the next decade in Dewsbury, Huddersfield and Calderdale; and what capital developments are proposed.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally. Planning for the development of local health and community services is a matter for the health authorities concerned. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Dewsbury, Huddersfield and Calderdale health authorities for details.

Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy that the orders arising from section 30(9) of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990 will be laid before Parliament before 16 July.

Mr. Sackville: It is our intention that these regulations, which are currently in preparation, will be subject to a wide consultation in the autumn before they are laid before Parliament.

Census

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the progress of the 1991 census.

Mr. Sackville: Counts of the population present on census night were published in the preliminary reports in July 1991. These provisional figures were obtained from summaries prepared by the local field staff.

Computer processed results from the 1991 census are being processed on a county-by-county (England and Wales) or region-by-region (Scotland) basis, and monitors containing summary statistics on the census topics for which answers were fully processed have been published for 11 counties and one Scottish region.

"Census Newsletter, No. 22," which is due to be published during July, will contain the planned publication dates for the remaining monitors. A copy will be placed in the Library. The newsletter will also include a timetable for the availability and publication of the other main products, such as the small area statistics, county reports and national reports, and reports on specific census topics. There are two small changes from the timetable given in my reply to the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Tipping) on 18 June at column 672. The last county monitor is now scheduled to be published in October, and the last small area statistics released in November.

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the overall percentage of forms returned under the 1991 census.

Mr. Sackville: The census validation survey will report on census coverage later this year. This work will be published in the autumn.

Nursing and Residential Homes

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will indicate the extent to which the national health service budget will be altered to reflect the transfer to local councils of responsibility for people in nursing and residential homes.

Mr. Yeo: Funding for health authorities in 1993-94 and later years will be decided in the public expenditure survey in the normal way.

Resources

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the current and projected levels of hospital and community-based resources within Dewsbury, Huddersfield and Calderdale available to meeet current and expected health needs.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir Brian Askew, the chairman of Yorkshire regional health authority, for details.

Rampton Hospital

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people have died in Rampton hospital during the last 10 years; and from what causes.

Mr. Yeo: A total of 46 people have died while patients of Rampton hospital in the past 10 years. The causes of death recorded are:

	Number
Natural causes	36
Suicide	5
Open verdict following inquest	3
Final inquest not yet held	2

HIV

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what arrangements she is making to enable payments to be made under the special scheme for people infected with HIV as a result of national health service blood transfusion or tissue transfer.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Parliamentary approval to this new expenditure, announced on 17 February, will be sought in a supplementary estimate for the Department of Health administration, miscellaneous health services and personal social services, England vote (class XIII vote 3). Pending that approval, expenditure estimated at £1·2 million will be met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the implications for Government policy of the recent case in Birmingham of the transmission of HIV infection.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Government recognise that HIV/AIDS is perhaps the greatest new public health challenge this century. The Government have consistently identified the threat of HIV/AIDS. This country is a recognised world leader in the action it has taken.

Between 1985-86 and 1992-93 the Government have allocated nearly £700 million to health and local authorities for the development of HIV-related services as well as over £73 million to developing a national AIDS public education campaign.

Establishing better sexual health—within which context the spread of HIV can best be minimised—is one of the five key target areas in the "Health of the Nation" White Paper. This reflects the importance the Government attach to combatting the spread of HIV.

The Birmingham case has highlighted the fact that heterosexuals cannnot ignore the risk of HIV. Past and present experience of sexually transmitted diseases indicates that the public health, and that of individuals, is best served if people at risk of infection and their sexual partners can come forward freely for confidential advice, testing and help.

The Government will take the issues raised by the Birmingham case, and other recent developments, carefully into account. These issues will be reflected in the current work of the ministerial AIDS action group which is due to report in the autumn.

Tobacco

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she will publish the fifth annual report of the Committee for Monitoring Agreements on Tobacco Advertising and Sponsorship.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Committee for Monitoring Agreements on Tobacco Advertising and Sponsorship has submitted its fifth report to the United Kingdom Health Ministers and to the Secretary of State for National Heritage. Copies have been placed in the Library. I am very grateful to the committee, and particularly the chairman, Sir John Blelloch, for their valuable work in continuing to monitor the agreements. The report shows that the industry has continued to honour its commitments.

Geneticists

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of the need of central laboratories for clinical geneticists.

Mr. Sackville: Most clinical genetics laboratories are based in regional genetics centres. Laboratory services in respect of complex or rare disorders are provided by a national centre, such as the National Haemoglobinopathy reference laboratory. This laboratory is the national reference centre for carrier diagnosis and prenatal diagnosis of complex haemoglobinopathies, notably the thalassaemias and sickle cell disease. The pattern of provision will depend to a large extent on the pace of developments.

Genetic Disorders

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proposals she has for the provision of genetic registers, and enabling such registers to play a role in the elimination of potential carriers of disease;

(2) what provision she is making to provide genetic counselling for (a) individual patients, (b) family groups and (c) relatives of victims of genetic disorders.

Mr. Sackville: Genetic registers and genetic counselling are integral components of the rapidly developing speciality of national health service genetic services. The level of provision of health care services, including genetic services, is a matter for health authorities to decide. As purchasers of services, health authorities are in the best position to make these decisions on the basis of their assessment of local needs.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) doctors and (b) nurses are currently trained in the detection and treatment of genetic disorders; and what plans she has to increase the numbers.

Mr. Sackville: The care and treatment of patients suffering from genetic disorders is shared between a range of professionals including hospital specialists, GPs and nurses. In 1990, the latest year for which figures are available, there were 76 hospital doctors (47·4 whole time equivalent) specialising in the treatment of genetic disorders in England. Quotas for the number of training posts are set on the basis of advice from the joint planning advisory committee which includes representatives of the Royal colleges, the medical profession and the national health service.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in the United Kingdom suffer from genetic disorders.

Mr. Sackville: Genetic factors are present in all human disorders to varying degrees, even in conditions as relatively minor as colour blindness. It is therefore not practicable to analyse all disorders in genetic terms. One of the most common and most serious single gene disorder is cystic fibrosis which is estimated to be present in one in 2,000 unborn children.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what study she has made of the practice of payment from one health authority to another in paying for tests relating to genetic disorders.

Mr. Sackville: The first point of contact for patients requiring genetic advice is usually their GP, who will refer them for tests, if appropriate. The funding arrangements are therefore the same as for any other GP referral. The national health service management executive has agreed with general managers that regions should develop appropriate arrangements to assure the purchase of specialist services, both in NHS trust hospitals and in those managed directly by districts.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans she has to promote the early adoption of new techniques of diagnosis management, and treatment of the effect of genetic disease, including proven gene therapy;

(2) what strategy she has to use new molecular knowledge in surgery and treatment; and what training is given to those who use manipulative techniques in this field.

Mr. Sackville: An important part of the Department's research and development strategy is to ensure that the best use is made of the high quality of our medical research to improve patient care. The Government consider that it is important that applications of new molecular biological techniques to the diagnosis, management and treatment of patients should be subjected to stringent evaluation before they are adopted for use in clinical practice.

The Committee on the Ethics of Gene Therapy was set up in 1989 to provide advice to the United Kingdom Health Ministers on scientific and medical developments which have a bearing on the safety and efficacy of human gene modification. The committee's report was published in January this year when the Government announced that they would be consulting professional, scientific and lay bodies on the committee's recommendations. The consultation process was completed on 18 May and the Government are currently studying the responses.

Each of the Royal colleges and their faculties takes the lead on professional training within its own specialty. Training in molecular biological techniques is available for clinicians in training programmes organised by the Medical Research Council, the Wellcome Trust and other bodies.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to ensure that opted-out hospitals maintain responsibility for training and research for medical and nursing staff.

Dr. Mawhinney: Trusts are expected to play a full role in teaching and training, including both undergraduate and postgraduate medical and dental education and other professional training and research. Health authorities or purchasers are expected to take account of teaching and research interests in their purchasing decisions.

Mr. Stevenson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of beds are sold to the private sector by opted-out hospitals.

Mr. Sackville: National health service hospital trusts have powers to authorise the use of beds for private patients, subject to the statutory requirement that there is no significant interference with the performance by the trust of its obligation under NHS contracts. Beds are not sold to the private sector and remain available to NHS patients.

Mr. Godsiff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what legal limits there are on the number of pay beds in hospital trusts.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Mr. Williams) earlier today.

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on progress in addressing the conclusions about the workings of the conscience clause of the Abortion Act 1967 made by the Select Committee for Health in its tenth report of Session 1989-90.

Mr. Sackville: The Government's response to the Select Committee's report was published in May 1991. The action promised in paragraph 10 of the report was undertaken immediately, and the monitoring referred to in paragraphs 5 and 12 of the response continues.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the percentage of hospital discharges, after abortion not legally induced, to live births for 1967-68, 1979 and the last year for which figures are available; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 7 July 1992]: The information requested is shown in the table.

Percentage of hospital discharges after abortion (not legally induced) to livebirths for 1967, 1968, 1979 and 1985 England and Wales (except 1985, England only)

Year	ICD	Description	Number of discharges	Number of livebirths	Rate per 100 livebirths
1967	650·0 + 651·0	Spontaneous abortion	67,816	832,164	8·15
	650·2 + 651·2	Abortion induced for other reasons[1]	285	832,164	·03
	650·3 + 651·3	Other abortion	1,800	832,164	·22
1968	642	Abortion induced for other reasons[1]	550	819,272	·07
	643	Spontaneous abortion	5,951	819,272	·73
	644	Abortion not specified as induced or spontaneous	60,824	819,272	7·42

[2] England only.

Note:
Data for 1967 are based on the seventh revision of the International Classification of Diseases. Data for 1968 are based on the eighth revision, and data for 1979 and 1985 are based on the ninth revision. The data for the three periods in question are not necessarily comparable.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the percentage of legal abortions to live births for 1967-68, 1979 and the last year for which figures are available; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 7 July 1992]: The information requested for 1968, 1979 and 1991 is shown in the table.

Percentage of legal abortions, under the Abortion Act 1967, to livebirths for 1968, 1979 and 1991—England and Wales

Year	Number of abortions	Number of livebirths	Rate per 100
1968[1]	23,641	539,259	4·38
1979	149,746	638,028	23·47
1991[2]	177,642	699,217	25·41

[1] The number of abortions for 1968 is for the period 27 April 1968 (when the Act came into force) to 31 December 1968. The number of livebirths for 1968 is for 1 May 1968 to 31 December 1968.
[2] The number of abortions for 1991 is a provisional figure.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to distinguish in the annual abortion statistics between abortions conducted solely with RU486 and those conducted with RU486 and in addition prostaglandins or D and C and D and E.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 13 July 1992]: Published statistics state the method of termination used. From 1992, statistics will include terminations using antiprogesterone (RU486) with prostaglandin.

Genetic Therapy

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what policy conclusions have been drawn in relation to genetic therapy and genetic counselling from the conference "Our Genetic Future" held at BMA House on 30 June.

Mr. Sackville: The conference made a valuable contribution to discussion of the implications of gene therapy and genetic counselling. The Government are currently considering their response to the report of the Committee on the Ethics of Gene Therapy (Cm 1788) and will take account of the conclusions reached at the conference.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the recent letter from the chief medical officer to public health authorities on genetic therapy.

Mr. Sackville: The most recent letter on gene therapy sent to the health authorities was issued on 16 January 1992. It invited comments on the recommendations in the report of the Committee on the Ethics of Gene Therapy (Cm 1788). A copy of the letter is attached to Department of Health press release H92/20 which is available in the Library.

DNA Information

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy on the provision of DNA information about patients to insurance companies.

Mr. Sackville: Any information which is obtained as a result of DNA testing is no less confidential than other personal health information and should not be disclosed to insurance companies without the patient's prior consent.

Thalassaemia

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision is made for those suffering from thalassaemia.

Mr. Sackville: Health care for those suffering from thalassaemia is provided by district health authorities in the light of the health needs of their resident populations.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she has any plans for hospital closures in the London area; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Sir Bernard Tomlinson is currently carrying out a review of the health and medical education needs of the capital. His report will form the basis for decisions about the future pattern of hospital provision in London.

Domiciliary Care

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to monitor the provision of domiciliary care to ensure it is of an adequate standard.

Mr. Yeo: Local social services authorities are responsible for the provision and management of personal social services including domiciliary care services. It is for each authority to ensure that services they supply or arrange are of adequate standard.

Care Homes

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide information on the unit costs of residential places provided by each local authority in England and Wales, with the comparable unit costs for private homes.

Mr. Yeo: The local authority analysis of gross weekly cost per place filled excluding capital charges in local authority homes for elderly people in 1989-90, the latest date for which information is available, is given in "Key Indicators of Local Authority Social Services 1989-90", a copy of which is available in the Library.

These unit costs, which relate to England only, are based on data collected by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy.

Information relating to local authorities in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Wales.

Information about costs in the independent sector was produced in the Price Waterhouse report commissioned by the Department of Social Security, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement about how residents and potential residents and their next of kin will be informed of which services and facilities, as laid down in regulation 10 of SI (1984) No. 1345, should be provided and what complaints procedure will operate in a regulated small home.

Mr. Yeo: We are considering responses to the consultation document issued earlier this year about the regulations which should apply to small residential care homes once the Registered Homes (Amendment) Act 1991 is brought into force. Our intention is that the regulations should require that local authority registers should show whether a home is registered as a small home. Those consulting the registers will then be able to see which statutory requirements apply. More detailed information about individual homes will generally be available from the people running those homes and from other, independent sources.

We intend that the same requirements about complaints procedures should apply to registered small homes as already apply to larger homes.

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide statistics on the proportion of elderly people aged over 75 years who die within three months after being moved from one residential home to another.

Mr. Yeo: This information is not collected centrally.

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Registered Homes (Amendment) Act 1991 regulations and commencement order will be laid before the House.

Mr. Yeo: Regulations amending the Residential Care Homes Regulations 1984 for the purpose of their application to small homes will be laid in the next few weeks. We hope to make the commencement order specifying when the Registered Homes (Amendment) Act 1991 will be brought into force at about the same time.

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what precautions she intends to take to safeguard residents from eviction as a result of an owner of a small home being evicted himself for rent or mortgage arrears, by fraudulently obtaining multi-mortgages in order to run a number of small homes.

Mr. Yeo: It is for local authorities to ensure that anyone in need of residential care not otherwise available is properly provided for.

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps after 1 April 1993, a local authority would have to take to safeguard elderly residents, before refusing or terminating a contract with a home owner.

Mr. Yeo: It will be for local authorities to devise their procedures for placing and reviewing contracts. The Government will expect local authorities to behave reasonably and sensitively, and give sufficient notice of their contracting policies and decisions. This could include providing any suitable assistance to minimise inconvenience to existing residents caused by the failure of the home in which they live to gain or retain a contract.

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health after 1 April 1993, if the choice of potential residents in nursing and residential homes will be confined to those homes selected by local authorities, unless the residents can afford to pay the full charges.

Mr. Yeo: From April 1993 local authorities will place contracts with residential care and nursing homes on behalf of individuals who are assessed as needing such care and need to be publicly supported. We have made it clear that authorities should take into account people's preferences for the home they enter and not unreasonably restrict people's choice. We have also made it clear that local authorities' arrangements should be sufficiently flexible to allow relatives and friends to contribute, if they so wish, towards the cost of a place in a more expensive home than the authority would normally contract with.

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what qualifications a person running a registered small home should have other than not having been found guilty of a criminal offence.

Mr. Yeo: The Registered Homes Act 1984 provides that registration in respect of a residential care home for four or more people may be refused if a person is not considered fit to be involved in running the home. The same will apply to applications for registration from those planning to run small homes once the Registered Homes (Amendment Act) 1991 is brought into force. It is for registration authorities to interpret and apply this requirement.

Ms. Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her estimate of how many of the existing private nursing and residential homes will close by 1994.

Mr. Yeo: Information about the number of independent nursing and residential care homes that close is not collected centrally.

Generic Drugs

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of prescriptions was written generically in 1991; what percentage was dispensed generically; what percentage of the total drug bill related to generic items; and whether she can give an estimate of the figures expected to apply in the current year.

Dr. Mawhinney: In 1991, 41 per cent. of all prescriptions were written generically and 35·2 per cent. were dispensed generically. Information on the percentage of the total drug bill which relates to generic items is not available. However, 26·6 per cent. of the basic cost of drugs (that is, the net ingredient cost, excluding remuneration for dispensing, VAT, container costs and discounts) related to items written generically and 13·9 per cent. of the net ingredient cost related to items dispensed generically.

In the first quarter of 1992 generic prescribing increased to 43·2 per cent.

Marriages (Immigration Purposes)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 3 July, Official Report, column 748, on marriages for immigration purposes, how many of the cases in the London borough of Lewisham which were reported to the Registrar General, were passed on to the Home Office; and how many of those complaints were proven.

Mr. Sackville: Of the 21 cases reported to the registrar general, information in respect of 10 was passed to the Home Office. I understand that in two of the 10 cases notified the marriage has yet to take place. In a further six cases, the marriage was followed by an application to the Home Office for leave to remain as a foreign spouse of which two have been granted and four are the subject of ongoing inquiries. Applications to remain on the basis of marriage have yet to be received in respect of the remaining two cases.

Child Minders

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will (a) list the number of child minders registered in each local authority in 1991 and (b) list the number re-registered under the Children Act 1989 in each local authority to date; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Information about the number of child minders registered by each social services department at 31 March 1991 was published in "Children's Day Care Facilities at 31 March 1991 England"; a copy of which is available in the Library.

The number of child minders who have re-registered in the period to 30 June 1992 is being collected as part of a national exercise to monitor local authority implementation of the Children Act 1989 which will be reported to Parliament by the end of 1992.

Dentists Fees

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the mean fee earnings per dentist in the Cumbria family health services authority in each year since 1987 at current prices.

Dr. Mawhinney: The table shows the mean gross earnings of general dental practitioners on the dental list of Cumbria family health services authority over the five financial years from 1987-88 to 1991-92, at 1991-92 prices.

Mean gross fee earnings per DRSG dentist at 1991-92 prices

Financial year	Cumbria FHSA (£)
1987-88	75,192
1988-89	82,893
1989-90	76,979
1990-91	80,503
1991-92	87,554

These means relate only to earnings through fees and to general dental practitioners in the population used by the dental rates study group. They exclude seniority payments, maternity payments, long-term sickness payments, postgraduate education allowances and other such allowances. They relate only to those general dental practitioners who were in contract for the complete financial year in question.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many staff her Department currently employs; what are the total personnel costs; and if she will calculate the staffing level of the health section of the former Department of Health and Social Security and the associated personnel costs immediately before its separation.

Mr. Sackville: For 1991-92 the Department's estimated outturn pay costs were £100 million for 4,659 staff; for 1987-88 (prior to the split of the former DHSS), outturn paycosts were £60 million for 3,932 staff. The 1987-88 figures have been adjusted to reflect staff numbers and costs as they would have related to the present organisation. All paybill costs include employers' earnings related national insurance contributions.

Public Appointments

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will list any public appointments by her Department since 1987 which have involved people from organisations criticised in published reports by DTI inspectors;

(2) if she will list any advisers retained by her Department since 1987 who have been criticised in published reports by DTI inspectors.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally in the form requested. The Department takes all relevant factors into account when considering such appointments.

Social Workers

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what steps have been taken by the Central Council for the Education and Training in Social Work to ensure that the training of social workers approved under the Mental Health Act 1983, includes a knowledge of mental illness and its treatment;

(2) what steps are being taken by the Central Council for the Education and Training in Social Work to ensure that social workers in training for approval and those already approved are aware of the contents of the letter about inaccuracies in the code of practice under the Mental Health Act 1983 sent to local authorities on 18 February;

(3) what guidance approved social workers receive about implementing the policy of using resources for early and appropriate intervention to prevent deterioration of a mentally ill person's condition.

Mr. Yeo: All local authorities have access to approved training programmes for those social workers they wish to approve to carry out duties under mental health legislation. The Central Council for the Education and Training in Social Work has a responsibility to approve these courses of training and has set out full guidelines on course content in their paper 19.19; "Regulations and Guidance for the Training of Social Workers to be considered for Approval in England and Wales under the Mental Health Act 1983" which was published in January 1987. This guidance is currently under review.

Although their primary purpose is to prepare such social workers for the specific duties they are to carry out under the Mental Health Act 1983 they may also be used to meet more general staff development needs in relation to mental health social work.

The letter of 18 February was circulated widely, with instructions that it should be drawn to the attention of all staff concerned with the implementation of the Mental Health Act 1983.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps are being taken by the Central Council for the Education and Training in Social Work to prepare social workers and probation officers for work with mentally disordered offenders and similar patients in secure settings.

Mr. Yeo: The joint Department of Health and Home Office review of health and social services for mentally disordered offenders has considered relevant aspects of the training of social workers.

The report of the review's staffing and training advisory group was published for consultation on 2 June. A number of its recommendations, if accepted by Ministers, would require action by the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work.

Departmental Properties

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many residential properties in the London borough of Lewisham are owned by her Department; and if she will publish a list of such residential properties which are currently empty, giving the type of accommodation available, the length of time each property has been vacant and the intended future use.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not held centrally. The management of the national health service residential estate is the responsibility of health authorities and NHS trusts.

NHS Accounting System

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the quality of the accounting system operating within the national health service; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has with the approval of Her Majesty's Treasury issued directions under the National Health Service Act 1977 which establish the framework for NHS financial management and the form of the accounts. It is the responsibility of NHS bodies to implement local systems for maintaining sound financial management, which are subject to statutory audit arranged by the Audit Commission.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice she has given to local authorities in relation to taking account of receipt of a mobility component of disability living allowance in determining either the provision of services or charging for services; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: Guidance was provided for local authorities in local authority circular (92)4, a copy of which is available in the Library, to the effect that awards of the mobility component of disability living allowance should be disregarded in full in the charging assessment for people receiving residential care.

Guidance about the treatment of the mobility component of disability living allowance in charging for domiciliary and day services is to be issued later this year.

Consultants

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average age of consultants at the time of appointment, for each specialty and for each category of merit award.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 10 July 1992]: The table gives the average median age of consultants at first appointment and the average age at which consultants receive each category of distinction award by broad specialty group for the latest year for which information is available.

Average median age of consultants on (A) first appointment and (B) obtaining merit award

Distinction Awards, Mersey Region

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will break down the level of award and the distribution across disciplines of distinction awards for the Mersey region into the individual health authorities.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 10 July 1992]: The tables have been placed in the Library.

Some consultants have contracts with more than one authority and where this occurs they have been counted in each authority. The total number of awards held in the Mersey region by grade is 5A+, 31A, 68B and 152C.

CATERING COMMITTEE

Press Facilities

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee what is the annual cost of providing (a) the Press Bar and (b) dining and refreshment facilities in the press section at the House; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: The management accounts of the Refreshment Department do not provide for the separate allocation of costs between (a) the Press Bar, and (b) the Press Cafeteria and Dining Room.

In the year ended 31 March 1992, a trading surplus of £25,000 was returned from the Press Gallery refreshment facilities. However many of the overhead costs of the Refreshment Department including most staff costs, are borne on the votes for House of Commons: Administration and House of Commons: Accommodation Services. None of these costs are apportioned directly to the Press Gallery facilities.

Refreshment Department facilities in the Press Gallery are also open to staff of the Official Report who make significant use of them.

ACCOMMODATION AND WORKS COMMITTEE

Press Facilities

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what is the number of rooms in the Palace of Westminster allocated to the press lobby; how many telephones, desks and chairs are provided; what is the estimated total capital costs of this provision and the annual cost of maintenance; and what revenue is received from this provision.

Mr. Ray Powell: It is not possible to separate from the Press Gallery accommodation that part available to the Press lobby. There are 17 rooms allocated for use by reporters in the Press Gallery which contain approximately 121 telephones, 90 desks and 90 chairs. The estimated capital and annual costs maintenance of these facilities cannot be identified from the overall totals for the Palace of Westminster without disproportionate cost. No revenue is received from their provision.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Occupational Health Service

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the annual report of the Civil Service Occupational Health Service is due to be published.

Mr. Waldegrave: Part 1 of the annual report of the Civil Service Occupational Health Service for 1991-92 is published today. This reports on the health of the civil service. Part 2 of the report, which covers the activities of the Civil Service Occupational Health Service during 1991-92 and includes the agency's accounts, will be published by 31 July. Copies of both parts will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses on publication.

Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the first annual report of the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have today arranged for copies of the first year's annual report of the Recruitment and Assessment Services Agency to be placed in the Library of the House.

The report makes it clear that 1991-92 was not an easy year in which to launch a new recruitment business on a full repayment basis. The agency was unable to achieve a financial balance but it contained its cash deficit to £146,000 and its trading deficit on a accruals basis to £431,000. Although it nearly achieved its target for the number of recruitment schemes, the number of vacancies per scheme was down. On the other hand, it significantly exceeded its target for consultancy days and met its quality of service targets.

Civil Service College

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the annual report of the Civil Service College.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have today arranged for copies of this year's annual report of the Civil Service College to be placed in the Library of the House.

Efficiency Unit

Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what topics have been covered in the efficiency unit's central scrutiny programme in the last financial year.

Mr. Waldergrave: Seventeen efficiency scrutinies have been undertaken by Departments in 1991-92 in association with the Prime Minister's adviser on efficiency and the efficiency unit. The programme of scrutinies, including those which are not yet completed, is as follows:

Department/Title of scrutiny	Report completed
Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food
Organisation of Purchasing and Supply	Yes
Customs and Excise
VAT Enforcement	Yes
Ministry of Defence
Third Line Helicopter Repair	Yes
Electronic Component Repair	Yes
Department of the Environment
Rent Officer Service	Yes
Department of Health
Office Equipment, Furniture and Fittings	Yes
Home Office
Information Flows Between Police and Government	Yes
Inland Revenue
Organisation of Trust Work	Yes
Sub-Contractors Deduction Scheme	Yes
Northern Ireland Office
Escorting and Conveyance of Prisoners	Yes
Overseas Development Administration
Output and Performance Measures	Yes
Scottish Office
Text Creation	Yes
Department of Social Security
Departmental Relationships	No
Benefiting the Community	Yes
Department of Trade and Industry
Management Information Systems	No
Management of Accommodation	Yes
Department of Transport
Developers' Contributions to Highway Works	Yes

European Year of the Elderly

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has for his Department to celebrate in 1993 the European Year of the Elderly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 13 July, Official Report, columns 430-31.

Civil Servants' Shareholdings

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what guidance, other than the civil service pay and conditions of service code and the establishment officers' guide, his Department provides relating to civil servants' shareholdings; if he will list the number of occasions within the last five years on which civil servants have reported shareholdings to establishment officers in his Department; what regulations apply to the staff of the next steps agencies within his Department; what mechanisms are in place to prevent potential conflicts of interest; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department provides brief guidance in part IV of the Cabinet Office staff handbook, but individuals refer to the code and guide for detail. All three documents are publicly available whilst the code and the guide are in the Library of the House. The same regulations apply to staff in the agencies. Information about reported shareholdings is not held centrally in the form requested; each application is, however, scrutinised carefully to guard against potential conflicts of interest.

PRIME MINISTER

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the achievements of his Office and the Cabinet Office in helping small businesses over the last 12 months relative to the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Office monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

The Prime Minister: The Government continue to place a high priority on helping small businesses, through improvements to the business climate through deregulation and through specific programmes of support and assistance.

Subsidiarity

Mr. Michael: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to apply the principle of subsidiarity in the drafting of Government legislative proposals to be submitted to Parliament in respect of the role and powers of local government within the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 13 July 1992]: The Government are guided by all appropriate considerations in drafting legislative proposals in respect of the role and powers of local government.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

War Crimes

Mr. Janner: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many public records in the Public Record Office relating to war crimes in the Channel Islands have been closed for more than 30 years.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Documentation relating to public records in the Public Record Office closed for longer than 30 years is not held in a form which would enable all records relating to a particular subject to be readily identified with precision, but a small number of records relating to the Channel Islands in general are subject to extended closure.

Credit Repair Agencies

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, what action he will take on advertisements by credit repair agencies purporting to be able to have county court judgments removed from the register.

Mr. John M. Taylor: I am deeply concerned that consumers should think carefully before paying any fees for such a service. The procedures for having entries removed from the register are described in the leaflet sent to defendants on entry of judgment; they are quite simple and can be followed easily and cheaply by defendants themselves. However, the circumstances in which entries can be deleted from the register are limited. Almost all judgments are registered on entry of judgment, the major exception being where judgment is given at a contested hearing which the losing party attended and at which he did not ask for time to pay. Most entries then stay on the register for six years, even where payment has been made; they can be removed only where the defendant provides proof that the debt was paid within one month of judgment, where the court, through administrative error, has wrongly registered the judgment, or where the defendant makes a successful application to have the judgment "set aside". But the court will not set the judgment aside simply because the debt has been paid subsequently; a judgment will usually be set aside only on the ground that there is a defence to the claim which ought to be heard. Officials in my Department have already taken steps to warn the courts to be alert for potential abuses of this procedure and are also in contact with the Office of Fair Trading which is considering whether it would be appropriate to use any of its powers against these companies.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Tax Law

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what guidelines exist on the circumstances in which a Minister should be informed when arguments advanced in a lower court are reversed at a subsequent stage; and if he will publish those guidelines.

Mr. Dorrell: I am not aware of any such guidelines.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what occasions the agreement referred to by the Minister in column 213 of the Official Report of Standing Committe B, 6 June 1991, has been upheld by the courts.

Mr. Dorrell: The passage to which my hon. Friend refers mentions two instances of agreement between taxpayers and the Inland Revenue. Neither has had to be considered by the courts.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether Padmore v. CIR referred to by the then Economic Secretary to the Treasury on 6 June 1991, Standing Committee B, columns 205 and 213, was a judicial review case; and whether the Padmore case applied to taxpayers who were not in partnership with the taxpayer bringing the case.

Mr. Dorrell: Padmore v. CIR was not a judicial review case. The taxpayers who benefited from the judgment in that case included at least one who was not in partnership with Mr. Padmore.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) in what circumstances it is the policy of the Inland Revenue to propose to a taxpayer that public law proceedings brought by another taxpayer shall be treated as a test case for that taxpayer also; and when that policy first started;

(2) what rights he intends to confer upon taxpayers by providing that an agreement with a taxpayer that public law proceedings brought by another taxpayer shall be treated as a test case for that taxpayer;

(3) if he will list the occasions on which the Inland Revenue agreed on a judicial review with a taxpayer that public law proceedings brought by another taxpayer shall be treated as a test case for that taxpayer also;

(4) on how many occasions has the Inland Revenue agreed with a taxpayer that public proceedings brought by another taxpayer shall be treated as a test case for that taxpayer also;

(5) in what circumstances it is the policy of the Inland Revenue to accept a proposal from the taxpayer that public law proceedings brought by another taxpayer shall be treated as a test case for that taxpayer also; and when that policy first started;

(6) if he will list the precedents in cases of judicial review for the Minister's statement in column 213 of the Official Report of Standing Committee B, 6 June 1991, that other people could have joined in that agreement.

Mr. Dorrell: If the matters in issue in public law proceedings are relevant to the tax affairs of another taxpayer not party to the proceedings, such a taxpayer can rely on the result of those proceedings without reference to the Inland Revenue.

The then Economic Secretary explained in Standing Committee B last year that the established principles would apply if retrospective legislation were in contemplation following those proceedings. If a taxpayer not party to the proceedings has expressly agreed with the Inland Revenue that the final resolution of some aspect of his or her tax affairs should await the outcome of public law proceedings, and follow the result, Ministers would feel bound to exclude that taxpayer from the scope of any subsequent retrospective legislation in the same way as the successful litigant. I am aware of no instance when this issue has arisen in practice in relation to public law proceedings.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in what circumstances the Inland Revenue is excluded from the application of common law.

Mr. Dorrell: The Commissioners of the Inland Revenue are required to act in accordance with the powers conferred upon them by statute and in accordance with common law.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will make a statement on the circumstances in which a taxpayer may apply for judicial review where the Exchequer has refused to repay tax unlawfully raised;

(2) what steps he has taken to ensure that a taxpayer can apply for judicial review where the Exchequer has refused to repay tax unlawfully raised.

Mr. Dorrell: The decision to apply for judicial review in a particular instance is a matter for the taxpayer concerned.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is his policy on the repayment of tax unlawfully raised;

(2) by what authority the Exchequer is not required to repay tax unlawfully raised.

Mr. Dorrell: I assume that my hon. Friend's reference to "tax unlawfully raised" is a reference to tax paid pursuant to regulations subsequently found to be ultra vires. The question of the recovery of ultra vires charges levied by public bodies is currently in issue in the case of Woolwich v. CIR in which the judgment of the House of Lords is expected shortly.

Income Tax (Building Societies) Regulations 1986

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the position of regulation 3 of the Income Tax (Building Societies) Regulations 1986 with regard to the imposition of double taxation.

Mr. Dorrell: Regulation 3 did not impose double taxation.

Citizens Charters

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy on retroactive amendments to citizens charters.

Mr. Dorrell: The taxpayers charter was relaunched in August 1991 following the publication of the citizens charter in July 1991. The amendments were to make it shorter and easier to understand, and not to change its substance. The question of retroaction does not arise.

Taxpayers Charter

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost of the carving of the taxpayers charter in Somerset House.

Mr. Dorrell: The full cost of the taxpayers charter in Somerset House, including the panel, lettering and erection, was £4,927. Copies are displayed in offices throughout the Department.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the exceptions and proposed exceptions to the taxpayers charter to the right of a taxpayer to take a grievance to an independent tribunal.

Mr. Dorrell: The circumstances under which a taxpayer has the right to take a grievance to an independent tribunal are laid down in statute. The taxpayers charter commits the revenue departments to publicising these rights, but does not affect them.

Income Tax (Building Societies) Regulations 1986

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many building societies had a late enough year-end and interest accruals so concentrated at the end of their accounting period that they benefited from the introduction of the Income Tax (Building Societies) Regulations 1986.

Mr. Dorrell: The regulations were designed to deal consistently with societies, whatever their year-end, by securing in each case that interest came into account once, and once only, on the transition to revised payment arrangements for composite rate tax.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what response he has made to the points raised recently by the counsel to the Woolwich building society.

Mr. Dorrell: I am not aware of any points raised recently by counsel for the Woolwich building society.

European Year of the Elderly

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for his Department to celebrate in 1993 the European Year of the Elderly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 13 July, at column 430. I have no plans for additional action.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the achievements of his Department and his policies in helping small businesses over the last 12 months relative to the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Dorrell: The Government's economic policies are designed to maintain an environment in which business and enterprise can develop and prosper. The Treasury therefore places a high priority on helping small businesses, and among the specific measures included in the 1992 Budget were:

a package worth £480 million in 1992-93 and £590 million in 1993-94 to assist business ratepayers. No business will face an increase in its rates bill for 1992-93 above the rate of inflation; raising the VAT registration threshold in line with inflation to £36,600;
reducing VAT penalties;
changes to the VAT cash accounting system (under which small businesses with turnover under £300,000 can defer VAT payments until they receive payment of bills owing to them). This is now available to traders who owe Customs and Excise up to £5,000; increasing the limit for small employers making quarterly PAYE and NICs payments (rather than monthly) from £400 to £450 a month;
exempting most business assets from inheritance tax, so that family businesses may be passed on without charge; the halving of car tax on new cars, which will benefit many small businesses; and requiring Government contractors to pay their bills to sub-contractors promptly.

Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise officials also continuously review forms, explanatory notices and leaflets with the aim of providing guidance which is easily understood.

Capital Allowances

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to improve the inspection of the validity of capital allowances claimed on office equipment leases.

Mr. Dorrell: Claims to capital allowances are subject to the same scrutiny by tax inspectors as other aspects of taxpayers' affairs. The operation of the capital allowance system is generally kept under review and guidance is given to inspectors where appropriate.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps his Department is taking to ensure that capital allowances are not claimed by the same finance company on the same equipment which has been the subject of a previous financial agreement on which allowances have already been claimed.

Mr. Dorrell: The eligibility of expenditure for capital allowances is a matter covered by detailed and comprehensive legislation. Examinations carried out by tax inspectors are aimed at ensuring that claims made are in accordance with the requirements of this legislation.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the loss to the Exchequer from the artificial inflation for the purposes of capital allowances claimed on office equipment leases of the retail value of equipment such as photocopiers.

Mr. Dorrell: No such specific assessment has been made.

Pension Funds

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will draw up proposals to amend the Financial Services Act 1986 to strengthen the regulation of in-house pension fund investment managers and bring it closer into line with that of external managers.

Mr. Nelson: Rules on the management of investments under the Act are a matter for the Securities and Investments Board and the self-regulating organisations. The Investment Management Regulatory Organisation issued in May this year a consultation document which reviews the rules applicable to occupational pension schemes and recommends changes.

Taxpayers (Confidentiality)

Mrs. Chaplin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what provision has been made to ensure that the confidentiality of taxpayers' affairs is preserved if the Inland Revenue contracts out some of its support services.

Mr. Dorrell: There are two safeguards. The first is that all relevant contracts will contain provisions obliging contractors to make all necessary arrangements to protect the privacy of personal information. The second is that contractors and their employees will be subject, in the same way as Revenue employees, to the criminal sanctions —a fine, or imprisonment, or both—provided by section 182 of the Finance Act 1989 for unauthorised disclosure of personal tax information.

Central Statistical Office

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the Central Statistical Office performed against its key targets for 1991-92; and what are the CSO's key targets for 1992-93.

Mr. Lamont: The Central Statistical Office's performance against its key targets for 1991-92 is described in the agency's annual report, which is published today. All of the CSO's statistics were published on their pre-announced release dates. Nine of the CSO's 11 targets relating to revisions were achieved, as were eight of the nine targets on coherence: there was a high rate of achievement on the targets for response rates; and the agency achieved its targets for running costs and efficiency improvements, though not that for receipts from sales.

The steps taken by the Government since 1989, including the establishment of the enlarged CSO as a separate department, the package of measures announced in May 1990 and the move to executive agency status last November, have all contributed substantially to a significant improvement in the quality of economic statistics. I applaud the efforts CSO staff have made to achieve this.

The CSO's key targets for 1992-93 are also published today as part of the CSO's strategic plan for the 1992-95 period. Copies of both the annual report and strategic plan are being placed in the Library of the House. As in the previous year these targets cover the timeliness of published statistics: the size of revisions; the coherence of GDP and other key economic statistics; the response rates for CSO statistical inquiries; action to minimise compliance costs for business; response times to public requests for information; and the CSO's running costs, efficiency improvements and receipts.

Following the further package of measures to improve the quality of economic statistics announced in November 1991 some of the key targets for 1992-93 have been tightened. I expect the initiatives to improve economic statistics to continue to bear fruit.

End-Year Flexibility Schemes

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the entitlements for 1992-93 resulting from the carry-forward of capital and running costs underspends allowed under the end-year flexibility schemes.

Mr. Portillo: A list of entitlements totalling £188 million for capital expenditure and £41 million for running costs is shown in the table.

Subject to parliamentary approval of the necessary supplementary estimates, individual cash limits and running costs limits will be increased when entitlement is taken up.

The total increase in cash limits resulting from the take-up of end-year flexibility will be charged to the reserve and will therefore not add to the planned total of public expenditure.

Central Government Staff

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of staff in post in central Government Departments at 1 April.

Mr. Portillo: On 1 April 1992 there were 565,319 staff in post in central Government. Of those, 504,237 were non-industrial staff and 61,082 were classified as being in industrial work. A summary showing staff in post by Department has been placed in the Library.

Excise Duties

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when further draft regulations to implement the single market legislation for excise duties will be issued to the trade for comment; and what additional guidance is being issued.

Sir John Cope: We have consulted widely on the single market legislation on excise duty. Customs and Excise have been in touch with the trade on this subject since June 1990 and a rolling programme of regulations is well advanced. The first draft regulations, about keeping and preserving records and accounts, have already been issued to the trade.

Draft notices have been issued which give guidance on excise warehousing and registered excise dealers and shippers. Other notices and draft regulations will follow shortly.

Copies of the draft regulations and notices have already been placed in the Library of the House.

Russia (Currency Stabilisation)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the procedure for the United Kingdom to make a response to a call by the International Monetary Fund under its general arrangements to borrow in respect of a currency stabilisation fund for Russia; and what financial provision is made.

Mr. Nelson: In the event of an agreement by the IMF executive board to an activation of the general arrangements to borrow—GAB—the United Kingdom would meet its obligations by setting up a line of credit under which the IMF could borrow up to an agreed amount of sterling. Loans to the IMF would be made from the National Loans Fund—NLF—under the International Monetary Fund Act 1979, as amended by the International Monetary Arrangements Act 1983. Under the terms of the GAB the IMF is obliged to repay any borrowing once the terms of the loan expires—a maximum of five years. Conditions also exist under which repayment can take place, at either the IMF or the lender's instigation, before that time.

Under the GAB decision, loans made to the IMF are matched by a liquid claim on the IMF, and consequently do not add to public expenditure. Loans under the GAB are denominated in special drawing rights—SDRs—although payment would be made in sterling and are remunerated at the IMF's SDR interest rate. The International Monetary Fund Act 1979 provides for foreign exchange and interest rate gains and losses on loans to be for the account of the NLF. Any such gains or losses would not score as public expenditure, though any difference between the cost of borrowing by the NLF and the interest received would score in the central Government borrowing requirement and the public sector borrowing requirement.

Disabled Employees

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner) of 6 July, Official Report, column 10, (a) how many of his Department's employees, and (b) what proportion of his Department's employees, were registered disabled in 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 14 July 1992]: Details of the numbers and proportions of registered disabled people employed by my Department in 1989 and 1990 were as follows:

	Number	Per cent.
1990	31·5	1·0

These figures show the position at 1 June 1989 and 1 June 1990 and are drawn from the publication "Independent". Copies of this publication are in the Library of the House of Commons. Part-time staff are counted as half units. The Department also employs a number of people with disabilities who have chosen not to register as disabled.

Banks (Regulation)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to create a banking commission to regulate all banks operating in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nelson: The Government have no plans to establish a new regulatory body in place of the Bank of England, which is currently responsible for supervising all banks operating in the United Kingdom. The Government will shortly be bringing forward their proposals for implementing the second banking co-ordination directive, under which the primary responsibility for supervision of EC banks' operations throughout the EC will fall to the authorities of their home state.

Auditors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will prepare proposals for amending the Banking Act 1979 to prevent auditors from recruiting directors of the client bank.

Mr. Nelson: The Government have no such plans.

Banking Act

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will draw up proposals to amend the Banking Act 1987 to prevent auditors of banks advising those banks on tax matters.

Mr. Nelson: The Government have no such plans.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has for amending the Banking Act to require all banks to file copies of the audit tenders received with the regulators.

Mr. Nelson: The Government have no such proposals.

Economic and Monetary Union

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has for keeping Parliament informed of steps taken by the United Kingdom with a view to moving to the third stage of economic and monetary union.

Mr. Nelson: As clause 2 of the European Communities (Amendment) Bill makes clear, no notification of an intention by the United Kingdom to move to the third stage of economic and monetary union will be given to the Council of the European Communities unless a draft of the notification has first been approved by Act of Parliament.

Pension Plans

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what representations he has had about the quality of financial advice surrounding the transfer from occupational pension schemes to private personal pension plans; and what steps he is taking to (a) ensure the provision of best advice and (b) compensate or recompense those suffering the consequences of poor advice;

(2) what is the number of insurance companies and others fined or disciplined each year under the Financial Services Act 1986 for the placing of investments in such a way as to compromise the giving of independent financial advice;

(3) to what extent, and through which agencies, the duty of best advice exists in the insurance and related industries; and what steps he is taking to report to Parliament on the quality of this best advice.

Mr. Nelson: These are matters for the Securities and Investments Board.

Departmental Objectives

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the objectives of each division and branch of his Department.

Mr. Nelson: The main aim of the Treasury is to assist Ministers in the formulation and implementation of the Government's economic policy. This is reflected in seven broad areas of continuing activity towards which all divisions and branches contribute. Within each area more specific objectives are defined from time to time. A full statement of these roles and current objectives is set out on pages 14 to 21 of the "1992 Departmental Report for the Chancellor's Departments"—Cm 1918.

Personal Investment Authority

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what advice he has offered to the Securities and Investments Board and the formation committee of the proposed personal investment authority on the need for greater consumer representation.

Mr. Nelson: None. The formation committee was appointed by SIB and the self-regulating organisations (SROs) to establish the personal investment authority (PIA). I understand that the formation committee will be consulting widely on the constitution and other aspects of the PIA.

Commission Charges

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the Office of Fair Trading on the disclosure of commission charges by financial advisers and insurance and other company representatives; and whether he proposes to undertake any review himself.

Mr. Nelson: If I receive a report from the Director General of Fair Trading under the competition provisions of the Financial Services Act 1986, I shall consider it carefully.

EC Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Burns: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Lamont: The Economic and Finance Council of the European Community met in Brussels under my chairmanship on 13 July. The Paymaster General represented the United Kingdom.

The Council held one of its six-monthly multilateral surveillance discussions of the economic situation in the Community. The Council agreed that prudent monetary and fiscal policies must be maintained and that there was a further need to reduce structural rigidities. The Council also welcomed the Italian Government's recent package of measures designed to reduce their budget deficit.

The Council also discussed a programme for economic convergence submitted by the Netherlands. The Council noted the exceptional Dutch record of price and exchange rate stability, but emphasised that the recent increase in inflation must be quickly reversed. The Dutch commitment to targets for the reduction of their budget deficit and their debt to GDP ratio was welcomed, as was their programme of structural reforms, privatisation, reducing subsidies, improving public sector efficiency and increasing labour market participation.

The Council also discussed Russia's need for medical aid and agreed that up to 150 mecu of the 1·25 becu loan already agreed by the Community for the countries of the former Soviet Union should be released in order to help the Russians to meet their medical needs. Balance of payments assistance for Albania in the form of a grant of 35 mecu from the Community budget was also agreed. A further tranche may also be considered at a later date for 1993.

Over lunch, President Delors and the German representative, Herr Köhler, gave a brief report on the outcome of the recent Group of seven meeting in Munich and I set out my programme for the work of the Council under the United Kingdom presidency. I emphasised that my main priorities would be to work towards an agreement on the future financing of the Community, to complete the single market, to reduce the scope for fraud against the Community budget and to encourage free trade, noting in particular the importance of enhanced access to EC markets for the countries of Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union.

The Council also held a useful discussion of the Commission's proposals for the future financing of the Community. A majority of member states agreed that the Commission's proposals for increases to the Community budget were excessive. Some useful new elements were introduced into the discussion, such as the scope for offsetting savings, the need for improved financial management and a greater role for the European Investment bank in improving economic and social cohesion.

Pension Funds

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to require the Investment Management Regulatory Organisation to withdraw recognition of membership from those pension funds whose ultimate control lies outside the jurisdiction of Great Britain.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 14 July 1992]: This is a matter for the Securities and Investments Board (SIB) and the Investment Management Regulatory Organisation (IMRO). I understand that SRO members, the control of which lies outside the United Kingdom, are subject to detailed fitness and properness checks and monitoring of their United Kingdom operations, as with any other member.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Recycled Stationers

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the right hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commisison, pursuant to his answer of 1 July, Official Report, column 567, if the Commission will make it its policy to ensure that stocks of recycled stationery are permanently kept in all the stationery cupboards adjacent to offices, regardless of whether or not a particular demand has been identified.

Mr. Beith: This is a matter for the Administration Committee now that it has been set up. However, I understand that, in order to make the most effective use of the limited space available, it is the practice to adjust the variety of stock items in stationery cupboards, including recycled stationery, to meet the particular demands of users as they arise.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Sunday Trading

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his oral answer of 11 May, Official Report, columns 367-68, on Sunday trading, what consideration he has now given to (a) the result of the Kirklees case and (b) the Advocate-General's opinion in the case before the European Court of Justice.

The Attorney-General: I have considered the decision of the House of Lords in the Kirklees case and the opinion of the Advocate-General in the cases before the European Court of Justice. The decision of the House of Lords means that local authorities can apply for interim injunctions against retailers in order to enforce the law without giving cross-undertakings in damages. The Advocate-General has said that the Shops Act 1950 pursues an objective which is justified in Community law. He also said that it is for national courts to decide whether the effects of the Shops Act 1950 exceeded what was necessary to realise its objective. We are now awaiting the judgment of the European Court of Justice.

I do not consider that action by me would be appropriate at present.

SCOTLAND

Registers of Scotland

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the annual report of the Registers of Scotland executive agency will be published.

Mr. Lang: Copies of the annual report have today been placed in the library.

Law Courts

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what targets have been set for completing office business in the sheriff courts and supreme courts; and what performance was secured in 1991-92.

Mr. Lang: The targets set for completion of office business in the sheriff courts in 1991-92 are as follows. These targets remain in force for 1992-93. The percentage figures following each target indicate the proportion of sheriff courts achieving the target figures or better in the course of the year. More detailed information on the performance of individual court offices will be made available to local court advisory committees. Similar targets are in force in the supreme courts and all of these were achieved in 1991-92.

To complete probation, community service, compensation and fines supervision orders within two working days of the court. 98 per cent.

To issue juror citations in the first instance at least 21 days prior to a jury sitting/trial. 96 per cent.

To reply to all letter inquiries except those which require extensive investigation within two working days of receipt. 92 per cent.

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what objectives for reducing court waiting periods have been established; what targets have been set for 1992-93 in respect of court waiting periods for the supreme and sheriff courts; and if he will give details of the performance of the supreme courts and each of the sheriff courts in 1991-92.

Mr. Lang: The programming of court business is a matter for the judiciary. Acting in co-operation with the judiciary in the supreme and sheriff courts, the Government seek to provide the resources which will allow speedy access to justice. Having regard to the time required by parties to have their cases properly prepared, the following objectives have been adopted:

The Lord President of the Court of Session has accepted the recommendations of a committee chaired by Lord Maxwell relating to the reduction of waiting periods in the Supreme Courts: the target is to reduce waiting periods to the recommended levels and, subject to any acceleration in the rate of increase in court work, maintain waiting periods at that level: for certain categories of hearing, additional targets involving much reduced waiting periods, have been set;

Sheriffs Principal have agreed to overall targets of reducing waiting periods for summary criminal trials in the Sheriff Courts to 12 weeks or less by the end of 1992-93 and to hold them at that level thereafter; and to maintain waiting periods at 12 weeks or less for civil cases in the Sheriff Courts.

The main targets for waiting periods for 1992-93 are as follows. "Waiting period" is the period between a trial or proof being requested or an appeal being received and the date assigned expressed in weeks. The same targets applied in 1991-92 and national performance for that year is noted in the second column.

	Target	1991-92 performance
Criminal Appeal Business
Summary prosecutions: Notes of Appeal against Sentence and Stated cases (accused in custody)	4	4
Court of Session
(a) Ordinary proofs	24	28
(b) Defended Consistorial proofs	17	17
Sheriff Courts (national average)
(a) Civil proofs/debates	12	11·8
(b) Summary Criminal Trials	12	14·5

In 1991-92 waiting periods of 12 weeks or less were achieved for civil debates/proofs in 90 per cent. of sheriff courts.

Waiting periods of 12 weeks or less were achieved for summary criminal business in 78 per cent. of sheriff courts.

Performance of individual sheriff courts at 31 March 1992 is set out in the table.

In addition, the sheriffs principal have agreed that sheriff court programmes should be designed to ensure that the number of trials adjourned due to lack of court time should not exceed 5 per cent. of the total number set down, a target met in 86 per cent. of sheriff courts in the first three months of this year.

Elderly People

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of the Abbeyfield organisation to discuss the provision of residential care for elderly people; when he next plans to meet them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 8 July 1992]: My hon. Friend the Minister for Education and Housing attended the national conference of Abbeyfield Societies in September 1989. More recently, an official from my Department gave the opening address at the annual conference of the Abbeyfield Society for Scotland in March this year. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland has no plans at present to meet representatives of the Abbeyfield organisation.

The Government fully recognise the contribution made by the Abbeyfield Society to the care of elderly people and expects the society to continue to play an important role in this area of community care in the future.

Police Funding, Strathclyde

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet representatives of Strathclyde regional council to discuss the impact of funding contraints on police services; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 July 1992]: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so. The Government pay specific grant on all net expenditure by police authorities. Responsibility for the provision of sufficient funds to allow Strathclyde police to staff up to their fully authorised establishment level rests with Strathclyde regional council. I welcome the decision recently taken by the council to reduce the existing shortfall in the number of police officers in Strathclyde.

Fisheries Protection

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out the arrangements which his Agriculture and Fisheries Department makes for the provision of maritime fishery protection services; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: Maritime fishery protection services in Scottish waters are provided by the Scottish Fisheries Protection Agency—an executive agency of the Secretary of State for Scotland—to provide intelligence on fishing patterns and to deter and detect illegal fishing activity.

The agency has four offshore patrol vessels which can operate out to the 200-mile limit; two fast launches for patrolling inshore waters and sea lochs; and a small launch used for seasonal patrol of estuarial waters. The agency also contracts with the Ministry of Defence for the supply of Royal Navy vessels to undertake fishery protection patrols in Scottish waters. The total budget of the agency for marine surveillance is £9·2 million in the current financial year.

The agency deploys two fisheries surveillance aircraft in Scottish waters and charters helicopter services as required for inshore patrol duties. The budget for aerial surveillance in the current financial year is £2·4 million.

Heritage Lands

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland under what criteria grants may be paid by Scottish National Heritage for the maintenance of estate land to which no right of public access exists.

Sir Hector Monro: Scottish National Heritage operates a range of grant schemes designed to conserve and enhance Scotland's natural heritage and to foster the public's enjoyment and understanding of it. All grants awarded deliver public benefit by helping to meet Scottish National Heritage statutory objectives, whether or not there is a public right of access to the land involved.

Football Matches

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the numbers of those arrested and ejected at football matches in Scotland expressed as a percentage of attendance in the last five years for which information is available.

Sir Hector Monro: This information cannot be asembled in the time available. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Prison Escapes

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prisoners have escaped from (a) police custody and (b) penal institutions in the last 10 years for which information is available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of escapes from police custody is not held centrally.

The numbers of escapes and absconds from penal establishments over the last 10 years are as follows:

	Absconds	Escapes
1982	32	14
1983	38	16
1984	52	19
1985	36	39
1986	43	7
1987	41	24
1988	75	30
1989	65	20
1990	88	27
1991	150	36
1992[1]	54	19

[1] to date

The definitions of escape and abscond are that a prisoner escapes if he unlawfully gains his liberty by overcoming the physical security restraints to which he is subject at the time he was in the presence of a prison officer or officers specially assigned to guard him: a prisoner absconds if he unlawfully gains his liberty by an abuse of trust without having had to overcome any physical security restraint and if he was not at the time in the presence of a prison officer specially assigned to guard him.

Judges

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the rate of remuneration of (a) retired judges and (b) temporary judges when they sit part-time in the Court of Session.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The rates of remuneration are at present under review. The current rates, where applicable, are (a) £423 per day and (b) £383 per day.

Law of Damages

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he intends to take with a view to implementing the recommendations of the Scottish Law Commission relating to bringing the law of damages in Scotland into line with that obtaining in England and Wales.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 18 June 1992]: My right hon. Friend has welcomed and accepted the recommendation made by the Scottish Law Commission in its report on the effect of death on damages —Scot. Law Com. No. 134. The hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson) introduced a Bill, based upon the Scottish Law Commission's recommendations, on 10 June and the Government have offered the hon. Member their support and assistance in seeking to have the Bill enacted.

Feudal System

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will bring forward proposals to abolish the feudal system in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 19 June 1992]: The Scottish Law Commission is currently carrying out a major review of property law in Scotland. As part of this work, the commission published a discussion paper in July 1991 seeking comments on various proposals for reform or abolition of the feudal system. The commission is analysing the responses to the discussion paper and will submit a report making specific recommendations for reform. We intend to await this report before reaching any conclusions about the need for a change in the law.

NHS Superannuation Scheme

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the framework document of the next steps agency for the national health service superannuation scheme will be published for Scotland.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 29 June 1992]: As announced by my right hon. Friend on 6 March, the Scottish Office superannuation division, which administers the national health service superannuation scheme in Scotland, is to be launched as a next steps agency by the autumn. The framework document under which the agency will operate will be available by the launch date which will be announced as soon as possible.

Island Health Services

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the non-doctored islands in Scotland and the number of patients in each.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 2 July 1992]: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Community Policing

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received in the last 12 months regarding community policing levels; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 July 1992]: Some 20 letters about policing levels have been received from members of the public since June 1991, together with several from Members of Parliament, including the hon. Member. The allocation of resources to particular policing priorities is a matter for the chief constable concerned.

Crime, Strathclyde

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of (a) murders, (b) attempted murders and (c) serious assaults in which (i) guns and (ii) knives were used in (1) K division of Strathclyde police, (2) Strathclyde region and (3) Scotland in each year since 1982; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 July 1992]: The available information is set out in the tables.

Cases of homicide, attempted murder, serious assault and petty assault recorded by the police involving the alleged use of a firearm

3. Scotland	191	260	213	250	221	195	177	116	238	314

[1] The definition of serious assault was amended at the start of 1990. The effect of the change was to reduce the total number of recorded incidents of serious assault and to increase the recorded figure for petty assault correspondingly.

Victims of homicides which involved the use of a sharp instrument
Scotland 1982 to 1991[1]

	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	[2]1991

3. Scotland	36	36	46	34	33	44	38	38	44	34

[1] Information on the criminal use of sharp instruments, including knives, is not collected at divisional level, or for crimes other than homicide.
[2] Provisional.

I have nothing to add to the replies I gave on 24 June 1992 to the hon. Member for Cumbernauld and Kilsyth (Mr. Hogg) at columns 254-55 and the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe) at column 252.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the current levels of violent crime in (i) K division of Strathclyde police, (ii) Strathclyde region and (iii) Scotland; and what action he proposes to initiate to reduce these levels.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 July 1992]: Information on the number of incidents in which knives were used is not held centrally.

The number of crimes and offences involving the alleged use of a firearm recorded by the police for each year since 1982 is given in the table.

Number of crimes and offences recorded by the police involving the alleged use of a firearm, 1982-1991

	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989	1990	1991

Scotland	1,283	1,336	1,353	1,675	1,525	1,429	1,159	1,173	1,484	1,887

I have nothing further to add to the replies I gave on 24 June 1992 to the hon. Member for Cumbernauld and Kilsyth at columns 254-55 and the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill at column 252.

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the number of incidents in which (a) knives and (b) guns were used in (i) K division of Strathclyde police, (ii) Strathclyde region and (iii) Scotland in each year since 1982; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 July 1992]: Levels of violent crime are increasing in K division of Strathclyde police, in Strathclyde region, and in Scotland as a whole. I deplore this trend. The Government have increased funding for the police, who are in the front line in tackling violent crime, by 52 per cent. in real terms since 1979. The detection and prevention of violent crime are given a high priority by police forces throughout Scotland, and the Government will continue to provide the necessary resources to enable the police to maintain law and order.

Replica Guns

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what information he has on the use of replica guns in incidents of crime or criminal intent in Scotland; how the use of such replicas has increased or decreased in each year since 1982; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to introduce new initiatives to discourage the manufacture, sale and use of replica guns; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 July 1992]: Information is collected centrally on each crime and offence involving the alleged use of an imitation firearm. Details collected include local authority district, crime and offence classification, date of incident, number of accused, age and sex of principal accused, number of weapons, type of location where used, how used and, in cases where someone was injured or threatened, number of victims and age and sex of principal victim.

The number of crimes and offences involving the alleged use of an imitation firearm recorded by the police in Scotland in each of the years 1982-1991 is given in the table:

Year	Numbers
1982	49
1983	43
1984	92
1985	56
1986	55
1987	68
1988	61
1989	76
1990	96
1991	102

I have nothing further to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden (Mr. Galbraith) on 10 February 1992, at column 411.

Leukaemia

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the numbers of leukaemias (a) observed and (b) expected in the 0 to 24 year age group in the postcode sector DG7.3—Castle Douglas—in the periods (i) 1968 to 1973 (ii) 1974 to 1978, (iii) 1979 to 1984, (iv) 1984 to 1989 and (v) 1990 to the present time, respectively; and if he will make a statement on the comparative incidences of leukaemia in Castle Douglas relative to the rest of Scotland.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 8 July 1992]: The table shows numbers of registrations of leukaemia in the 0 to 24 age group in postcode sector DG7.3, with expected numbers based on Scottish national rates. The figures shown for the period 1990 to 1991 are provisional.

Observed and expected [1]numbers of registration of leukaemia (ICD9 204-208) in the 0-24 age group in postcode sector DG7.3, 1968-91.

Period of registration	Registrations
	Observed	Expected
1968-73	2	0·26
1974-78	1	0·21
1979-84	1	0·20
1985-89	0	0·19
1990-91	0	0·04

[1] Based on Scottish national rates standardised for age.
Source: ISD Scheme SMR6.

The number of observed registrations of leukaemia in this age group in postcode sector DG7.3 falls within the range to which chance variations in the overall distribution of the disease gives rise.

Homelessness

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many 16 and 17-year-olds in each region in Scotland were registered as homeless in 1990-91; and how many of these were considered as in priority need and housed.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 8 July 1992]: Information on one person households aged under 18 is set out in the table. Information is not available about the number of 16 and 17-year-olds in other types of applicant households.

Region	Total number of applicants aged under 18 for whom case returns have been received[1]	Number of applicants assessed as: Homeless or potentially homeless	Applicants assessed as in priority need: Total	Applicants assessed as in priority need: Number found accommodation
Scotland	2,779	1,368	983	808
Borders	7	5	4	3
Central	170	105	76	68
Dumfries and Galloway	30	21	7	7

Tayside	136	77	52	51
Shetland	5	2	0	0

[1] The table shows the number of case returns received for such households in 1990-91. For Scotland as a whole, case returns have been received for 93 per cent. of all applicant households.

Forestry Commission

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) on what basis the target date of 1995 was identified for the Forest Enterprise part of the Forestry Commission becoming self-financing; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what plans have been drawn up for the Forest Enterprise part of the Forestry Commission becoming self-financing; what are the implications for staffing levels; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 10 July 1992]: The internal reorganisation of the Forestry Commission, which came into effect on 1 April 1992, required an allocation of staff between the Department of Forestry, including the Forestry Authority, and Forest Enterprise, which will have a separate accounting structure that will clearly identify its particular activities and performance. target date of 1995 for the enterprise to become self-financing was decided by the Forestry Commissioners as part of this reorganisation.

The Forest Enterprise is drawing up business plans for the years to 1995, and the implications for staffing levels are not yet known.

Inverclyde Enterprise Zone

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total of public investment in the Inverclyde enterprise zone; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 July 1992]: The total of public sector investment in the Inverclyde enterprise zone to date is approximately £13 million, excluding the cost of land purchases which amounted to £2·9 million.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the total of private investment to date in the Inverclyde enterprise zone; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 July 1992]: The value of the investment made by the 25 or so companies which have established in the Inverclyde enterprise zone is a matter for each individual company. However, about 425,000 sq ft of industrial/business space has been developed in the zone thus far by the private sector, with a further 120,000 sq ft expected to commence shortly. It is estimated that these basic development costs could exceed £50 million.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give (a) the date of designation of the Inverclyde enterprise zone and (b) its expiry date.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 July 1992]: Inverclyde enterprise zone was designated on 3 March 1989 and will expire on 2 March 1999.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate (a) the physical area of the Inverclyde enterprise zone, (b) the proportion of the total area which is unused at the present moment and (c) the proportion which is under construction today.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 July 1992]: The Inverclyde enterprise zone comprises some 274 acres. Some 66 per cent. of the zone is unused at present; that is, there has been little or no development work since designation. The remaining 34 per cent. is currently under construction/recovery or developed.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many staff his Department currently employs; what are the total personnel costs; and what were the staffing levels and personnel costs in 1970.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 14 July 1992]: The number of staff employed by the Scottish Office and associated departments, excluding the Scottish prison service, at 1 April 1992 was 6,558. Personnel management costs for the year 1991-92 were £2,353,617. At 1 April 1992 the Scottish prison service employed 4,228 staff; personnel management costs for 1991-92 were about £813,000.

On 1 January 1970 the composite total for the number of staff employed by the Scottish Office and associated departments including the Scottish prison service was 9,515. This total cannot be broken into its constituent parts; nor are personnel management costs for that year available.

Departmental Advisers

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list any advisers retained by his Department since 1987 who have been criticised in published reports by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 14 July 1992]: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, my Department takes all relevant factors into account when considering such appointments.

Framework for Action

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many copies of the framework for action survey questionnaire were sent out by his Department; and how many staff were involved in this project.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 July 1992]: The administration of this survey was handled by the information and statistics division—ISD—of the Common Services Agency, not by the Scottish Office. The ISD issued 37,705 copies of the questionnaire. Eight members of staff were involved in working on the survey at various times.

Mental Handicap Project, Glasgow

Mrs. Fife: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has accepted Greater Glasgow health board's bid for bridging finance for the Scottish Society for the Mentally Handicapped project at Bilsland drive, Maryhill.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 July 1992]: The project at Bilsland drive, Maryhill is a jointly funded scheme which has not required bridging finance in order to proceed.

Disabled Employees

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West (Mr. Janner) on 1 July, Official Report, column 627, (a) how many of his Department's employees and (b) what proportion of his Department's employees were registered disabled in 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 14 July 1992]: In 1989, 85 registered disabled persons were employed by my Department—1·4 per cent. of the total work force; the corresponding figures for 1990 were 73 and 1·2 per cent. In each of these years my Department employed, in addition, an unrecorded number of disabled persons who had chosen not to register.

Framework for Action

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give figures showing the expenditure by his Department on (a) the preparation and (b) the delivery of the framework for action survey questionnaire; and the level of response to it.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 July 1992]: Final figures for expenditure on the survey are not yet available. The level of response to the survey is not yet available, but will be included in the final report, due to be published at the beginning of August.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to complete work on and publish the results of the framework for action survey questionnaire.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 July 1992]: Preliminary results from the framework for action survey were released on 2 June 1992. The final report is currently being prepared, and will be published at the beginning of August. The report will be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many original copies and how many reminders and duplicate copies of the framework for action survey questionnaire were sent out by his Department; and what were the costs involved in each case.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 14 July 1992]: The information and statistics division of the Common Services Agency sent out 37,705 questionnaires. In addition, all recipients of the questionnaires were sent reminder cards.

Samples for this survey were selected from three sources: from health board payrolls; all general medical and dental practices; and honorary consultants and associate specialists.

Duplicate questionnaires would only be received by members of staff in the unlikely event of their falling into more than one category and being selected in the separate samples, or where they are on the payroll of more than one health board and are selected under their separate payroll reference numbers.

The final costs of carrying out the work on this survey are not yet available.

Coal (Northern Ireland)

Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much coal was transported to Northern Ireland from Ayr harbour in 1992-93.

Mr. Norris: I have been asked to reply.

About 800,000 tonnes were transported in 1991, the latest year for which figures are available.

EDUCATION

Local Management of Schools

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will review the local management of schools formula to take into account actual salary costs in schools with more than 10 teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: We have said that we will review the policy on funding teachers' salaries within LMS schemes. However, it remains our view that governors should be responsible and accountable for the financial implications of their decisions. That is a fundamental principle of good management in both the public and the private sectors. Many local education authorities have taken sensible steps during the transitional period to ease schools' passage into the new arrangements. It would be an error for other authorities to assume that inactivity on their part will lead to a change of policy.

Nursery Education

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans Her Majesty's Government have to make the provision of nursery education a statutory duty upon local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Government have no such plans.

School Meals

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish a table showing (a) expenditure and (b) the average price of school meals in each year since 1976 in cash and constant prices.

Mr. Forth: The latest year for which information on actual expenditure on school meals is available is 1989-90. The available information is as follows:

Net expenditure on school meals and milk[1]

	Cash £ million	[2]Real terms £ million
1975-76	318	1,065
1976-77	382	1,127
1977-78	365	947
1978-79	388	908
1979-80	422	846
1980-81	397	673
1981-82	397	614
1982-83	411	593
1983-84	427	589
1984-85	432	567
1985-86	435	541
1986-87	460	554
1987-88	443	506
1988-89	405	432
1989-90	382	382

The Department has collected figures for the average price of school meals for 1990 and 1991 only. The available information[3] is as follows:

	1990	1991
Primary	68p	72p
Secondary	72p	66p
Special	68p	74p

[1] Recurrent expenditure, less income from paid meals and EC grants.

[2] Figures for earlier years have been converted to 1989-90 prices using the GDP (market prices) deflator.

[3] Figures represent the average charge in England (shown in pence) for a standard meal in schools operating dining centres.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will publish the latest figures showing the numbers of children taking (a) paid school meals and (b) free school meals in (i) primary, (ii) secondary and (iii) special schools; and what proportion they make up of (1) pupils present and (2) pupils on the school roll in each case.

Mr. Forth: The numbers and percentages of pupils on roll taking school meals are shown in table A15 of "Statistics of Education: Schools 1991", copies of which are available in the Library.

Information on the numbers of pupils present in schools on any given day is not collected centrally.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what discussions he has had with the Audit Commission on transferring responsibility for the auditing of city technology colleges from the colleges themselves to the Audit Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend has had no such discussions. It is a requirement on city technology colleges that they have annual audit reports by qualified external auditors appointed by the college. There are no plans to transfer the responsibility for auditing city technology colleges to the Audit Commission.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the land and sites presently held by the City Technology College Trust; and what are the future proposals for each site.

Mr. Forth: The only land presently held by the City Technology College Trust is the site of the former Fitzherbert school, Brighton. The CTC Trust has been actively marketing the site, and is engaged in currrent negotiations to sell it.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the circumstances surrounding the purchase by the the City Technology College Trust of the former Fitzherbert school in Brighton; and what amount of public money was used to acquire the school.

Mr. Forth: The former Fitzherbert school in Brighton was purchased in June 1989 as the site of a proposed city technology college. The cost to public funds was £2·3 million net of legal expenses.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will give the names of the CTC original headteachers who no longer hold the post and the reasons for their departures.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the names of principals of each of the city technology colleges; and what information he has on their dates of appointment.

Mr. Forth: The names and dates of appointment of the current principal, or equivalent, of each CTC are as follows:

College	Title	Name	Date of appointment
Kingshurst	Principal	Valerie Bragg	January 1988
Macmillan	Principal	John Paddick	January 1989
Djanogly	Principal	Matt Andrews	September 1988
Dixon's	Principal	John Lewis	September 1989
Leigh	Principal	Virginia Waterhouse	January 1990
Emmanuel	Principal	George McHugh	September 1989
Harris	Principal	Lyndon Jones	January 1990
Bacon's	Principal	Peter Jenkins	September 1990

College	Title	Name	Date of appointment
Britschool	Principal	Anne Rumney	January 1990
Brooke	Principal	Gareth Newman	September 1990
Haberdashers'	Director	Roy Baldock	November 1990
Thomas Telford	Headmaster	Kevin Satchwell	January 1991
ADT	Chief Executive	Richard Painter	October 1990
Landau Forte	Principal	Peter Shackleton	September 1990

None of these are new appointments made since the establishment of the colleges.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education, pursuant to his answer of 7 July, Official Report, column 120, how many times officials from his Department have had the books and accounts of city technology colleges opened to them; and if he will list the colleges concerned and the dates of each such inspection.

Mr. Forth: Auditing of city technology colleges is the function of external auditors appointed by each college. The Department requires colleges to submit their accounts and auditors' reports soon after the end of each financial year. In addition, the Department's internal audit division has visited each of the colleges at least once since they have opened in order to provide advice on accounting matters to both the colleges and to the Department.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what amounts of public money are estimated to be spent on the funding of city technology colleges for (a) 1992-93, (b) 1993-94 and (c) 1994-95, respectively.

Mr. Forth: Planned expenditure on city technology colleges by the Department for Education in the financial years specified is as follows:

1992-93—£54 million
1993-94—£55 million
1994-95—£56 million

Discretionary Awards

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how expenditure on discretionary awards for students is allowed for within the local authority grant mechanisms; what are the figures for 1991-92 and 1992-93; and if he will break these down by local education authority.

Mr. Forman: In determining education's share of the local authority finance settlement, the Government take account of the broad range of pressures on local education authorities, including the demand for discretionary awards. The total of education standard spending for 1992-93 is £18,786 million, but it is for individual local authorities to decide how to deploy the resources available on the different services for which they are responsible. The proportion of individual local education authorities' standard spending assessments which is attributable to discretionary awards is not separately identified.

English Tests

Dr. Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans he has to arrange a meeting between the School Examinations and Assessment Council and the Northern Examination Association to draft pilot tests in English at key stage 3 of the national curriculum.

Mr. Forth: None.

Local Education Authority Reorganisation

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the number of (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools affected by local education authority reorganisation for each year since 1987.

Mr. Forth: The number of schools is as follows:

	Primary	Secondary
1987	451	612
1988	451	360
1989	364	504
1990	517	223
1991	408	174

In some cases a school may have featured in more than one statutory proposal.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will list the time taken for each local education authority schools reorganisation plan since 1987, from submission of the plan to the Department to a decision being made.

Mr. Forth: This information could be made available only at disproportionate cost.

Surplus Places

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will make a statement on the reduction of surplus places in schools since August 1988.

Mr. Forth: It is estimated that since August 1988 local education authorities have removed about 100,000 places a year. But the net effect has to a large extent been balanced out by the provision of new places in areas where pupil numbers are expanding. As a result, there is still much more that needs to be done. I shall therefore continue to give high priority in the allocation of resources to cost-effective projects for the removal of surplus places.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which grant-maintained schools have made an application for a change in admissions arrangements; and in each case (a) what was the proposed change and (b) was the proposed change approved.

Mr. Forth: Decisions have been taken on proposals for changes by the following grant-maintained schools, as indicated.

School	Change proposed; decision
Maplesdon Noakes School, Kent	Introduction of policy giving priority to children of employees of the school; approved
St. Francis Xavier's College, Liverpool	Admission of a small number of girls to the sixth form and change to the order of subscription criteria; approved
Wymondham College, Norfolk	Increase in number of day pupils; approved
Wilmingdon Grammar School for girls	Modification to selection arrangements; approved
Bingley Grammar School	Introduction of policy giving priority to children of employees of the school; approved
North Halifax High School	Clarification of existing selection arrangements; approved
Crossley Heath High School	Clarification of existing selection arrangements; approved
Caistor Grammar School	Modification of priority criterion relating to place of residence; approved
Budmouth School	Introduction of policy giving priority to children of parents prepared to participate in home-school partnership arrangements; approved
Bullers Wood School, Bromley	Introduction of policy giving priority to children of employees of the school; approved
Haydon School	Introduction of policy giving priority to children of staff at the school; approved
	Introduction of policy giving priority to siblings of former as well as current pupils at the school; rejected
Oldfield School	Introduction of policy giving priority to early applications; rejected
Queen Elizabeth's School, Barnet	Change to order of oversubscription criteria; approved
The King's School, Grantham	Removal of references to residence within the county boundaries; approved

In addition, decisions have yet to be taken on proposals by the following schools for changes to take effect for September 1993.

School	Change proposed;
Dartford Grammar School for Boys	Modification to existing selection arrangements
Dartford Grammar School for Girls	Modification to existing selection arrangements
Queensbury School, Dunstable	Introduction of a policy giving priority to early applications
Highams Park School, London	Replacement of catchment area with a policy of allocating places on the basis of proximity of a child's home to the school; higher priority to be given to siblings and children with medical needs
Send CE First School	Admission of children at the beginning of the year, rather than the term, in which they reach age 5
Heathside School, Weybridge	Up to 40 places to be allocated to children with a particular interest in information technology, music or sport
The John Fisher School, Purley	Clarification of existing policy; addition of further priority categories
King John School, Essex	Resumption of former catchment area
Coopers School, Kent	Introduction of a policy giving priority to children of employees of the school
Nonsuch High School for Girls, Surrey	Modification to existing selection arrangements

Departmental Objectives

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if he will set out the objectives of each division and branch of his Department.

Mr. Forman: The Department's objectives were most recently published in its departmental report, Cm 1911. They are currently under review.

Student Loans

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what the indexation rate for student loans will be for the academic year 1992-93.

Mr. Forman: The indexation rate for the year beginning 1 September 1992 will be 3·9 per cent. This was the increase in the retail prices index in the year to June 1992. It represents a significant fall from the previous rates of 5·8 per cent. in the 1991-92 academic year and of 9·8 per cent. in 1990-91. This demonstrates the Government's success in driving inflation down.

We shall show the new indexation rate in a revised edition of "Student Grants and Loans—A brief guide 1992-93". We shall publish that revised edition shortly.

Special Needs

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education when he is going to consult on his proposals to amend the Education Act 1981 for the benefit of children with special educational needs and their parents.

Mr. Forth: I am today issuing a consultation document on the Government's proposals to amend the Education Act 1981 which were announced by my noble Friend the Minister of State in another place on 29 June; and on our intention to establish a special educational needs tribunal which I announced on 11 July. Our proposals would improve local education authorities' performance on assessing and issuing statements for pupils with SEN; give parents of children with statements of SEN the right to state a preference for their child's school; oblige governors of LEA and grant-maintained schools whose school is named in a statement of SEN to admit that pupil; and provide for a clear and comprehensive system of rights of appeal by parents to an independent tribunal whose decisions would be binding on LEAs.

Consultants' Contracts

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) if he will list the total number of contracts awarded to private consultants by his Department for each year since 1987;

(2) if he will list the total value of contracts awarded to private consultants by his Department for each year since 1987; and what is the projected cost for 1992 and 1993, respectively;

(3) if he will list the title of each contract awarded to private consultants by his Department for each year since 1987.

Mr. Forman [holding answer 9 July 1992]: The total value of contracts awarded by this Department in each year since 1987 is as follows:

£ thousands

Year	Value
1987	[1]364
1988	[1]438
1989	555
1990	974
1991	1,517

[1] Additional costs of £535,000 and £92,000 were spent on costs associated with the privatisation of the Plant Breeding Institute in 1987 and 1988 respectively.

The Department's estimate of expenditure on private consultants for 1992-93 is £1·677 million, including estimates for sport and science which transfer to other departments in the 1992-93 financial year. Decisions on the distribution of the Department's running costs for future years are taken on an annual basis. No estimate can yet be given for 1993-94.

Details of contracts awarded for each year since 1987 are as follows:

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

European Council Agenda

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the powers of the European Commission over the inclusion of part A items on the agenda of the European Council.

Mr. Garel-Jones: The agenda for the European Council itself—Heads of State or Government and the President of the Commission—is not divided into parts A and B.

The President of the Council of Ministers is responsible for dividing the agenda for ordinary Council meetings into part A and part B. An "A" item may be withdrawn from the agenda if a member of the Council or the Commission so requests, unless the Council decides otherwise.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the measures required for implementation of the proposed chemical weapons convention by the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The chemical weapons convention will require Her Majesty's Government to notify the future Organisation for the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons of the legislative and administrative measures it has taken to implement the convention in the United Kingdom. This will include the establishment of a national authority.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the proposed chemical weapons convention text recently agreed at the conference on disarmament in Geneva.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We welcomed the presentation of a draft chemical weapons convention to the conference on disarmament on 22 June as offering a major step forward towards the completion of the convention this year. We will support efforts to achieve this and encourage others to do the same.

Air Pollution

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to ratify the protocol to the 1979 convention on long-range transboundary air pollution concerning the control of emissions of volatile organic compounds or their transboundary fluxes.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom is working to ratify this protocol as soon as possible. This is likely to be at the same time as, or soon after, ratification by the European Community.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the protocols to the 1979 convention on long-range transboundary air pollution that have been agreed to by Her Majesty's Government, indicating which have been ratified by the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: The United Kingdom has signed and ratified the following protocols to the 1979 convention.

The protocol on Long-Term Financing of the Co-operative Programme for Monitoring and Evaluation of the Long-Range Transmission of Air Pollutants in Europe (EMEP);

The protocol concerning the Control of Emissions of Volatile Organic Compounds or their Transboundary Fluxes.

In November 1991 the United Kingdom signed the protocol concerning the control of emissions of volatile organic compounds or their transboundary fluxes. Preparations to ratify this agreement are in hand.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the achievements of his Department and his policies in helping small businesses over the last 12 months relative to the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Goodlad: The Government continue to place a high priority on helping small businesses, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and through specific programmes of support and assistance.

Small firms are given full opportunity to bid for business with my Department. It is also our policy to pay invoices on time.

Business transacted by my Department with small firms in the United Kingdom has increased from £21·1 million in the financial year 1990-91 to £24·2 million in 1991-92. In 1991-92 17·7 per cent. of total expenditure on the purchase of goods and services was with small firms.

Peru

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Peruvian authorities concerning human rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Garel-Jones: As I told the hon. Member for Argyll and Bute (Mrs. Michie) on 29 June, we take every appropriate opportunity, both bilaterally and with our European partners, to emphasise to the Peruvian authorities their obligation to respect and protect human rights. When President Fujimori called on my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister earlier this year, he was left in no doubt about the strength of feeling in this country. On 17 June, our embassy in Lima reminded the Peruvian Foreign Ministry of the importance we attach to the issue of human rights. Most recently, on 26 June, the EC troika ambassadors called on the Peruvian Prime Minister. Inter alia, they stressed the need for full respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms.

Prisoners of War

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Commonwealth of Independent States about President Yeltsin's recent statements about prisoners of war.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have raised this issue in Moscow with the Russian authorities and will continue to pursue it.

Nuclear Exports

Mr. Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures were agreed at the nuclear suppliers group meeting in Warsaw in April to improve controls on nuclear exports.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Nuclear Suppliers Group—NSG—achieved an important step forward in nuclear non-proliferation by the adoption of new controls on nuclear-related dual-use exports. The 27 participating countries reached agreement on guidelines governing transfers and on a list of the nuclear-related dual-use equipment and materials and related technology they will cover. They intend to bring the new arrangements into effect by the end of 1992.

The group also adopted amendments to the existing NSG trigger list, published in 1978, which bring it into line with other international supplier controls.

The text of the two documents have been communicated to the Director-General of the International Atomic Energy Agency and will be published as parts I and II of a new agency circular—INFCIRC/254 Rev. 1—in July. When they are available, copies will be placed in the Library of the House.

GCHQ

Mr. Milligan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans Her Majesty's Government have to place the Government communications headquarters on a statutory basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: We shall bring forward proposals to place GCHQ on a statutory basis together with those for the Secret Intelligence Service to which my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister referred during the debate on the Address on 6 May.

Pakistan

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 25 June, Official Report, column 269, how long the deputy high commission in Karachi has been waiting for information from the high commission in Islamabad to deal with the five outstanding applications for entry clearance.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd [holding answer 9 July 1992]: My answer of 25 June referred to two outstanding applications not five. The deputy high commission in Karachi received the information requested from the high commission in Islamabad within six and seven weeks respectively. Both cases have now been resolved.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Zambia

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response Her Majesty's Government have given to the recent request by President Chiluba of Zambia for additional relief for Zambia's foreign debts; what proportion of these debts are owed to Governments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: We have already rescheduled debt service payments totalling some £4·1 million due in 1992 on past United Kingdom aid loans. We have also told the Zambian Government that, provided their economic reform programme remains in place, we will consider cancelling all Zambia's outstanding aid debt to the United Kingdom.

Other official debt owed to the United Kingdom and other government creditors will be considered in the context of the Paris club. Subject to IMF approval of Zambia's economic reform programme, we shall be pressing for Zambia to receive Trinidad terms at a Paris club meeting later this month. These terms resulted directly from proposals made by the Prime Minister, in 1990, to relieve the burden of debt on the poorest, most heavily indebted countries.

Of Zambia's $4·8 billion—£2·7 billion—long-term debt, about $2·8 billion—£1·6 billion—is owed to Governments.

Slovakia

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list British assistance to Slovakia; what are the levels of assistance for 1992-93; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lennox-Boyd: British bilateral assistance is provided to Czechoslovakia under the know-how fund —KHF. For 1992-93 we expect expenditure to amount to some £6 million. There is no separate programme for either Slovakia or the Czech lands. An updated list of all KHF projects was placed in the Library of the House on 29 June.

HEALTH

Dentistry

Ms. Eagle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she intends to impose the new fee scale on 8 July if no agreement is reached with the British Dental Association.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave the hon. Member for Hazel Grove (Sir T. Arnold) on 23 June at columns 161-62.

Ms. Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many dentists in the family health services authority covering Rossendale and Darwen constituency are now refusing to take new child national health service patients; and what percentage that figure represents of the total number of dentists registered in that FHSA area;

(2) how many dentists in the family health services authority covering the Rossendale and Darwen constituency are now refusing to take new adult national health service patients; and what percentage that figure represents of the total number of dentists registered in that area.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information requested is not available. Lancashire family health services authority has not reported being unable to find a dentist for anyone who has asked for help. There are currently 454 dentists on Lancashire FHSA's dental list.

Radiation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research studies have been sponsored by her Department into the effects of low dose ionising radiation on human blood cells.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health is currently sponsoring the following projects:

1. Collaborative studies on the development and inter-comparison of assays for the detection of abnormal radiosensitivity in individuals;
2. Mutation frequencies in workers at the Sellafield Laboratory.

Care Homes

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will instruct health authorities, where they place patients in private and voluntary sector homes, to meet topping up costs; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: When a health authority accepts responsibility for a patient's in-patient care, it must meet the cost of that care in full, regardless of where it is provided. We have issued guidance, EL(91)108, a copy of which is available in the Library, to health authorities about the circumstances in which, under current legislation, they may make payments to independent sector residential care or nursing homes.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she will take to enforce the obligation of health authorities to provide nursing care for patients discharged from hospitals to nursing homes, by implementing the recommendations of this House's Social Security Committee contained in its fourth report of Session 1990-91, on the financing of private residential and nursing home fees; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: The Government's response to the recommendations of the Committee's fourth report was fully set out in February 1992, Cm 1828.

District Health Authority Funding

Sir Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the district health authorities in England and Wales whose 1992-93 revenue allocation is greater than 5, 10 and 15 per cent. below the target capitation figure which has been agreed by their regional health authorities.

Mr. Sackville: Allocations to district health authorities are the responsibility of the regional health authorities. The following information has been supplied by individual regional health authorities, and are not directly comparable. They should be taken as a broad indication of the relative positions of districts.

The table shows the districts whose 1992-93 revenue allocation is more than 5 per cent., and more than 10 per cent., less than their weighted capitation share. There is only one district, Worthing, whose 1992-93 revenue allocation is more than 15 per cent. under its weighted capitation share.

The information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Romanian Adoptions

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many prospective adoptive parents seeking to adopt a child from Romania through her Department are now ineligible as a result of the agreement with the Romanian Committee for Adoptions signed on 19 March.

Mr. Yeo: A total of 65 families in the United Kingdom who had applications with their respective Government Departments on 19 March were advised, normally via their respective local authority social services departments, that they were ineligible to adopt under the terms of the agreement.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many prospective adoptive parents seeking to adopt a child from Romania are eligible for treatment as special cases as a result of securing parental permission to adoption prior to 16 July 1991;

(2) what action her Department is taking to notify prospective adoptive parents seeking to adopt a child from Romania of the agreement of the Romanian Committee for Adoptions to process applications where parental permission was obtained prior to 16 July 1991.

Mr. Yeo: The Romanian Committee for Adoptions has recently agreed to consider adoption applications from United Kingdom citizens who are able to satisfy the committee that the birth mother had given formal consent to the adoption of her child to the prospective adopters before 17 July 1991. The Department is continuing to trace those to whom the concession may apply, via local authority social services departments.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children from Romania have been adopted by parents resident in the United Kingdom since 1988; and how many of those children have since been received into local authority care.

Mr. Yeo: From the information provided by the Home Office I understand that approximately 340 children have been given leave to enter the United Kingdom from Romania for the purposes of adoption since 1988. Adoption orders are not made until a child has been resident in the United Kingdom for at least 12 months. We are aware of four Romanian children who have been received into local authority care.

Romanian Adoptions

Mr. Jonathan Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 16 June, Official Report, columns 477-78, if he will list the other 11 countries involved in the agreement with the Romanian Committee for Adoption, and if the age conditions are the same for all those countries.

Mr. Yeo: I understand from the Romanian Committee for Adoptions that as of 10 July 1992, the following countries have signed an agreement with it:

Belgium
Canada
Cyprus
Denmark
Finland
France
Holland
Italy
Norway
Sweden
Switzerland
United Kingdom
United States of America.

I have been advised that the age conditions are the same for all countries.

Health Authority Returns

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will introduce legislation to require private patients' services to be included in health authority returns; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: No.

European Year of the Elderly

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has for her Department to celebrate the European Year of the Elderly in 1993; and if will make a statment.

Mr. Yeo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave him on 13 July at columns 430-31.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will issue guidelines to ensure that national health service staff are aware of the specific problems of certain ethnic minorities in (a) religions, (b) languages and (c) food habits; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Department has funded the King's Fund centre to produce guidance on ethnic minority health which will include religions, languages and food habits. We hope to publicise this widely to national health service staff.

Ambulance Targets

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the target in the patients charter for ambulances to reach patients in an emergency; what is the latest information she has on the percentage success in meeting this target for each district health authority and regional health authority; and what action is being taken nationally to meet the target.

Mr. Sackville: The benchmark emergency performance targets in the patients charter are 19 minutes and 14 minutes for rural and urban areas respectively.

Revised recommendations on emergency response times were issued by the national health service management executive in November 1990 as part of a package of good practice guidance for the modern ambulance service. The new standards were formally promulgated in "Health Service Guidance" issued in December 1991.

The latest available figures are given in the tables. These refer to the former metropolitan and non-metropolitan services and to emergency response targets of 14 and 20 minutes.

Ambulance authority	Percentage of calls where response within
	7 minutes (target 50 per cent.)	14 minutes (target 95 per cent.)

London Ambulance Service	11·0	73·7
West Midlands Metropolitan	51·9	88·1
Mersey Metropolitan	59·6	96·5
Greater Manchester Metropolitan	46·6	94·6

Notes:

1. The response time of an ambulance is defined as the time elapsed from the receipt of emergency call to the arrival of fully equipped ambulance at the scene of the incident.
2. When calculating the percentage of calls resulting in a response within a specified time the total number of calls received was used as the denominator. It should be borne in mind that some of these calls (for example, aborted calls or hoax calls) will not have resulted in a response. The effect of this is to depress the percentage response figures slightly.

Hospitals

Sir Malcolm Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate her Department has made of the capital cost of the United Kingdom hospital building programme to meet the plans of regional health authorities over the next five years.

Mr. Sackville: From information held centrally, the total capital cost over the five years 1993-94 to 1997-98 of all schemes costing over £1 million in the current national health service building programme in England is estimated to be £2·8 billion. Around £1·5 billion capital will be invested in NHS buildings this year.

Information relating to Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friends, the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Overseas Doctors

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to oppose current European Community medical directives which restrict the free movement of overseas-qualified doctors within the Community.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will take action to remove the EC medical directives which restrict the free movement of overseas-qualified doctors within the Community; and if she will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: The medical directives were introduced in 1975 to facilitate the free movement of EC doctors within the Community through the automatic recognition of the medical qualifications awarded by member states. The European Commission is looking at the possibility of amending the directives to incorporate overseas qualifications and discussions are presently taking place between health officials of member states.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she last met representatives from the Overseas Doctors Association to discuss European Community directives on the free movement of doctors and their implications for overseas-qualified doctors.

Dr. Mawhinney: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has not met representatives of the Overseas Doctors Association recently to discuss this issue but she wrote to their chairman on 25 June setting out the latest position on the European medical directives.

Ministers and officials meet representatives of the association at regular intervals. On 18 February they met my hon. Friend the then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State. Their last meeting with officials was on 18 June. On both occasions this issue was discussed in detail.

My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary also spoke on this topic when he attended the association's annual dinner as guest speaker on 2 July.

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to put discussion on the implications of European Community medical directives affecting overseas-qualified doctors on the programme for the European Community Health Council during the United Kingdom's presidency.

Dr. Mawhinney: Proposals to amend the directives are the responsibility of the Commission which is currently consulting member states.

Dioxin

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether her Department intends to undertake surveys of the levels of dioxin in blood in the population around the Coalite plant in Derbyshire; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Families on the three farms near the Coalite plant which produced milk with high dioxin levels have already been offered blood tests, and those who accepted have been advised of the results. As the only people in the area likely to have been exposed to higher than normal levels of dioxins are the families on these farms who drank their own farm milk, there is no need for widespread blood analysis or other health screening in the area.

Community Care (Rural Areas)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received from the National Council for Voluntary Organisations concerning the development of community care in rural areas; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Yeo: We have periodic meetings with the National Council of Voluntary Organisations at which we discuss a wide variety of matters to do with the development of community care.

Eye Tests

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many eye tests have been carried out in each year since 1979.

Dr. Mawhinney: The number of national health service sight tests, which are free to patients, paid for by family health services authorities and health boards in Great Britain in each financial year are shown in the table.

Number of NHS sight tests by financial year
Great Britain

	Millions
1979-80	9·55
1980-81	9·53
1981-82	9·70
1982-83	9·94
1983-84	10·63
1984-85	11·34
1985-86	11·76
1986-87	12·21
1987-88	13·49
1988-89	14·39
1989-90[1]	6·04	[2]10·97
1990-91	4·84	[2]12·43
1991-92	5·79

[1] From 1 April 1989, NHS sight tests were restricted to certain groups in the population. The sight tests paid for in 1989-90 include 1·82 million conducted prior to 1 April 1989 when sight tests were universally available. The remaining 4·22 million sight tests paid for in 1989-90 do not represent a full year under the new system, because of the delay in payments.

[2] Total number of sight tests conducted. These figures were estimated using data from a survey carried out by the Federation of Ophthalmic and Dispensing Opticians (FODO).

The Department collects no information on the overall volume of private sight tests. However, there is no reason to assume that total volume in 1991-92 will have declined from the volume of 12·43 million.

Pesticides

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what health risks are associated with the common weedkilling pesticides Mecocrop and Dicamba; and if her Department will sponsor a study into their effects on adults, children and pets.

Mr. Sackville: The possibility that health risks might be associated with the use of these pesticides was considered before they were approved for use. No adverse health effects are likely when the products are used in accordance with the conditions of approval. All pesticides are reviewed periodically for safety and efficacy in use. Mecoprop is under review at present and Dicamba is in the future review programme. The matter of effects on pets is for my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to consider. Adverse effects on pets would seem unlikely if the products are used in accordance with the conditions of approval.

Surgeons

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of surgeons currently working in United Kingdom hospitals; and how many of these surgeons qualified outside the European Community.

Dr. Mawhinney: The total number of surgeons workings in hospitals in England and Wales at 30 September 1990 the latest date for which figures are available, was 11,141, of whom 2,994 qualified outside the European Community. The "whole time equivalent" figures are 9,892·8 and 2,655·1 respectively.

Information relating to Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Hospitals

Sir Malcolm Thornton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate her Department has made of the construction and repair costs of bringing all hospitals in England and Wales up to her Department's target standards of safety.

Mr. Sackville: According to information held centrally, the cost at March 1991 of bringing the national health service estate up to national safety standards was £395 million. This estimate includes work on property due to be replaced within three years, property not used for patient care, property awaiting planned maintenance and property awaiting disposal which together represent about 30 per cent. of the NHS estate. Around £1·5 billion capital will be invested in NHS buildings this year.

Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Disability (Consultation)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many user consultative committees have been set up at disablement services centres with representation from artificial limb and wheelchair users' organisations; and what steps are being taken to ensure that such committees will be organised at all centres.

Mr. Yeo: We do not routinely collect information on the number of formal user consultative committees set up at disablement services centres, but we understand that in 1991-92 there were 12 such committees, with more in the process of formation. We actively encourage consultation of user interests; the method of consultation is best decided locally.

Radiotherapists

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the establishments in England which train radiotherapists, the number of training places in each, the number of students successfully completing their course in each of the past five years, and the percentage pass rate in each of the past five years, for each establishment.

Dr. Mawhinney: The 31 radiography training establishments in England are as follows:

Addenbrooke's Hospital School of Radiography, Cambridge
Birmingham School of Radiography, Birmingham
Bradford and Airedale College of Health, Bradford Royal Infirmary, Bradford
Bristol School of Radiography, Bristol Royal Infirmary, Bristol
Charterhouse College of Radiography, London
Christchurch College, Canterbury
Christie Hospital and Holt Radium Institute, Manchester
Cleveland School of Radiography, South Cleveland Hospital, Middlesbrough
Derbyshire College of Higher Education, Derby
East Anglian College of Radiography, Ipswich
Guy's Hospital Radiography Education Centre, London
Hatfield Polytechnic, Hertfordshire
Humberside College of Health, Hull
John Radcliffe Hospital School of Radiography, Oxford
King's College Hospital, Department of Radiography, London
Leeds School of Radiography, Royal Infirmary, Leeds
Merseyside School of Radiography, Royal Liverpool Hospital College, Liverpool
Moor Hospital School of Radiography, Lancaster
Newcastle Schools of Radiography, Royal Victoria Infirmary, Newcastle-upon-Tyne
Northampton General Hospital School of Radiography, Northampton
North Trent Radiography Training Unit, City Polytechnic, Sheffield
Portsmouth School of Radiography, St. Mary's Hospital, Portsmouth
Queen Elizabeth Military Hospital, School of Radiography, London
Royal Marsden Hospital, School of Therapeutic Radiography, Sutton, Surrey
Salford College of Technology, Salford
Southampton General Hospital, School of Radiography, Southampton
South East Thames Regional Radiotherapy Centre, St. Thomas' Hospital, London
South West College of Health, Plymouth
South West Thames Regional Radiography Centre, St. Luke's Hospital, Guildford
South West Thames School of Radiography, St. George's Hospital, London
Stoke-on-Trent School of Radiography, City General Hospital, Stoke-on-Trent.

The other information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Hospital Waiting Times

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will state for each health authority in England as at 1 April 1992 whether it has published a guaranteed maximum waiting time for patients seeking (a) hip replacements, (b) cataract removals and (c) hernia repairs; and for those authorities that had done so what waiting times were guaranteed by each authority.

Mr. Sackville: From 1 April 1992, under the patients charter, all health authorities are required to guarantee admission for treatment within two years of a patient being placed on a waiting list. This will be improved to 18 months for hip and knee replacement and cataract operations from 31 March 1993. From 1 April 1992 health authorities should ensure that guaranteed maximum waiting times are publicised.

Senior Nurses

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) by each health authority district area how many senior nurse posts have been lost in each of the past five years according to (a) director of nursing services—DNS—level, (b) assistant DNS, (c) senior nursing support posts and (d) senior nursing officers; and how many posts in each category have been lost through (i) redeployment and (ii) retirement;

(2) how much money has been saved by each health authority through the elimination of senior nursing posts in each of the last five years; and how the money has been reallocated in each instance.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Medicines Commission

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to receive the annual report of the Medicines Commission for 1991.

Dr. Mawhinney: We have received the report, and copies have today been laid beforé both Houses of Parliament in accordance with the requirements of section 5(2) of the Medicines Act 1968.

Bound volumes have been placed in the Library containing the 1991 reports of the Medicines Commission, the Committee on Safety of Medicines, the Committee on Dental and Surgical Materials, the Committee on the Review of Medicines, the British Pharmacopoeia Commission and the Veterinary Products Committee.

We are glad to pay tribute to the valuable work done by the distinguished members of the Medicines Act advisory bodies and thank them warmly for the time and effort which they contribute to the public interest in this most important field.

Medicines

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what regulations apply to the issuing of out-of-date medicines by pharmacists.

Dr. Mawhinney: Expiry dates, which indicate a shelf-life based on manufacturers' stability data, are required to be included on the manufacturers' label of a medicinal product by the Medicines (Labelling) Regulations 1976, as amended. Pharmacists do not dispense medicines past their expiry date other than in very exceptional circumstances, such as in an emergency.

While there are no specific regulations governing the supply by pharmacists of medicines past their expiry date, the dispensing of expired stock runs contrary to the Royal Pharmaceutical Society's code of ethics, and disciplinary proceedings may be taken against pharmacists who are found to be in breach of the code.

The dispensing of substandard medicines is a breach of the pharmacist's terms of service under the National Health Service (Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations 1992.

Maternity Services

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the Government's response to the second report of the Select Committee on Health of Session 1991-92 on maternity services (House of Commons Paper No. 29).

Dr. Mawhinney: The Government have today published their response to the Health Committee's second report on the national health service maternity services.

Pregnancy, childbirth and the early months of life are no longer the hazardous experiences they were in times past. The record speaks for itself. The rate of perinatal and infant mortality is at the lowest level ever. Maternal deaths are now very rare indeed. More premature babies are saved than ever before. Doctors, midwives and nurses can justifiably be proud of the services they give.

The Government have a responsibility for ensuring that women receive the best possible maternity care. We also believe that the service must be sensitive to the views of those who use it, that women are empowered to take decisions about their care. The Government will maintain the high level of service in the NHS and will make improvements where these are necessary. Central to these objectives are:

the patients charter which makes the needs and wishes of those who use the health service paramount;

the improvements in care resulting from the confidential inquiries into maternal deaths and into stillbirths and deaths in infancy;

the target setting and performance monitoring carried out by the NHS management executive to maintain and raise standards of health care.

In the response to the Health Committee, the Government have announced two new initiatives:

the setting up of a maternity services task force to disseminate information widely in the NHS about good practice in the management of health care during pregnancy, childbirth and the postnatal period; to appoint an expert committee to review policy on care during childbirth and to be chaired by a woman independent of professions involved.

Membership of the expert committee will include strong representation from women who use the service. The expert committee's job will be to make recommendations about arrangements for care, taking full account of the shift in the attitudes of many women in favour of a more homely and less technological setting for care while not compromising the safety of mothers and babies. The committee's considerations will include birth at home.

In all the activities associated with care during pregnancy and childbirth, the woman should be properly informed and able to participate fully in the decisions that are taken. This is common ground between the Government and the Health Committee. The NHS reforms and the patients charter are the means for achieving these ends.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the annual report and accounts of the Medicines Control Agency.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have today placed in the Library copies of the agency's report and accounts for 1991-92.

Abortion

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what methods her Department uses to confirm that the number of abortions reported to her Department by private abortion clinics is the actual number of abortions performed at that clinic.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 13 July 1992]: Section 1(3) of the Abortion Act 1967 requires the medical practitioner performing the termination, not the approved place, to notify the chief medical officer. Procedures for certification and notification of termination of pregnancy are checked by the Department's officers during the course of unannounced inspection visits. Any inconsistencies revealed are fully investigated.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will detail the procedures followed by her Department when abortion notification forms are received which do not state the medical condition of the mother.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 13 July 1992]: The chief medical officer returns the notification form—HSA4—to the operating doctor with a request that the medical condition should be completed.

Disabled Employees

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 30 June, to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West, (Mr. Janner) Official Report, column 462, how many and what proportion of her Department's employees were registered disabled in 1989 and 1990, respectively.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 14 July 1992]: In June 1989 there were 30 registered disabled people employed in the Department which represented 0·7 per cent. of the total work force. In 1990, the comparable figures were 29 and 0·6 per cent.

Dry-cleaning Chemicals

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been undertaken by her Department into potential health risks from chemicals used by dry cleaners; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: I have been asked to reply.

The majority of dry cleaners use either perchloroethylene (tetrachlorethylene), or 1,1,2 trichloro-1,1,2 trifluoroethane (R113). White spirit and trichlorethylene are also known to be used and a few may use 1,1,1 trichloroethane (methyl chloroform) or trichlorofluoromethane) (R11). No specific research into the potential health risks from the use of these chemicals by dry cleaners has been carried out by either the Department of Employment or the Department of Health, but the Health and Safety Executive is currently assessing recently published scientific data concerning health risks associated with exposure to perchloroethylene.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Fair Employment

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made to correct the under-employment of Protestants by the Eastern Health and Social Services area board; whether this board has been investigated by the new Fair Employment Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The Eastern health and social services board has an equal opportunities policy and has developed procedures for the implementation and monitoring of equality of opportunity, which are in line with the recommendations in the code of practice on fair employment. The board is committed to carry out any affirmative action necessary to address any apparent imbalance in its work force.

The board has not been investigated by the Fair Employment Commission, but, in line with other employers, consults the commission as and when necessary.

Hospitals

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the total expenditure on hospitals by the Eastern health and social services area board in each of the past five years; and how much in each year was for capital projects.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Capital works £	Total £
1986-87	7,972,296	217,094,300
1987-88	11,509,758	236,424,600
1988-89	11,013,938	255,205,941
1989-90	9,032,633	267,502,118
1990-91	11,659,842	296,815,875

Forestry

Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are employed in the forestry industry in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: About 1,050; 500 of whom are employed in the Department of Agriculture forest service and approximately 550 in the private sector.

Hospital Services, Downpatrick

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to provide funding for the relocation of acute hospital services on the Downshire site in Downpatrick, Co. Down; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The management and delivery of acute hospital services in the Downpatrick area is the responsibility of the Eastern health and social services board. The consultation period on its recently published consultative document "Framework for General (Acute) Hospital Services within the Board Area" is due to end on 30 September 1992, after which the board will frame its proposals for the future. I understand that the board has not at this time agreed any plans to relocate acute hospital services on the Downshire site.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people are employed by the fishing industry in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hanley: There is estimated to be some 2,900 people employed in the Northern Ireland fishing industry either on a full-time or part-time basis. This includes sea fisherman, fish farmers, those engage in processing and other ancillary occupations and commercial salmon and inland fishery enterprises.

Hospital Bed Closures

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will increase the budgetary allocation to the Eastern health and social services board in order to prevent the proposed reductions of beds and job losses in hospitals within the board area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: The Eastern board's recently published consultative document "A Framework for General (Acute) Hospital Services within the Eastern Board Area" contains an analysis of the future need for acute hospital beds in its area. The conclusion in the document that fewer acute beds will be needed does not stem primarily from cost or budgetary considerations. Advances in medical techniques and tchnology, and improvements in efficiency levels in the use of beds to match those being achieved elsewhere, mean that the same number of patients could receive treatment of a higher quality in the Eastern board area with at least 750 fewer beds. The Government are fully committed to seeking continuing improvements in the quality of care while making the best use of available resources and they fully support the principles which underline the Eastern board's policy for the provision of acute care.

European Year of the Elderly

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has for his Department to celebrate in 1993 the European Year of the Elderly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 13 July, Official Report, columns 430-31.

The Department of Health and Social Services in Northern Ireland is contributing to the development of the national programme for the year and, in addition, has set up a Northern Ireland steering group to plan and co-ordinate regional activities.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what dates and in what parts of Northern Ireland the cold weather payments system was triggered during the winter of 1991-92; and how many households received payment on each occasion.

Mr. Hanley: Social security operational matters are the responsibility of the chief executive of the Social Security Agency. However, I understand that the cold weather payment system was not triggered in any part of Northern Ireland during the winter of 1991-92.

Grammar Schools

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many places in grammar schools in South Down were allocated to students who obtained a grade 1 and a grade 2, respectively, in the selection procedure;

(2) how many applications were received by each grammar school in South Down from pupils who received grade 1 and grade 2 in the selection procedure;

(3) how many places were available for student intakes into each grammar school in South Down for the academic year 1992-93.

Mr. Hanley: The information requested in respect of 1992-93 is as follows:

School	Places available	Applications		Admissions
		Grade 1	Grade 2	Grade 1	Grade 2
Down High School, Downpatrick	100	74	33	74	26
Assumption Grammar School, Ballynahinch	135	134	36	134	1
St. Patrick's Grammar School, Downpatrick	100	94	28	94	16
St. Louis's Grammar School, Kilkeel	78	35	41	35	40
Total	423	337	138	337	83

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many households in Northern Ireland qualify for payments under the cold weather payments scheme.

Mr. Hanley: Social Security operational matters are the responsibility of the chief executive of the Social Security Agency. However, I understand that information is not kept on the number of households in Northern Ireland who qualify for payments under the cold weather payment scheme.

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what dates cold weather payments were made in Northern Ireland in response to a forecast of a qualifying period; and if he will indicate the period taken for payment to be made once the system has been triggered.

Mr. Hanley: Social Security operation matters are the responsibility of the chief executive of the Social Security Agency. However, I understand that since the introduction of the forecast system on 1 November 1991, no cold weather payments have been made in Northern Ireland in response to a forecast of a qualifying period.

Legal Parades

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of (a) the number of security force personnel and (b) the cost of policing each legal parade or march held in (i) Newry town, (ii) Armagh, (iii) Newtownhamilton or (iv) Markethill in each of the past three years.

Mr. Mates: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many legal parades were approved by the Royal Ulster Constabulary in (a) Newry town, (b) Armagh, (c) Newtonhamiltown and (d) Markethill in each year since 1980;

(2) if he will give details of all legal parades or marches in each of the past five years, that were held in (a) Newry town, (b) Armagh city, (c) Newtownhamilton and (d) Markethill;

(3) what organisation sought permission for each legal parade in (a) Newry town, (b) Armagh, (c) Newtownhamilton and (d) Markethill in each of the past five years.

Mr. Mates: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Police Complaints

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what decisions he has reached on the recommendations contained in the report of the Independent Commission of Police Complaints on its triennial review 1988-91.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: My predecessor announced on 27 March 1991 that he intended to consult various interested bodies. A consultation document was sent to the police authority, the Chief Constable, the police representative bodies, the Director of Public Prosecutions, the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights, the Committee on the Administration of Justice, the Northern Ireland Committee of the Irish Congress of Trade Unions and Northern Ireland Members of this House. The document was also made available to anyone else on request.

I have given further consideration to the recommendations in the light of the comments received. I have decided to accept six of the commission's nine recommendations in whole or in part.

I have accepted the following two recommendations which can be implemented by amendments to regulations and I have asked my officials to bring forward the necessary amendments as quickly as possible:

The informal resolution procedure should be amended to provide for the complainant to indicate in writing that he is satisfied that his complaint has been resolved (recommendation 2). The regulations would make it clear that the complainant is not required to sign such a statement if he or she does not want to.

Regulations should be made to provide a monitoring role for the Commission where the Police Authority decides to use its discretionary power under Article 6(2) of the 1987 Order to deal with a complaint against a senior officer other than by formal investigation (recommendation 3).

I have also accepted the following three recommendations whose implementation will require primary legislation. The second of these is part of a wider recommendation. They will be implemented at the earliest legislative opportunity:

A complaint should be referred to the Commission once it has been recorded by the appropriate authority under Article 5(1) or Article 6(1) of the 1987 Order (recommendation 4).

The Commission should be granted discretion to discontinue supervision of a case where it becomes apparent that supervision is not warranted (second part of recommendation 6).

The 1987 Order should be amended to require the Commission to give its reasons to the Chief Constable for preferring disciplinary charges at the recommendation stage under Article 13(1) rather than at the later stage of direction (recommendation 7).

The purpose of recommendation 7 is being achieved by administrative action pending amendment to legislation.

I have accepted the following recommendation which is an administrative matter for the Policy Authority and the Independent Commission for Police Complaints:

meetings between the Police Authority and the Commission should continue on a more structured basis (recommendation 9)

I have decided not to accept the following three recommendations and the first part of another recommendation:

The Chief Constable should be required to consult the Commission in those cases where he is of the opinion that the matter does not constitute a complaint within the meaning of Article 2 of the 1987 Order; the Commission's decision should prevail where there is a difference of view as to whether the matter should properly be regarded as constituting a complaint (recommendation 1)

The Commission should be given a reserve power under an amended Article 8 of the 1987 Order to "call in" for supervision in the public interest those matters considered by the Commission to be of grave or exceptional circumstances (recommendation 5)

The mandatory supervision of complaints category relating to serious injury should be eliminated, that supervision in all cases should be a matter for the discretion of the Commission (first part of recommendation 6)

Consideration should be given to the establishment of a truly independent tribunal with a legally qualified chairman to hear disciplinary charges. Such charges would be presented on behalf of the Commission at the hearing; any consequential disciplinary action would be the responsibility of the Chief Constable and he might therefore require to have a presence or a specialised function at a tribunal (recommendation 8).

I have been heartened by the positive response to the consultation document on the commission's recommendations and I am satisfied that the action I have outlined will further enhance the operation of the procedures for dealing with complaints against the police.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will indicate when he plans to privatise the water and sewerage functions of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: The citizens charter for Northern Ireland made clear the Government's intention to privatise the Department of the Environment's water and sewerage functions. Hitherto, it had been intended that these functions would be transferred to a Government-owned company before privatisation. However, having reviewed progress, I have concluded that we should in fact proceed directly to privatisation, as soon as practicable in 1995-96. This will build on the preparatory work which has already been done and will allow customers and taxpayers to obtain at the earliest date the benefits that privatisation will bring.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Broadcasting, Northern Ireland

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to ensure that regional broadcasting within Northern Ireland is maintained and enhanced; and if he will make it his policy to ensure that regional broadcasting stations at Newry town hall and elsewhere will continue to operate in the future.

Mr. Key: BBC programming and day-to-day administration, including its continuing commitment to regional broadcasting in Northern Ireland, are a matter for the corporation under its royal charter and licence and agreement. The Broadcasting Act 1990 established the framework for other national and regional television and radio services.

European Year of the Elderly

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has for his Department to celebrate in 1993 the European Year of the Elderly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Key: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 13 July 1992, Official Report, columns 430-31.

Supermarkets

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what information is held on the number of playing fields lost to supermarket developments over the last 10 years in England.

Mr. Key: There is no centrally held information on the loss of playing fields. However, the Sports Council's grant in aid for 1991-92 included a specific sum to cover the cost of preparing a national register of playing fields in England. This will provide a means of monitoring gains and losses in playing fields and should be completed at the end of May 1993.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Scottish Business

Mr. McMaster: To ask the Lord President of the Council what plans he has to propose amendments to the procedures for the consideration of business in the House which relates solely to Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Existing procedures offer a variety of ways of handling Scottish business. The recent reconstituting of the Scottish Affairs Select Committee provides an additional opportunity for consideration of Scottish issues by the House.

WALES

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what was the expenditure of the Welsh Development Agency's property development programme in 1991-92 in the district authority areas of (a) Cynon Valley, (b) Merthyr Tydfill and (c) the Rhondda; and what is the estimated expenditure in these three districts in 1992-93;

(2) whether he will list each project in the Welsh Development Agency's property development programme for 1991-92 and the cost of each project in that year and the corresponding information in 1992-93.

Mr. David Hunt: I have arranged for the chief executive of the WDA to write to the hon. Gentleman, and for a copy to be placed in the Library of the House.

Young People

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many 16 and 17-year-olds there are in (a) Blaenau Gwent, (b) Gwent and (c) Wales; and how many in each case are (1) in full-time education, (2) in youth training schemes, (3) receiving income support and (4) are neither in full-time education, youth training schemes, nor in receipt of income support.

Sir Wyn Roberts: The total numbers of 16 and 17-year-olds and the numberrs of those in full-time education for the requested areas are given in the table. Also shown are the numbers of persons of all ages on youth training schemes; age-specific data are not collected. Reliable information on the numbers of 16 and 17-year-olds receiving income support and those who are neither in full-time education, on youth training schemes, nor in receipt of income support is not available for Wales.

[3]Those aged 16 or 17 on 31 August 1990 attending schools as at January 1991.

[4]All ages, as at 24 May 1992.

Blind Children

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of parents of blind and partially sighted children received social work counselling in Wales in the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will make it his policy to issue guidelines to local authorities concerning the development of counselling services for parents upon discovery of a child's disability.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The figures requested are not held centrally. The Children Act 1989 provides a framework for the provision of services for all children, including those with disabilities. It makes clear the duty of local authorities to safeguard the needs of children with disabilities and their families, and to ensure that advice, guidance and counselling are available. It is for each local authority to decide what serices they consider appropriate. Comprehensive guidance on all aspects of the Act was issued to local authorities prior to its implementation in October 1991. The Secretary of State has no plans to issue further guidance to local authorities on this matter.

Neath-Port Talbot Hospital

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether the preparation for the building of the Neath/Port Talbot hospital is on target; and when the first contracts will be signed.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I understand that West Glamorgan health authority still anticipates that work will commence later this year on the infrastructure contract. Progress therefore remains on target.

Youth Training

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether the system for monitoring the numbers of young people covered by the youth training guarantee and seeking a place on youth training announced in the oral answer by the Secretary of State for Employment, Official Report, 7 July 1992, column 172, will cover Wales; who will be responsible for monitoring in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I reviewed performance on the youth training guarantee at a recent meeting with the chairmen of Welsh training and enterprise councils and I am satisfied that Welsh TECs have the resources they need to meet the guarantee. The Minister of State has subsequently written to the chairmen asking them for advance information of any issues in meeting it. My officials are discussing the position with each TEC, and will also be reviewing with TECs and principal careers officers whether changes to monitoring arrangements need to be made in the light of the steps announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment on 7 July.

Elderly People

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total number of elderly people dependent on income support, that have been turned away from voluntary care homes in Wales, for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not held centrally.

Rural Wales

Mr. John Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will bring together the principal agencies concerned with the problems of rural Wales under his chairmanship at regular intervals.

Mr. David Hunt: Ministers frequently meet the chairmen and chief officers of all the agencies concerned to discuss the problems facing rural Wales and my officials are in regular contact with the staff of these agencies. The agencies also maintain close liaison with each other on matters of common interest.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a list of all sites of special scientific interest in Wales at present; how many of these sites of special scientific interest have been damaged during the last year; and what is the estimated percentage figure of the land mass of Wales currently designated as sites of special scientific interest.

Sir Wyn Roberts: There are currently 843 sites of special scientific interest in Wales. I have arranged for copies of the full list of sites to be placed in the Library of the House.

The Countryside Council for Wales is aware of damage to 45 sites during the period 1 April 1991 to 31 March 1992. The area of Wales which has been notified as sites of special scientific interest is approximately 9·5 per cent.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the achievements of his Department and his policies in helping small businesses over the last 12 months relative to the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. David Hunt: The Government continue to place a high priority on helping small businesses, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and through specific programmes of support and assistance.

Measures operated by my Department to assist small businesses include the following:

Support for Local Enterprise Agencies

There are currently 21 local enterprise agencies in Wales and there is a likelihood of a number of new organisations approaching me for approval in the near future. In order to strengthen the network of agencies to improve and enhance services to small businesses mergers between agencies are encouraged where appropriate. One merger involving two agencies has occurred since last year. The WDA and the DBRW provided £318,000 in direct grant support to enterprise agencies for core services in 1991-92.

Training and Enterprise Councils

The training and enterprise councils (TECs) in Wales are responsible for running a range of measures which assist small businesses. They are continuing to develop provision to help new and existing businesses to acquire and build skills which will enable them to compete and grow. During the last financial year Welsh TECs assisted over 8,000 owner-managers and helped more than 3,300 people to start their own new businesses.

Regional Selective Assistance, Regional Enterprise Grant

Small businesses continue to take advantage of the help available under regional selective assistance. In the year to end of June 1992, 139 small firms (employing up to 200 people) accepted offers of RSA. The value of these offers in 1992 amount to £19·2 million. A further 151 small firms (employing less than 25 people) accepted offers of Regional Enterprise Grant totalling £1·70 million.

Enterprise Wales

Launched in January 1988, the consultancy initiatives have proved extremely popular in Wales. More than 5,175 companies have applied. In 1991-92 alone 1,040 applicants were received, 6 per cent. above the economic weight, and 1,031 business reviews were commissioned, 19 per cent. above the economic weight.

Small firms merit award for research and technology (SMART)

The number of small Welsh companies which received a SMART stage 1 award during the past 12 months was 16 and 11 companies received the SMART stage 2 awards. The maximum value of each stage 1 award has been increased from £37,500 to £45,000 and each stage 2 award from £50,000 to £60,000. On a per-capita basis, Wales has continued to do better than most other regions in this annual competition, receiving about 9 per cent. of the total awards nationwide.

Support for products under research

This scheme, which was introduced in 1991, is intended to support highly innovative projects by companies employing up to 500 persons. During the first year of its operation, offers of financial assistance were made to 10 Welsh companies, to a total value of £750,000.

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Rod Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will set up a tribunal to consider appeals relating to educational provision for children with special needs in Wales.

Sir Wyn Roberts: I am pleased to announce that I am today issuing in Wales a consultation paper "Special Educational Needs—Access to the System". This sets out our proposals to introduce legislation to give new rights to parents of children with special educational needs, including a tribunal system, and to make improvements to the assessment and statementing procedures.

Our proposals will extend parents' rights over choice of school, reduce the time taken by local education authorities in making assessments and statements, extend parents' rights to appeal and make those rights more coherent and establish an independent appeals tribunal to replace the present complex arrangements. We shall also be issuing further guidance for local education authorities on the criteria to be used for making assessments and issuing statements.

I am arranging for a copy of the consultation paper to be placed in the Library of the House.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many schools in Wales have opted out; how many have applied to opt out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Five schools have voted in favour of applying for grant-maintained status and submitted proposals for my consideration. Of these, three were approved. I expect many more applications over the next few months.

Open Government

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what actions he is pursuing to promote open government in his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: My Department is taking part in the Duchy of Lancaster interdepartmental review which is looking at: reviewing statutory restrictions on disclosure; extending rights of access to personal records including those held manually; and publication and greater accessibility of technical and other inspection reports.

European Single Market

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the impact of the European single market on the Welsh economy.

Mr. David Hunt: The impact of the single market programme on the Welsh economy will depend on how individual firms respond to the challenges and opportunities which the removal of trade barriers will create. Few firms, even those whose markets are predominantly local, will remain unaffected by some part of the single market programme. To help meet this challenge, the Government have provided the most comprehensive single market information service anywhere in the Community. In Wales, programmes such as Euroline, Interprise and the partnerships which are being developed with other regions of the Community, such as Baden Württemberg, also enhance the opportunities available to companies and both my Department and the Welsh Development Agency make every effort to encourage Welsh companies to take advantage of what is on offer.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his latest assessment of the impact and advantages for the Welsh economy of the opening of the channel tunnel.

Mr. David Hunt: This is one of the most important projects being undertaken in Europe today. It will provide a new opportunity for access to continental Europe for freight as well as business and leisure travel, to the considerable benefit of the whole of Britain. I am certain that both existing and future businesses in Wales will share in the benefits the channel tunnel will bring.

British Coal

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes next to meet the chairman of British Coal.

Mr. David Hunt: The date for my next meeting with the chairman of British Coal has not yet been fixed.

British Rail

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he next proposes to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss investment and development in regional railways.

Mr. David Hunt: I see the chairman of British Rail regularly to discuss a wide range of rail issues. I hope to meet Sir Bob Reid again later this year.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people were employed by British Rail in Wales in 1971 and 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: This information is not held centrally.

Whaling

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received concerning the killing of whales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: I have received two representations concerning the killing of whales. The hon. Gentleman will by now have seen a copy of the letter that my right hon. Friend the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food issued to all Members of the House on 7 July which sets out the Government's position on whaling. I have nothing further to add.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the financial advantages of opting out of their local education authority for (a) high schools and (b) primary schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: All grant-maintained schools, irrespective of whether they are in the primary or secondary sector, are eligible for four forms of grant aid from my Department: transitional grant, annual maintenance grant, special purpose grants and capital grant.

Transitional grants enable schools to prepare for their new responsibilities in the grant-maintained sector and are payable in advance of the effective date of operation. Annual maintenance grant is based on what a school would have received for its running costs under its former LEA's local management of schools scheme. In addition, the grant includes an amount calculated to be the school's proportion of the LEA's expenditure on services which were previously provided centrally, thereby giving the school complete freedom in deciding which services it wishes to purchase to meet its own priorities, independently of the local authority. Special purpose grants mainly parallel the support available to LEAs through my Department's grants for education support and training —GEST—programme, much of which is currently retained at LEA level, again providing the grant-maintained school with the flexibility to decide its own priorities. Capital grants are available in the form of allocations for named projects and formula-based allocations for the purchase of equipment and small scale projects. All grant-maintained schools are automatically entitled to the latter, thereby guaranteeing them a certain level of funding.

The financial advantages of grant-maintained status are therefore, manifold. It is for governors and headteachers to decide together how to manage the funds, how to manage the curriculum, whom to employ, and what services and goods to buy. Grant-maintained schools therefore benefit from increased flexibility to spend their resources, free from LEA bureaucracy. A recent survey by the Grant Maintained Schools Centre revealed that:

88 per cent. of schools reported increased pupil numbers;

48 per cent. have reported increased classroom support staff;

82 per cent. have reported increased spending on books and equipment;

72 per cent. of those who responded reported increased teacher numbers.

GM heads reported greater flexibility, enhanced administrative support, and redirection of funds from LEA bureaucracy to classroom.

There can be no doubt about the benefit of grant-maintained status to parents, pupils and schools alike. I expect many more applications for grant maintained status over the coming months from schools wishing to take advantage of these benefits.

A494

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which traffic census statistics his Department uses concerning the proposed A494 improvement from the River Dee to Ewloe.

Mr. David Hunt: The north-east Clwyd traffic study was used as the basis for these road proposals, a summary of which was sent to the hon. Gentleman on 22 February 1992.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will seek a new census of traffic concerning the A494 improvement from the River Dee to Ewloe which takes into account the holiday peak period traffic flows; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: Peak period holiday traffic flows are already taken into account. It is not the intention at present to carry out additional traffic census as such, but information from existing automatic traffic counters will continue to be examined and assessed.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the statistics on traffic flow used to consider the A494 improvement scheme were taken before the completion of the M53-A55 link; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The projected traffic flows used to formulate the proposals took into account the existence of the M53-A55 link.

NHS Capital Costs

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his best estimate of the total capital costs to the NHS in Wales, by health district and in total, arising from (a) the removal of Crown immunity, (b) health and safety requirements for the incineration of infected waste and (c) recommendations to limit ionising radiation exposure to patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: District health authorities in Wales have estimated that the capital expenditure needed to meet the cost of work associated with the removal of Crown immunity and the introduction of new requirements for the incineration of infected waste is as follows:

	£ million
Powys	1.5
Gwent	4·4
West Glamorgan	4·5
Clwyd	2·1
Mid Glamorgan	4·0
East Dyfed	5·0
Pembrokeshire NHS Trust	0·7
South Glamorgan	47·0
Gwynedd	3·7
Total	73·0

No figures are available centrally relating to the capital costs of measures to limit the exposure of patients to ionising radiation.

Cardiovascular Disease

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will set a target date to cut the number of premature deaths from cardiovascular disease by 40 per cent. in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Health Planning Forum has published an overall goal of a reduction in premature deaths from cardiovascular disease of a third by the year 2002 compared with 1988.

This category of condition encompasses, among other conditions, coronary heart disease and stroke for which separate targets have been set.

In Wales, from the baseline set in 1985, a reduction of 45 and 52 per cent. is sought for women and men respectively in the death rate from coronary heart disease, and 37 and 47 per cent. for women and men respectively in the death rate from stroke.

I am pleased to report that Wales is well on course to meeting these targets.

Radiotherapists

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the establishments in Wales which train radiotherapists, the number of training places on each and the number of students successfully completing their course in each of the past five years, and the percentage pass rate in each of the past five years, for each establishment.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Wales's only School of Therapeutic Radiography is located at Velindre hospital, Cardiff. It is currently accredited to offer 10 student places annually. Information on pass rates, etcetera, over the past five years is as follows:

Number of Students

	Entered for final examinations	Successfully completed course	Pass rate percentage
1988	7	7	100
1989	[1]0	[1]0	—
1990	3	3	100
1991	6	5	83
1992	5	5	100

[1] No intake in 1986.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what advice has been offered by the Audit Commission in regard to transitional arrangements during the reorganisation of local government in Wales;

(2) what steps he has taken to obtain the advice of the Audit Commission on transitional arrangements in regard to local government organisations in Wales.

Mr. David Hunt: Transitional arrangements are currently the subject of consultation with the local authority associations and discussion with the Audit Commission.

Senior Nurses

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much money has been saved by each health authority in Wales through the elimination of senior nursing posts in each of the last five years; and how the money has been reallocated in each instance.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally.

Senior Nurses

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by each health authority district area in Wales, how many senior nurse posts have been lost in each of the past, five years according to (a) director of nursing services—DNS—level, (b) assistant DNS, (c) senior nursing support posts and (d) senior nursing officers; and how many posts in each category have been lost through (i) redeployment and (ii) retirement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Information on the number of posts is not available centrally. However some information on the number and whole-time equivalent number of senior nurses/senior midwives is given in the table. Due to the regrading of staff during 1988-89, comparable information is not available for previous years. Senior nurse support staff cannot be separately identified.

[1] Excludes Welsh Health Common Services Authority. Some senior nurses/senior midwives may have been reclassified as senior managers over the years shown affecting the comparability of figures for different years.
[2] Included Assistant Director of Nursing Services.
[3] A new senior nurse/senior midwife structure was introduced during 1991, and staff cannot readily be split into the categories used for previous years.

NHS Business Managers

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many business managers are currently employed in the national health service by each health authority area.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not available centrally.

Local Authorities (Management)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has in regard to the internal management of local authorities in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The next stage of consultation on internal management is for discussion at the forthcoming meeting of the Welsh Consultative Council on Local Government.

Health Gain

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress has been made towards completing the protocols for health gain promised in his Department's document "Agenda for Action 2".

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 14 July 1992.

Ophthalmic Treatment, Bangor

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his target date for bringing the percentage of patients treated at the ophthalmic treatment centre at Ysbyty-Gwynedd, Bangor who reside in the centre's host distict down to 10 per cent.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: No such target date has been set. In 1992-93 centrally funded capacity has been allocated on the basis of an assessment of waiting list problems, capitation share and demand. Decisions on how the initiative will be taken forward in 1993-94 will be made in due course.

Dentistry

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish, by health authority, those hospitals in Wales that provide 24-hour emergency dental treatment, indicating those in which facilities and staff are always available for carrying out extractions.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The information requested is not available centrally. The level of service provision is a matter for the local health authority to determine.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many salaried dentists are employed by each family health services authority in Wales; and what is the projected increase over the next 12 months.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: None at present. The Department has not made a projection of an increase over the next 12 months.

Burials

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will publish for each county in Wales, for each of the last 10 years, the number of persons buried in land that they had previously owned, or owned at the time of death;

(2) how many people were buried in Wales in land that they had owned at the time of their death, in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: This information is not held centrally.

Schools Inspectorate

Mr. Richards: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he is yet in a position to announce the appointment of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector for Wales, the timetable for the establishment of his office and the arrangements for the inspection of schools by registered inspectors.

Mr. David Hunt: I have given detailed consideration to all the issues and, most importantly, those of particular relevance to Wales. This includes the need to establish a body of inspectors in Wales able to inspect the significant number of schools which teach entirely or partly through the medium of Welsh and whether all schools have Welsh included in the national curriculum, as well as having features in the curriculum reflecting Welsh tradition and culture.

I am delighted to announce that, on my recommendation, Her Majesty the Queen by Order in Council has appointed Mr. Roy L. James as Her Majesty's chief inspector of schools in Wales. Mr. James's appointment will be initially for three years.

I do not want to delay implementation of the important objectives of our charter for parents in Wales and I have concluded that the office of HMCI Wales should commence in September 1992. The arrangements for inspections of secondary schools will start in September 1993 and in primary and special schools the following September.

I have decided that schools in Wales should be inspected by registered inspectors every five years. This will mean a much more regular inspection with a published report than is the practice at present. With the time that will be needed to effect the inspection, the issue of an action plan and the necessary follow-up action, I believe that the period between inspections on a five-year cycle is reasonable, bearing in mind also the financial implications for local authorities of the new arrangements. It will provide the parents of most children with a detailed report during their child's time at primary or secondary school. Nevertheless, the frequency of inspections will be kept under review.

TRANSPORT

Smoke Hoods

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will encourage operators of British registered passenger transport aircraft to provide smoke hoods which meet the EUROCAE ED-65 specification on their aircraft for passengers in circumstances of aviation fire.

Mr. Norris: The Civil Aviation Authority has responsibility for civil aviation safety in the United Kingdom. It is for the authority to determine the requirements for passenger safety equipment. I shall bring the hon. Member's question to the attention of the authority and ask it to write to him direct to explain its position regarding the EUROCAE standard for passenger smoke hoods.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now exercise his powers to require the Civil Aviation Authority to obtain the addition to the section 1.2 of chapter 1 of annex 18 of the principal agreement covering the carriage of dangerous goods, and the provisions of that agreement incorporated in the International Civil Aviation Organisation technical instructions for the safe carriage of dangerous goods by air to enable passengers to carry on board passenger transport aircraft breathing-gas-charged smoke hoods.

Mr. Norris: The Civil Aviation Authority has the responsibility for civil aviation safety in the United Kingdom. The regulations relating to the carriage of dangerous goods are complex and subject to international agreement. I shall draw the hon. Member's question to the attention of the CAA and ask it to write to him to explain the various technical and international aspects which must be considered.

Unadopted Roads

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek to amend relevant legislation so as to compel local highway authorities to adopt and maintain currently unadopted roads which provide sole access to adopted public roads.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have no plans to do so. Local highway authorities' discretion enables all relevant considerations to be taken into account in decisions on adoption of private streets. A highway authority may, by virtue of section 236 of the Highways Act 1980, contribute towards the costs of a private street works scheme it has resolved to carry out if it considers that the wider public benefit warrants it.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek to amend relevant legislation so as to compel local authorities to adopt and maintain currently unadopted roads before granting planning permission for the construction of new roads to which the unadopted roads in question will provide the only access.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: No. It is for the local planning authority, in considering whether to grant planning permission, to take account of whether access arrangements are acceptable. The question whether any unadopted road giving access to the development should become a publicly maintainable highway is for the highway authority to decide.

Aircraft Safety

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will clarify the responsibilities for safety regulations for United Kingdom registered passenger transport aviation of (a) the Civil Aviation Authority and (b) the joint airworthiness authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The responsibilities of the Civil Aviation Authority for the safety regulation of aircraft are set out in section 60 of the Civil Aviation Act 1982 and in the Air Navigation Order 1989—SI 1989/2004—as amended. The Joint Aviation Authorities—JAA—is a co-ordinating body which establishes common safety standards and arranges joint certification among its member states, which includes the United Kingdom. Its members are engaged in developing a common code of operating regulation. A number of JAA codes were made directly applicable in member states of the European Communities from 1 January 1992 by Council regulation (EEC) No. 3922/91.

Footpaths

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice he gives to local authorities about the impermeability of footpaths; and what standards are laid down.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The Department has not given any advice. Most of the various forms of footpath construction currently in use are impermeable to a large extent. There are no departmental or national standards covering this requirement.

M25

Sir Michael Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to issue blight notices and pay compensation to property owners affected by his proposals to expand the M25 through the construction of feeder roads, before the completion of the public inquiries.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Those whose property would need to be acquired compulsorily for our proposals to improve M25 between junctions 12 and 15 may be eligible to serve blight notices now. Those who consider their homes would be seriously affected by the construction works or the use of the road in its widened form can also ask the Secretary of State to consider using his discretionary powers of acquisition.

London Buses

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to make propsals for the privatisation of London Buses.

Mr. Norris: I understand that London Transport is exploring the possibility of privatising the subsidiaries of London Buses Ltd. in advance of deregulation. This would require the Government's consent. I await a formal proposal from London Transport.

Lane Rental Contracts

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of (a) major and (b) all road maintenance contracts let so far in 1992 are covered by lane rental agreements.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Fifty-three motorway and trunk road major maintenance contracts valued at £500,000 or more have been awarded so far this year. Twenty-five of these were lane rental contracts. The value of lane rental contracts awarded was £60·3 million, 68 per cent. of the total. Lane rental is rarely used other than for major maintenance.

Driving Tests

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how much has been paid by the Driving Standards Agency since July 1991 to driving examiners in bonus payments linked to the length of waiting times for driving tests and to the number of tests cancelled by the agency;

(2) how much was paid in compensation to members of the public who suffered loss when their driving tests were cancelled (a) between July 1990 and June 1991 and (b) between July 1991 and June 1992.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I have asked the chief executive of the Driving Standards Agency to reply to the hon. Member direct.

Rail Passengers (Compensation)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many British Rail InterCity passengers have received compensation since July 1991 because their trains were delayed; and how much compensation in total has been paid to those passengers.

Mr. Freeman: Between July 1991 and June 1992, InterCity paid a total of £425,000 in compensation to passengers for train delays and cancellations. InterCity does not keep a record of the number of individual passengers who receive compensation.

Rail Passengers (Compensation)

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport since July 1991 how many BR season ticket holders (a) have had the validity of their season tickets extended for days when there is no effective service and (b) have been offered discounts on the renewal of their season tickets to compensate them for poor service in the previous year.

Mr. Freeman: BR does not hold information centrally on the number of season tickets extended for days when there was no effective service: decisions on extending season tickets are delegated to route managers. The first discounts on season ticket renewals on routes which fail to meet their charter standards by more than a small margin are not due to be given until January 1993.

Itchen Navigation

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what action has he taken to ensure that the rights of public access and passage along the Itchen navigation and its towpaths between Winchester and Shawford are protected during works associated with the construction of the M3, Bar End-Compton; on what dates relevant legal notices were published; and if he will place copies of the notices, and responses, in the Library;

(2) what public rights of access and passage exist along the Itchen navigation and its towpaths on the section between Winchester and Shawford.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: I am advised that the Itchen navigation is in law a navigable waterway, but that the extent of rights of access and passage along it and its towpaths is not clear.

Much of the Itchen navigation has become silted up so that navigation is not practicable. Nevertheless, following public inquiries in 1985 and 1987-88, my Department has taken statutory powers to divert the Itchen navigation and has undertaken to carry out the diversion works, which will make it navigable, as part of any future restoration of the navigation as a whole. Pending such restoration, a 1·8 m culvert is being provided under the M3 and the diverted B3335 to maintain the flow of water along the existing watercourse in accordance with the decision letter of 20 February 1990. I am not aware of any requirement to publish legal notices in connection with this work.

I am satisfied that the work currently being carried out together with the powers taken to divert the navigation and the undertakings that have been given adequately protect the public rights.

Blackburn-Hellifield Rail Line

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with British Rail about the restoration of services on the Blackburn to Hellifield railway line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: None. The level of service on the line is a matter for British Rail. I understand that at present a montly summer Sunday service operates over the line and on to Carlisle. There is also a summer Saturday service from Blackburn as far as Clitheroe.

Women's Transport Needs

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the amount of Government expenditure granted to women's transport needs in (a) percentage and (b) real terms since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: Transport expenditure for which my Department is responsible for transport for all categories of person. It does not distinguish between the needs of men and women.

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what support is open to local authorities from his Department in the form of grants and other aid to enable them to implement improvements to public transport for women's needs.

Mr. Freeman: It is for local authorities to decide their own policies on the level of public transport they should support, taking account of local needs and to set budgets accordingly. Funds made available by my Department are not targeted at the needs of specific groups. Women are more frequent users of buses than men and are likely to benefit particularly from improvements to bus services.

BA Aircraft Accident, Sumburgh

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to publish the full report of his Department's air accident investigation unit on the accident involving a British Airways advanced turbo-prop aircraft at Sumburgh, Shetland, on 23 December 1991.

Mr. Norris: The air accident investigation branch report on its formal investigation into the accident involving British Airways advanced turbo-prop aircraft at Sumburgh on 23 December 1991 is expected to be published in November this year.

Air Accidents

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list each air accident since 1 January 1986, in respect of which there has been a full investigation report by his Department; and if he will list the date of the accident and the date of the report's publication in each case.

Mr. Norris: The air accident investigation branch of the Department of Transport has supplied the following list of air accidents since 1 January 1986 where a full investigation has been or is being carried out, with details of the reports.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will report upon the results of the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Authority in conjunction with the Metropolitan and City of London police forces' campaign against vehicle excise duty evasion in London in June.

Mr. Norris: As a result of the June 1992 London campaign against evasion of vehicle excise duty, 2,481 reports of VED offences have been received so far—2,140 from the Metropolitan police and 341 from the City of London police. These cases are being investigated and where evasion is clear, prosecution will follow.

Taxis

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will publish the report of the working party on the safety of users of taxis and minicabs in London.

Mr. Norris: The report has been published today and copies have been placed in the Library. Any interested party may obtain a copy of the report from the Department of Transport.

Vehicle Inspectorate

Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Vehicle Inspectorate executive agency annual report for 1991-92 will be published.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: The annual report has been published today. Copies are being placed in the House Library.

Register of Small Ships

Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes he proposes to make to the arrangements for maintaining the register of small ships.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle: Following a competitive market testing exercise, I have made the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency responsible for administering the register, previously operated by the Royal Yachting Association. The financial provision for the service now needs to be transferred from the Department's class VII vote 2 to the DVLA vote—class VII, vote 4. Parliamentary approval of this new expenditure will be sought in a supplementary estimate for the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency vote—class VII, vote 4. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £55,000 will be met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund.

A2 (Noise)

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department will provide the decibel counts on the A2 motor road as it passes the Painter's Ash school and other points in the borough of Gravesham promised following the visit of the Minister of Public Transport in December 1991.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 10 July 1992]: An assessment of the current noise environment in the vicinity of the A2 will be made as part of the noise studies for the channel tunnel rail link in connection with the environmental impact assessment for the link. An assessment may also be required in order to calculate additional noise caused by the rail link for the purposes of implementing the proposed regulations on noise insulation grant based on the Mitchell committee's recommendations. I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as noise information becomes available.

Public Transport (Access)

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what plans he has to improve safety and access to public transport for women, children and the disabled;

(2) what is his Department's role in encouraging improvements in public transport for women.

Mr. Freeman: My Department has a long-standing commitment to improve safety and access to public transport for people with mobility problems, including women, children and people with disabilities. We work closely with vehicle designers and manufacturers, public transport operators, local authorities and people with mobility problems as consumers, to promote and encourage greater recognition of their needs.

Women Passengers (Assaults)

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many assaults on women travelling on public transport were reported in each year since 1979 (a) in London and (b) in Britain as a whole.

Mr. Freeman: In 1990, there were 380 reported assaults on women in London on the rail network and 655 reported for Great Britain as a whole. The corresponding figures for 1991 are 556 and 993 respectively. These figures comprise all violent and sexual offences, including common assault and battery, committed against women and include a small number of assaults on female police and staff. Corresponding figures for earlier years and other modes of public transport are not available.

Deregulation

Mr. Sproat: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what visits he has made to his EC counterparts in each member state to discuss deregulation matters since 18 April; what agreements came out of such meetings; and what plans he has for making further progress in deregulation matters during the United Kingdom's presidency of the EC.

Mr. MacGregor: Since my appointment as Secretary of State for Transport I have met several of my EC counterparts for discussions on a wide range of issues, and I have invited them all to the informal Transport Council I am holding on 16 and 17 July.

On 23 June, I attended a meeting of the Transport Council in Luxembourg which agreed the third EC aviation liberalisation package, lifting a wide range of restrictions governing air services within the Community from 1 January 1993. Agreements were also reached on the liberalisation of shipping cabotage and road passenger cabotage.

It will be a priority of the United Kingdom presidency of the EC to ensure that further progress is made towards the creation of a single transport market within the Community, based on the principles of competition and liberalisation. In particular, I shall be seeking an agreement on definitive arrangements for road haulage cabotage, and further progress on slot allocation at airports and state aids.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Sunday Trading

Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy on Sunday trading following (a) the outcome of the Kirklees case and (b) the delivery of the Advocate-General's opinion in the case before the European Court of Justice.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It remains our aim to bring forward proposals for reform of the law on Sunday trading in England and Wales once the question of compatibility with the treaty of Rome has been clarified; and we therefore continue to await judgment in relevant cases by the European Court of Justice, which is expected this autumn. This policy is affected neither by the Kirklees judgment, because that determined only the law on interim injunctions, nor by the Advocate General's delivery on 8 July of his opinion to the ECJ, because it formed only part of the Court's deliberations.

Asylum

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) pursuant to his answer of 4 June Official Report, column 621, and the stated intention of Her Majesty's Government to ratify the convention determining the states responsible for examining applications for asylum lodged in one of the member states of the European Community signed in Dublin on 15 June 1990, what steps have been taken to ensure that there are effective judicial remedies with suspensive effect in all member states of the European Community for asylum seekers who may be returned from one member state to another member state under this convention; and if he will make a statement on the results of those steps;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 4 June, Official Report, column 621, what steps Her Majesty's Government have taken to satisfy itself that there is access to legal advice at all stages of the determination procedure for asylum seekers in all EC member states and that such legal advice is publicly funded wherever the asylum seeker is indigent.

Mr. Charles Wardle: None. Those are matters which are the responsibility of individual member states according to their national laws and procedures, but some of these matters will no doubt be considered in the future work programme of Immigration Ministers of the Twelve.

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 4 June, Official Report, column 621, if he will specify in respect of which matters in the work programme adopted by the EC ministers concerned with immigration in December 1991 progress has been made under the Portuguese presidency; and what specific progress has been made.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Progress was made under the Portuguese presidency on a number of matters identified in the work progamme adopted by EC Ministers concerned with immigration in December 1991, including policy on family reunification; agreed arrangements for transit through member states of persons removed or deported; work on the common interpretation of the concepts used in the Dublin convention, and on extension of the system of the convention to third countries by means of a parallel convention; and the definition, for the purposes of considering asylum applications, of "first host country". Further work in all of these areas remains to be carried forward under the United Kingdom presidency.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the achievements of his Department and his policies in helping small businesses over the last 12 months relative to the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Home Office continues to place a high priority on helping small firms to obtain business from the various divisions of the Department by improving access and the information necessary to ensure they have opportunities to submit competitive bids.

We are currently updating our booklet "Selling to the Home Office" which summarises our purchasing needs and lists contact points for potential suppliers. This booklet receives wide circulation through our attendance at "Meet the Buyer" functions, requests from manufacturers' associations and local councils', development initiatives for businesses in their areas.

Home Office performance indicators do not differentiate between the size of firms to which contracts are awarded and we cannot, therefore, provide statistical information about the volume of business we place with small firms.

Prisoners (Personal Property)

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are taken to secure the personal belongings of prisoners inside prison.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Personal belongings authorised to be retained in a prisoner's own possession remain that prisoner's responsibility. Other property may be taken into store at a prison and will be held under suitably secure conditions. Under arrangements introduced in 1990, prisoner's property is stored and transported, where possible, in sealed bags to prevent accidental loss or theft.

EFTA Nationals

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what transitional provisions will be made in respect of nationals of European free trade area countries who are present in the United Kingdom and wish to remain here pending the coming into force on 1 January 1993 of the agreement on the European economic area signed on 2 May.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The agreement has yet to be ratified and it is not yet certain that it will come into effect on 1 January 1993. A decision on any necessary transitional arrangements will be taken nearer the time.

Data Protection

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what representations he has received from charities about the effect of the EC data protection directive on their fund-raising activities;

(2) what is his assessment of the effects of the EC data protection directive, if implemented; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what representations he has received from direct mail organisations about the effect of the EC data protection directive on their business;

(4) what representations he has received concerning the EC data protection directive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government have received a substantial number of representations about the likely effects of the draft data protection directive, SYN 287. Many have come from charities and direct mail organisations. The Government consider that the draft, if implemented in its present form, would place considerable burdens on many data users, and would curtail some legitimate and beneficial areas of activity altogether. The Government are seeking to modify those provisions in the draft directive which go beyond the European convention on data protection, which is the basis of United Kingdom law, and which the Government believe strikes the right balance between the interests of data users and data subects. The Government await the Commission's redraft of the directive, which is being drawn up in the light of the views of the official working group in Brussels, the European Parliament, the data protection registrars or commissioners of the Community countries and data users groups.

Prisoners (Hospitalisation)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what procedure is followed by his Department when a prison inmate requires urgent hospital or medical treatment with a trust hospital and the inmate had no permanent abode prior to being sent to prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: When a prisoner needs to be taken for treatment to an outside NHS hospital, arrangements are made by the prison doctor. The costs of such treatment, whether provided by an NHS trust hospital or by a hospital which continues to be directly managed, fall ordinarily to the prisoner's district health authority of origin. Where this cannot be determined, they fall to the district in which the offence or alleged offence was committed.

Tyre Treads

Mr. Mills: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the availability to police forces of tyre tread depth gauges of a suitable standard to be accepted as evidence by the courts in cases of prosecution for illegal tyres.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The provision of equipment for use by police forces is a matter for chief constables. The Association of Chief Police Officers sent information on suitable gauges to each chief constable in September 1991.

Stolen Cars

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of stolen cars in (a) the Northumberland police area and (b) the Durham area in 1991 that were (i) recovered undamaged, (ii) recovered damaged and (iii) not recovered.

Mr. Jack: The available information held centrally shows that, of 30,356 recorded offences of theft of a vehicle in the Northumbria police force area in 1991, 19,275 vehicles were recovered. The corresponding figures for the Durham police force area were 8,640 and 4,383 respectively. Information is not collected centrally on whether or not the recovered vehicles were damaged.

Duty Psychiatrist Schemes

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the role of duty psychiatric rota schemes for defendents with mental health problems; and when the relevant legislation is due to come into force;

(2) how many duty psychiatric rota scheme applications have been received by his Department to date; how many have been approved; how much of his Department's allocation is committed to diversion schemes in the current financial year; and how many courts will have the benefit of new schemes by 1 October;

(3) what sum he has allocated for expenditure on duty psychiatric rota schemes in magistrates courts in England and Wales after April;

(4) what efforts his Department has made to publicise the availability of moneys from duty psychiatric rota schemes to courts and others who may wish to apply for grants to finance such schemes.

Mr. Jack: Duty psychiatrist schemes are local initiatives which entail a psychiatrist attending a magistrates court, on call or on a regular sessional basis depending on demand, to examine defendants thought to have some mental disorder and to advise the court on a suitable outcome. Typically, this may involve discontinuing proceedings or diversion to the health or social services. In addition, such schemes help to reduce the need for lengthy remands in custody to await psychiatric assessment. Implementation of duty psychiatrist schemes is not dependent on new legislation.

A recent survey of magistrates courts and the probation service identified 19 schemes in operation. To facilitate the development of further schemes throughout England and Wales, funding of £4 million over a three-year period will be available. Of this, £500,000 has been allocated for expenditure in the current financial year.

We are currently discussing the arrangements for administering these payments with the Department of Health. As soon as these have been decided, we will publicly invite properly costed bids for a share of this funding.

This initiative is one of several in which the Home Office and the Department of Health are involved to promote the diversion of mentally disordered offenders from the criminal justice system.

Neighbourhood Watch

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reductions in levels of recorded crime have been achieved by the introduction of neighbourhood watch schemes.

Mr. Jack: There are many factors that can have a bearing on changes in the level of recorded crime. However, in one carefully researched area in Kirkholt, Greater Manchester, it was demonstrated that neighbourhood watch was a major contributory factor in reducing the number of burglaries by 75 per cent. Similarly, in Wythenshawe, Manchester, following the introduction of neighbourhood watch on a large council estate the number of burglaries reduced by 25 per cent. and this fall has since been maintained. Studies elsewhere have shown that neighbourhood watch schemes have contributed to a reduction in crime and fear of crime. Data from the British crime survey have also shown that members of neighbourhood watch schemes are more likely than others to take crime prevention measures.

Mr. Andrew Ohene

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list the prisons, with dates, which Mr. Andrew Ohene had been in during the course of his sentence; and if he will make a statement on the reasons for the transfers;

(2) what were the circumstances surrounding the death of Andrew Ohene, prison number RA0954, at Swaleside prison, Kent on 13 June;

(3) for what reason Mr. Andrew Ohene was in isolation in Swaleside prison immediately before his death;

(4) how many times Mr. Andrew Ohene complained about his conditions and treatment; and if he will give dates and brief details about the complaints and what was done about them;

(5) what requests or complaints Mr. Andrew Ohene made during the 48 hours prior to his death in Swaleside prison, and to whom; and if he was under unimpeded observation during this time.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The circumstances of this very sad death will be fully and openly investigated at the coroner's inquest. It would not be right for me to comment on matters which may be relevant to the cause of death until the jury has reached its verdict.

Racial Discrimination, Swaleside

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints of racial discrimination there have been at Swaleside; and what the conclusions of the resulting inquiries were.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Since records began in 1991, there has been one complaint from a prisoner alleging racial discrimination at Swaleside prison. This complaint was investigated but not substantiated.

Explosives

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will refer to the explosives inspectorate of the Health and Safety Executive the question of the storing, security and registration of supplies of ammonium nitrate and associated substances suitable for the making of explosives.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I understand that ammonium nitrate is classified, in line with United Nations recommendations, as an oxidising substance rather than as an explosive. It is in widespread use in agriculture, and the Health and Safety Executive has published guidance on its safe storage. I do not believe that further controls would be workable. Accordingly, I have no plans to refer the matter to the explosives inspectorate.

Prisoners

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are taken to ensure that prisoners who make complaints to their Members of Parliament are not intimidated by prison staff or prison authorities.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No staff should intimidate prisoners for this or any other reason. Any prisoners who consider they are being intimidated can use the prison service requests and complaints system to approach the governor, area manager, chairman of the board of visitors, or a range of individuals and bodies outside the prison service.

Prisoners, Swaleside

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many deaths there have been in custody at Swaleside prison during the last five years; and what was the ethnicity of the prisoners.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Swaleside prison opened in July 1988. Since then two prisoners have died at Swaleside prison. Both were black. One was of Afro-Caribbean origin and one was of African origin.

Public Interest Immunity Certificates

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on public interest immunity certificates and state (a) who issues them, (b) who authorises them, (c) their frequency of use, (d) the number of trials in which they have been used and (e) what authority drew up the rules relating to them; and what these rules are.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the former Home Secretary, my right hon. and learned Friend the Lord Waddington, to a question from the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 1 November 1990, at column 746.

Prison Escapes

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the numbers of those prisoners who escaped from detention and who have not been recaptured in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The table gives the available information, detailing the numbers of prisoners who have escaped from penal establishments, or while being escorted outside penal establishments, and the numbers of escaped prisoners who have been recaptured or who have surrendered. The information is available from 20 June 1988, when a new centralised system for recording incident details was introduced.

	Escapers from penal establish-ments	Escapers from escort	Recaptured/ surrendered prisoners
20 June 1988 to 31 December 1988	110	55	43
1 January 1989 to 31 December 1989	179	112	115
1 January 1990 to 31 December 1990	197	119	142
1 January 1991 to 31 December 1991	311	145	251
1 January 1992 to 11 July 1992	140	63	109

Primates

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will withdraw or amend licences to supply primates for United Kingdom laboratories to prevent the supply of wild-caught primates and those captive-bred in their country of origin.

Mr. Charles Wardle: While the purpose-breeding of primates in this country for use in research meets some of the demand for the supply of such animals, the numbers and species bred does not meet all the demand. Where the use of primates in research is justified under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, there may be no alternative to the use of wild-caught primates or those captive-bred abroad. Inspectors do, however, encourage the use of primates purpose-bred in this country where such animals are available.

We have no plans to withdraw or amend the certificates of designation of breeding and supplying establishments issued under section 7 of the 1986 Act to prevent the supply of wild-caught primates or those captive-bred abroad.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will initiate a review of the care and use of primates in research in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The use of primates in research is strictly controlled and special justification is required under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 before the use of primates in research is allowed. The special considerations applying to the housing and care of laboratory primates are recognised in the Home Office code of practice.

The Home Office is carrying out a survey of large non-human primates holding facilities this year. One of the main aims of this special survey will be to examine the progress made in improving holding facilities since an earlier review carried out in 1988.

I understand that the Animal Procedures Committee intends undertaking a review of laboratory primates later this year as part of its continuing interest in this area. The Government look forward to receiving the conclusions of this review in due course.

Passport Applications

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy for passport application forms to be made available at sub-post offices.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This has been passed to the chief executive of the Passport Agency who will reply shortly. A copy of his reply will be placed in the Library.

Firearms

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to implement the European Community directive on the control of the acquisition and possession of weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have today laid before Parliament draft regulations under the European Communities Act 1972. These regulations will, if approved, transpose the directive into law in Great Britain. Domestic controls on firearms will remain substantially unchanged. However the private possession of firearms disguised as other objects will be lawful only for museums, collectors and others duly authorised. We intend to make arrangements for ex-gratia payments to people who as a result of these regulations surrender such firearms before 1 January 1993 which were lawfully held by them on or before 16 July 1992. Further details of these arangements will be announced in the autumn.

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will lay before Parliament the third annual report of the Firearms Consultative Committee.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have placed a copy of the annual report of the Firearms Consultative Committee in the Library of both Houses today.

Police Responsibilities and Rewards

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement about financial provision for the inquiry on police responsibilities and rewards.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: On 20 May 1992 I announced my intention to set up an inquiry to look at police responsibilities and rewards, reporting to me by the end of May 1993. Parliamentary approval for this new service will be sought in a winter supplementary estimate for the Home Office administration, immigration and police support services, England and Wales vote—class IX, vote 3. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £334,000 will be met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund.

Young Offenders

Sir John Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements are proposed for the committal of young persons sentenced to periods of detention in young offender institutions following the implementation of the Criminal Justice Act 1991.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Criminal Justice Act 1991, which comes into effect on 1 October, changes sentencing arrangements for those under 18 years of age and replaces the juvenile court by a new youth court to deal with all young persons up to the age of 17.

These changes will be reflected in the way in which the prison service manages the sentenced young offender population. Two new age bands will be introduced of 15 to 17 years for juveniles, as opposed to 14 to 16 years at present, and 18 to 20 years for young adults.

The proposed arrangements for the committal of male young offenders sentenced to periods of detention in a young offender institution will be as follows. Juveniles will in future be taken direct from the court of sentence to one of six designated juvenile institutions at Deerbolt, north Yorkshire, Feltham in London, Guys Marsh, Dorset, Onley, Warwickshire, Werrington, Staffordshire, and Whetherby, west Yorkshire. A further young offender institution, Thorn Cross near Warrington in Cheshire, will also hold juveniles who are considered suitable to be housed in open conditions.

Further consultation will now take place with other criminal justice agencies in respect of the catchment areas each establishment will serve. All young adults will be committed to an allocation unit in the nearest remand centre or local prison serving the court. Those serving short sentences, who are currently subject to separate direct committal arrangements, will be allocated to a young offender institution at the earliest opportunity. Closeness to home will be an important consideration in the allocation decision.

It is not proposed to make any changes to the committal arrangements for young women who will be affected by the new provisions. They will continue to be held in the most appropriate female establishment closest to their homes.

Unconvicted Prisoners

Sir John Wheeler (Westminster North): To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, what progress has been made in developing the separate statement of principle for unconvicted prisoners, referred to in paragraph 7.5 of the White Paper "Custody, Care and Justice."

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The prison service has adopted a statement in the following terms:

"Unconvicted prisoners are presumed to be innocent. Subject to the duty to hold them and deliver them to court securely and to the need to maintain order in establishments, they will be treated acordingly and, in particular, will be allowed all reasonable facilities to—seek release on bail preserve their accommodation and employment prepare for trial

maintain contact with relatives and friends pursue legitimate business and social interests obtain help with personal problems

They will receive health care appropriate to their needs. They will have opportunities for education, religious observance, exercise and recreation and, where possible, for training and work."

The statement will be included in the material issued for the information of new unconvicted prisoners and will feature in the training material of new prison officers.

The statement of the task of the prison service set out in the "Prison Service Management Manual" and guidance in that manual for preparation of governors' contracts with their area managers have been expanded to reflect the separate status of unconvicted prisoners and the revised guidance will be issued shortly.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Auditing

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many times in 1989, 1990 and 1991 company auditors filed a statement in respect of sections 390(2)a and (2)b of the Companies Act 1985.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The number of notices of auditors' resignations received by the registrars of companies for England and Wales and for Scotland was as follows:

Year	Number of notices
1989	9,452
1990	12,494
1991	15,787

Until 31 March 1990 notices were sent in accordance with section 390(3) of the Companies Act 1985, as originally enacted. Subsequently notices were sent in accordance with section 392(3) of the Companies Act 1985, as substituted by the Companies Act 1989.

Air Pollution

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to provide specialist assistance to small businesses suffering economic hardship arising from the new requirements to comply with the part I air pollution process controls under the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

Mr. Leigh: In framing air pollution controls under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, local authorities are, however, required to apply the principles of best available techniques not entailing excessive costs which requires companies to use the best available techniques provided these do not entail excessive costs. Individual authorisations are a matter for the companies and local authorities concerned. My Department has been involved in discussions over the guidelines which inform local authorities.

My Department operates a number of schemes of assistance and provides information and advice to help large and small firms to develop and adopt the technologies and practices which will enable them to remain competitive in the face of rising environmental standards. In particular, the Department's environmental inquiry point offers free advice on a range of environmental issues; and it is open to small firms to use the consultancy initiatives to obtain assisted consultancy help on specific environmental problems. I have also recently announced that my Department will be piloting "one-stop shops" to provide small firms with initial guidance on all matters relevant to their competitive position, including environmental matters.

Share Option Schemes

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade whether he proposes to review the extent and nature of executive share option schemes; and what discussions he has had with the Association of British Insurers about its guidelines for the exercise of executive share options.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I am aware of the association's guidelines and would support it in urging companies to link share options to sustained underlying growth of the company. This does not require any change to the Companies Act provisions affecting those participating in share option schemes.

Consulting Grants

Mr. Cousins: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consulting grants are available through the enterprise initiative; and if he will publish a table showing the number of grants taken up, and their cost in each standard region during the last three financial years.

Mr. Leigh: Under the enterprise initiative consultancy help scheme, the DTI pays up to two thirds of the cost of consultancy projects, for small and medium-sized enterprises, in the following areas: business planning, design, financial and management information systems, manufacturing and services systems, marketing and quality. Details of the numbers of assisted projects in each region during the last three financial years, and the associated financial contribution from DTI, are as follows:

Enterprise initiative consultancy scheme: Expenditure by region

Region	Financial year 1989-90		Financial year 1990-91		Financial year 1991-92

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Wells: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what was the cost of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the Commonwealth Development Corporation.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The cost to the Monopolies and Mergers commission of carrying out the inquiry into the Commonwealth Development Corporation is estimated at £570,000.

Breathing Equipment

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps his Department will be taking to encourage British manufacturers to produce in quantity breathing-gas-based passenger protective breathing equipment meeting the EUROCAE ED-65 specification published on 1 April 1991, for placement by operators of British-registered passenger transport aircraft.

Mr. Sainsbury: None. This is a matter for the commercial judgment of the companies concerned.

Small Businesses

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the achievements of his Department and his policies in helping small businesses over the last 12 months relative to the previous 12 months; and if he will publish the performance indicators by which his Department monitors those achievements and the statistical results of such monitoring.

Mr. Leigh: The Government continue to help small businesses, through improvements to the business climate, through deregulation and through specific programmes of support and assistance.

Measures operated by my Department to assist small businesses include:

The enterprise initiative consultancy help scheme. In the year ended March 1992, 23,342 applications were received and 17,996 were approved.

The small firms merit award for research and technology (SMART) scheme. Last year 180 grants, the maximum number on offer, were made.

Support for products under research (SPUR) which helps small firms develop new products and processes. In the first 12 months of the scheme, to February 1992, 100 grants were offered worth over £9 million.

For the future, I intend to establish a network of first stop shops to act as a central signposting and referral service for small firms to all the business support measures available in an area from all sources. As a first step, 10 to 15 pilot projects will be established as quickly as possible.

The loan guarantee scheme enhances smaller firms access to finance. In the 12 months to 30 May 1992, 2,916 loans were guaranteed to a value of £69 million.

A guide to sources of venture capital under £250,000 was published. This comprises a booklet which aims to take some of the mystery out of venture capital and a directory which lists more than 200 organisations throughout the country which offer smaller amounts of venture capital.

Informal investment demonstration projects have been established by five training and enterprise councils in partnership with other local organisations. They help bring together potential investors and small businesses seeking investment. The projects, which were established with pump-priming money from the Employment Department, were established in January 1992 and will run for two years.

New measures were announced at the time of the 1992 Budget to help small firms. These include new Government contracting terms requiring those companies awarded Government contracts to pay their subcontractors promptly; consideration of changes to company reporting requirements to oblige large companies to state their payment terms and performance in annual reports and accounts; improvements to court procedures for debt recovery and financial assistance for trade associations to develop new prompt payment initiatives.
